THE power of what we call little things cannot be estimated: small beginnings lead to great endings. A citizen of Genoa, walking along the shore of the Mediterranean Sea, picks up a piece of wood thrown on the beach by the waves: the result is the discovery of a new world. A solitary monk reads the Bible in his cell: Papal power is shaken to its centre, and the light of Protestantism dawns on darkened Europe. A scholar, sitting in his garden, hears an apple fall: that simple incident works a revolution in science and philosophy. A letter sent to an actress ten years ago was the sowing of a seed which has taken root, sprung up, and produced a plentiful harvest in the salvation and guidance of many who live their lives in the glare of the footlights. The Theatrical Mission associated with the names of Mr. and Mrs. COURTHOPE TODD has already done much good, and promises to do much more. It is Christ-like in its nature, for it seeks to help a class almost entirely neglected by evangelistic agencies. Something of its history, and of that of its Director, will be given in this brief sketch. God trains his workers for the work they have to do. When but a child of six, Mr. Todd delighted to spell out the notices in the theatrical columns of the newspapers, and to acquaint himself with plays and players, contrary to the wishes of his worthy parents. His knowledge of the drama of the day soon became full and accurate. He was looked upon as an authority by his friends, who consulted him when they wished to see superior acting. This precocity, and the tastes it revealed, might have led to a life of worldliness and sinful folly, had not God in his saving grace turned the youth's energies into a new channel, and ultimately made his special information a means of blessing to thousands of theatrical employés. He was converted, and decided to give himself to the ministry. He entered St. John's College, Highbury, and passed with credit through three years of the prescribed curriculum. At this stage in his studies, he felt called to dedicate himself to the salvation of the young ladies and children connected with the theatre. He saw that they were little cared for, and his heart yearned over them in their loneliness and temptations. There were many thousands of persons in London connected with the theatrical profession, and these covered all ages, from infants in arms to grey-headed men and women. He resolved, with God's help, to reach at least a part of that vast army of his fellow immortals.

He began in a small way by writing kind letters to some of its members, but the work rapidly grew to larger dimensions. Rooms were opened in which those who lived in the suburbs could rest between rehearsal and performance; assistants rallied round him; tokens of Divine blessing appeared; and in a short time it was made manifest that what had been tried as an experiment was a fully-valued necessity. The supreme object of the Mission was to bring theatrical employés to a saving knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ. It encouraged with Christian counsel and sympathy those who strove to walk uprightly. It supplied the sick with needed comforts, and found employment for those who could not conscientiously remain on the stage. There was ample room for such an addition to our philanthropic agencies; so it prospered.

In a few years the old premises failed to accommodate those who sought to avail themselves of the advantages offered. A larger building was required, but where was it to be got? Mr. Todd visited shops and warehouses, in search of a suitable place, but could not find any. He carried his difficulty to God in prayer, and a way was opened up for him. Mr. Spencer Chadwick had a vacant plot of ground, which was originally intended for a secular theatrical club. Mr. Todd decided to occupy it in his Master's service. Site and building would cost £4500. So large a sum of money was hard to raise, but he put his trust in God. In less than six weeks over £500 reached him, without printed appeal or published notice of any kind. So he decided to build without delay.

The foundation stones of the Theatrical Institute, now known as Macready House, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, W.C., were laid on May 16, 1885, by the Countess of Aberdeen, the Lady Mayoress, Mrs. Bond Cabbell, and Mrs. Horace B. Marshall; six months later it was formally opened. It is admirably adapted to its purposes. It furnishes a home, a social club, and a play-room for children, with restaurants on each floor where reasonable and wholesome food can be obtained. Education, rest, and religious instruction are provided within its walls. It has a set of rooms for the use of those who, having given up the theatre, are fitting themselves for other careers; some go to the East-end as nurses, and some become Bible-readers. It has pretty dormitories for the reception of country girls drawn to London by the attractive advertisements of theatrical agents. It has a large room, furnished with little tables, easy-chairs, books, and magazines, in which young ladies over fifteen enjoy rest and healthful conversation. Mrs. Courthope Todd knows, and has a friendly greeting for, each visitor. Her motherly kindness makes them all feel at home.

The Institute has also a lads' hall in the basement, fitted up with a gymnasium where the youthful actors and choristers have a merry time with swings and rope-ladders. The hours they spend there are bright with sunshine; and outside of these walls they do not know many such hours. The tiny maidens of the theatre have a corner of the House to themselves. It is appropriately called "The Nest." There are to be found the baby who lisps "My Sweetheart," and the child of ten who plays on the stage the part of "the principal boy." They are surrounded with sweet influences which should shield them from the bad habits into which some of their companions so easily glide. They all look forward to their Tuesday "happy gathering," as one of them has described the weekly service, which consists of cheerful singing, anecdotes, and a short address. It is a treat to see how eagerly they drink in the simple Gospel teaching. Many of them have given evidence of a real change of heart and life, and many more have got what must strengthen them in the temptations to which they are exposed.

In addition to the home comforts and influences supplied by the Institute, Mr. and Mrs. Todd arrange that each protégé of the Mission has a lady correspondent, who writes her a monthly letter of loving counsel. The members of the Institute, who number now some 6000, come to them with their trials and sorrows. They give the best advice, and often pray with them. A visitor is employed in going to the lodgings of the members, to hold personal conversation with them; and religious services are regularly conducted in the Institute. A Mission which does such good work deserves cordial support. Those who are unable to give money, but have some spare time, can render valuable aid by writing monthly letters. Eleven hundred ladies are engaged in this noble service, but more are needed, as the requests for letters exceed the supply of writers.

We have heard much about the cry of the outcast and the burdens of the poor, but we have not heard so much of the sobs of misery that come from the stage. Painted splendour often hides a sorrowful life; and the face set with smiles in the glare of the footlights is frequently the mask which conceals the sorrow of a breaking heart. A young actress writes to Mr. Todd: "Even while I am playing in grotesque male costume, and the audience is loudly applauding my every look and action, my poor sister, the only friend I have in the world, is dying; I cannot be with her to soothe her last moments, and yet I am obliged to look gay and animated." What a balm it is to such a sad mourner when a letter full of loving sympathy, to be followed by a visit from a true friend, reaches her! It is a ray of healing sunshine in the gloom of her soul distress.

The Theatrical Mission has carried salvation as well as comfort to many on the stage. Letters come from all parts of England testifying of blessing received through its agency, and telling of a noble fight for the truth as it is in Jesus. Take this one as a sample. A girl actress writes: "I find it very hard since I have been away on this tour, to think of my Saviour as I ought, but I go to Him and ask Him to teach me to love Him, though I can never give Him any return for all his goodness and loving-kindness. I will try all I possibly can to please my dear Saviour, by doing what I know to be right, and obeying Him in all things." And so the little seed, sown ten years ago, has grown into a goodly tree, under whose branches many young travellers along the hot and dusty highways of theatrical life find shelter and rest and joy.

VILLAGES IN SCOTLAND.—Mr. J. G. Govan (South Park, Hillhead, Glasgow) has recently established a Faith Mission to the villages of Scotland, in many of which, he says, there seems to be almost no spiritual life. In a little pamphlet on the subject, just issued, it is stated that workers, called "pilgrims," will be sent forth, two by two, or singly, to live among the people in villages that are spiritually destitute; and in each place it will be sought to leave, at the close of the special mission, Christians filled with the Holy Spirit, who will be able to carry on at least a weekly prayer and fellowship meeting on unsectarian lines.

JOE, DAN, AND DAVID.

At a mission which has been much blessed a few cases of conversion have taken place lately which may be interesting to the readers of The Christian as illustrating the power of Christ's love.

A man named Joe M—— and his wife were induced to come to the mission. After attending a few times, and being spoken to about their souls, the wife was brought to a knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus, but the man still held out, although it was evident that God's Spirit was striving with him. After coming a few more nights he at last gave in. The next thing was to get a brother and his wife to come. A simple, but faithful and believing, prayer went up often at the prayer-meetings that God would "save my brother Dan."

Dan at last made his appearance, a big, strong man who, though saying we were in the right, had many arguments and reasons for not deciding for Christ. He, however, had not been many times before his hard heart was broken, and he became another trophy for Jesus. Then his wife came to an open-air meeting, held in the summer, and adjourned to the Mission Chapel prayer-meeting afterwards, where the Lord saved her. Now Joe and Dan set to work in earnest for Jesus.

There was still another brother David, and his wife. Owing to family differences, the two brothers had not spoken to David for years, and would pass one another without taking notice. But the love of Christ was in their hearts now, and such prayers went up to God from Joe and Dan's earnest hearts, as "O Lord, ye've saved Joseph out of the pit, ye've saved Daniel out of the den, and now will you not forgive David's sin?" David was visited by some of the friends and induced to come to the meetings; and one morning his wife attended the Sunday 7.30 a.m. prayer-meeting, and went out trusting Jesus.

Later on, David came out from his seat one night, and went into the inquiry-room, amid many shouts of "Glory be to God!" Then Joe and Dan rose and went into the room after him, and the scene was very affecting. They said, "The devil parted us, but Christ has brought us together," and all three knelt and thanked God. When the three great strong men came out of the inquiry-room, tears ran down many cheeks for joy, and each one was eager to grasp hands with them. It was a night never to be forgotten, and we are glad to say that Joseph, Daniel, and David are all now working for the Lord, and praying that they may be bold soldiers for Him.

Many other relations of these men have been brought to Christ, and God is still wonderfully blessing us. Many other such cases might also be given. J. Porteous.

WHICH?

What is old age? A weary waste
Of faded hopes, of pleasures passed?
A fretful soul by cares encased,
Which mourns for life gone all too fast,
And dreads its death? Ah, this may be—
God keep it far from you and me.

What is old age? A happy calm,
Wherein life's storm is hushed to peace:
Where passions die, and where the balm
Of time hath caused old wounds to cease;
A peaceful pause ere heaven be?
God grant it thus to you and me.

A MINISTERIAL CONFERENCE.

The Editor of this journal has requested me to give further information in relation to a protracted devotional meeting of Congregational ministers to which I made the briefest reference in the second of the papers I wrote for the old year. A request from such a source has weight. Without it I could not have broken silence with respect to very hallowed memories, beyond that of a compressed reference, which was intended to serve as an intimation that the Spirit of all grace is still near to his waiting servants. It jars upon the nature to reveal times of unusually sacred feelings. There are solemn, and at the same time heavenly, crises of life which cannot be written about. Nevertheless we find, in that priceless letter of Christian courtesy which the Apostle Paul addressed to one of his converts, that he prays on behalf of Philemon concerning "the communication of his faith;" by which we may understand that the conveying of the knowledge of God's gifts, and his gracious dealing with souls, may supply that which a useful fellowship with man is in need of.

During the early summer of last year a deep sense of spiritual need, and a great craving for a new measure of Divine inworking, were simultaneously felt by a number of Congregational pastors. Congregationalism, as other systems, had not its old strength in advancing the Kingdom of Christ. Preaching was sorely hindered by a baseless, but deadening scepticism in congregations. Perils were assailing church members of a subtle and formidable nature. A ministry to meet these new forces of evil must, it was realised, be one of great spiritual power. But it was painfully apprehended that we ourselves were weak: that business too much secularised us: that we were in danger of forgetting the authority of the Apostolic example—"We will give ourselves continually to prayer and to the ministry of the word." It was felt also by many that we were not making full proof of our ministry if we merely assembled to make speeches about church principles. The people, whether we liked it or not, were judging church principles by their fruits, and finding no one religious party better than another. The urgent demand of the times seemed to require that ministers of religion should cast themselves afresh on their Master, and on the imperishable verities of spiritual revelations. Out of these convictions what has come to be known as the Hastings Conference was held on the days between the 15th and 19th of November last.

The preparations for the Conference demand special notice. The invitations in relation to attendance urged prayer. Private correspondence of pastors on the subject emphasised the prior call for prayer. There were domestic intercessions when households prayed for this special object. There was an understood union in prayer among ministers in different parts of the kingdom, and special prayer-meetings were called. As the time drew on, fifteen hundred appeals for prayer were circulated in Hastings, St. Leonards, and elsewhere, and devout ones, out of many congregations, ceased not for the three weeks before it met, to pray for the Conference. Nor was this expectancy of looking unto the Spirit confined to the South. A minister in a Northern town, who could not attend, called a meeting for prayer on the first morning the Conference met.

Our God was swift to hear. Mr. Brierley, of Balham, writes in the January number of The Congregational Magazine: "The attitude of mind with which we travelled to the rendezvous, was essentially different from that experienced as we turn our faces towards our great ecclesiastical congresses of Spring and Autumn. ... The critical and controversial faculties were dormant. The predominant element in the consciousness was a thirst for God, even the living God. A sense of awe clothed the mind as we neared the place of meeting—a feeling that the soul was about to come into contact, as perhaps never before, with the innermost zone of spiritual power."

As the Conference opened (after the reading of Acts xx. 17—35, prayer by an elder-pastor, and an introductory address from the Chair) a beloved minister was guided to strike the true note for what followed by an expansion of the words, "The watchmen of Ephraim was with my God." With God; before God; separated for a season unto God, was the very posture of many dear servants of his at that hour. The thought of listening to man had scarcely any place. No mere human excitement had sway. I am justified in saying that with not a few there was, with prostrate humiliation, the simplicity of will and purpose that looked alone to the Great Bishop and Shepherd of the flock, for the manifestations of his presence, and the instilling of his love and power. Blessed secret, if we could but learn it in all our assemblies: when the eye is single, the body becomes full of light. The pure in heart see God.

The ministerial meetings were, as was fitting, private. Two others there were which were open: the first for testimony; and during a long life I never heard addresses with such an absence of aim at what might please man, and with such power; the second was for a united showing forth of the Lord's death; a service of which a writer (Mr. Hallowes, of Barnsley) afterwards said, it was worth a journey of four hundred miles to attend one like unto it. I am writing, however, of the private meetings. The order for these, on the three days, was the simplest conceivable:—Ourselves, the churches of Christ we served, and the unsaved. On the first of these topics the Lord gave the spirit of confession and prayer in a remarkable manner, and also of singularly wise utterance on the office of the Paraclete, the Spirit of holiness. "There was no captious discussion," wrote one. "The cleric who is nothing if he is not critical, and the cleric who is nothing if he is not comic, were absent." Through the night watches that followed, from the majority of the ministers who had been at that evening meeting, prayers ascended to the throne of God.

I hesitate at this point of the solicited narration. On the one hand I fear to go beyond facts, and on the other to withhold a witness to the glory of "the Hearer of prayer." After we had, on that second morning, been in conference for an hour or two, an unwonted spiritual sensitiveness came over us. There was an inexpressible melting of heart. "Never," wrote the one just quoted, "were there so many ministers around me in tears." They were, however, tears of wondrous joy. The heart was filled with adoring love to Christ, as to One who had come among us as He did to the eleven on his Resurrection Day. To be his, without choice, without self-seeking, was the supreme desire. Nor this love only: a very pleasant and generous brotherly love filled the heart, and a sympathy of yearning compassion for men, without its old alloys. "I do not remember," Mr. New, of Hastings, has written, "ever having a deeper sense of the family relationship of God's people." There was One invisibly with us laying the axe to the root of the inordinate inclination to ourselves which is the destroyer of ministerial service, revealing what we needed to learn, and the sweetness of being wholly Christ's; so that Mr. Crosbie, of Brighton, in his published address, has said: "There is only one feeling, I believe, among the hundred brethren who attended the Hastings Conference; and it is, that the three days were days of heaven upon earth."*

Let it be observed that while it was truly said—"There was hardly a feeble utterance, and hardly a prayer that was not to the point," these do not explain what was experienced. For myself I had often, before this season, joined in such prayers, and listened to such valuable addresses. They were not these alone that touched our spirits. From whom but from the blessed Spirit of Pentecost could the grace come that rested upon us all? How but through Him could there be in hearts like ours such a love as flowed through us; such a bringing under of self-love as to leave room only for an adoring sympathy with Christ in his travail for the salvation of men; such a soul-filling joy in communion with Him our Master and Lord; and such a simultaneous desire, apparently filling every heart, to be wholly devoted to Him? "We felt," said a cultured minister afterwards, "that it would have been easy for us to go anywhere, do anything, bear anything, for Christ."

If the influence of that gracious visitation had been evanescent, I would have continued silent about it. At this moment I have on my table fifty letters from ministers most of whom within the last few weeks write of its effect on their ministry. It would have been good to have had a memory of such a season, but the burden of many of those letters is—the heavenly visitation abides. "I returned home to lay myself on the altar of sacrifice for the Master's glory," is the utterance of one, but the sentiment of many. "New life has come among my people," says another. "Since I returned from Hastings," writes a third, "I have had about thirty candidates for church fellowship." A like testimony comes from a fourth. "Just now," says a fifth (this was at the end of the year), "my people are, as I believe, on the verge of a great spiritual blessing." It is only to indicate that a baptism of the Spirit is an abiding blessing that I venture to mention these things. His grace shed on dear ministers in Hastings is a pledge of what the Church needs above all things. Other ministers in different parts of the country are encouraged, and are turning their thoughts to such a seeking of the Lord. Materialisms, irreligious ritualisms, negative preaching, and unfaithful panderings to the worldly, have been too much bringing on us all a spiritual starvation. Thank God we are not satisfied, and begin to be in want. Let men who are "of one accord," who are chivalrous, and yearning for the Lord to "work in them mightily," take heart. The Spirit of the Lord is not straitened; He is among us, and ready with his Pentecostal effusion when we prepare our hearts to seek Him.

THE PRAYER WEEK, and AFTER.

BY PASTOR F. H. WHITE.

THE Prayer Week of the year 1887 has passed. The special severity of the weather had, no doubt, much to do with the somewhat thin attendance at many of the meetings. What, however, was lacking in point of numbers was, we trust, more than made up by the earnest-hearted spirit which prevailed, so far as we had the opportunity of judging. It is no vain thing to call upon the Lord, individually or collectively. As one speaker remarked, the united believing prayers of but two or three are mighty to the bringing down of richest blessing on millions. Abraham was but one, yet again and again his intercessions prevailed, as he pleaded with the Lord for the wicked cities of the plain. Elias, "a man subject to like passions as we are," prayed alone, "and the heavens gave rain and the earth brought forth her fruit." Let us settle this in our own hearts, that not a single cry has gone up to God from a true believing heart, but will return in showers of blessing upon the dry and parched ground around us.

Perhaps no prayers evoked a heartier "Amen" than those asking that peace might be preserved in our time, that the dreaded war-clouds which at present overhang Europe might be graciously dispersed, and that the Lord might remember mercy, and not judgment. The afflicted and poor in our land were often mentioned—that, amid the hard winter and scarcity of employ, they might in their distress seek the Lord, to find in Him "a strong tower" in the day of their sore trouble. Nor were our missionary brethren and sisters forgotten. This was meet and fit, since it was with a beloved missionary brother in North India (a member of the American Presbyterian Board during the Mutiny, more than a quarter of a century ago), that the proposal for a "week of universal prayer" originated. With thanksgivings for the signal awakening in late years of missionary zeal, especially among young men, were mingled heartfelt petitions that "the Lord of the harvest" would send forth in this coming year many "more labourers into his harvest."

But now that the week has passed, shall our prayers cease? Are we to wait till another year has rolled by before we unite again in calling on God? After all, how few of the whole company of believers have been present at these meetings. What if the gatherings had been multiplied manifold, and every one of them thronged with praying children of God. Even then, in view of the present critical condition of things, both in Church and State, would there not still be a strong call to unite and seek the Lord as we have never sought Him? As a venerable and venerated speaker at one of the Powis Hall meetings said: "It is heart-aching, to see the growing unconcern with which the great masses of the people look upon the things of God, and the trifling with Divine realities amongst professing Christians; together with the bitter and determined opposition of the open antagonists of the Gospel." And what, alas! is even sadder still, is the sight of some who gave high promise of becoming examples to their fellow believers both in word and deed, falling into the foulest errors, and filling the minds of all who knew them in the Lord, with sorrow and dismay.

True, there are triumphs to enumerate. Not a single word would I write to call off the attention of your readers from the many and blessed tokens of the Spirit's power everywhere visible. On the contrary, I believe the very stones would cry out, if we did not praise Him for all that He has wrought in the many humble seeking hearts who of late have proved, as never before, the might of his grace, and the power of his real and abiding presence, not only to light up their path of personal sorrow and affliction, but to endue them with strength for testimony and service. Let us praise more than ever this year, but let us also pray more than ever. Let not prayer begin, continue, and end with the prayer-week. With ever-increasing force let the stream of supplication, both in Church and closet, flow on, deepening and widening, until, if spared to meet another year, we may not have time to tell of all the great things God has wrought in answer to the cries of his children.

Let this year be a year of prayer-weeks. Israel of old had her appointed seasons for assembling before "the Tent of Meeting." So may we. It is a good thing, undoubtedly, to keep up our annual feasts, but woe to us if we be content with these. Woe to us if we forget that our high-priestly calling is not a matter of days or weeks. It is a perpetual privilege. We are once for all and always girded for the service of the sanctuary. It is ours to stand continually before the Lord. The incense of the Saviour's perfect meritoriousness is "perpetual incense." It ever ascends. Its fragrant cloud spreads itself over the very Throne of God all through the year. This it is, and only this, which can make 1887, or any other year, "a year of grace" to us sinners. Let us then "continue in prayer, and watch in the same with thanksgiving."

Mr. McCheyne used to say "prayer" was his "noblest and most fruitful employment, and not to be thrust into a corner;" praying always (on every occasion) with all prayer and supplication — "with every variety of prayer and supplication, deliberate, ejaculatory, public, private, secret, confessing, asking, praising; with a full, not partial and niggardly, employment of so precious a privilege"* in the Spirit; the Holy Spirit being the "surrounding, penetrating, transforming atmosphere of the praying Christian."* "Pray without ceasing" is an inspired injunction, in view of "the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ with all his saints." Oh, for that holy aptitude for prayer which would find us always, even when not actually engaged in its exercise, like the bird who, though not "on the wing," is yet ready to fly in an instant.

The following notice caught my eye while on a visit to the seed establishment of a well-known and honoured friend in Reading: "It will greatly assist the germination of peas and beans if they are soaked in warm water for some time previous to sowing." We should not have to mourn so many barren days, if the seed-corns of daily service were first soaked in warm, Spirit-inspired prayers. By Him, therefore, at once both our Brazen Altar for atonement, and our Golden Altar for acceptance, let us offer the sacrifice of prayer as well as praise to God continually. Yet remember, it is "the prayer of faith" which wins the blessing. We may meet in our thousands, and nothing come of it, yet doth God deal with a liberal hand, and upbraid not. But to whom does He give? Not to waverers, but believers. "He that wavereth," says the Apostle, "is like a wave of the sea, driven with the wind and tossed. Let not that man think that he shall receive anything of the Lord" (James i. 6, 7). Away with this God-dishonouring, Christ-dishonouring, Holy Spirit-dishonouring unbelief of ours.

After a week of prayer, say some, should come a year of work. Work! Yes, we will work indeed. "Work till Jesus comes," and we "be gathered home." Oh yes, we must work. Woe unto us if we do not work in such a day as this, when, as my beloved and gifted friend Dr. A. T. Pierson, of Philadelphia, says in that thrilling book of his, "Crisis of Missions":* "God is moving with great strides in his march towards the great goal; when He is specially working, and loudly calling his people to closer fellowship, and more diligent co-operation. Now or never. Tomorrow will be too late for work that must be done to-day. Time and tide will not wait. He who lags behind will be left behind."

Work! How can we but work with such a Master as ours? Is not the necessity laid upon us? How can we have the slightest claim to belong to Him who said, "I must work the works of Him that sent me while it is day," if we do not? But withal let us give ourselves to prayer. "When preaching fails," says McCheyne, "try praying." But we will do both, and that with more boldness, more earnestness, more entireness, more continuousness than ever. The time is short. In the opinion of those who have great discernment both of Scripture and the times and seasons, great judgments are impending. The long course of peace and quiet, that as a nation we have enjoyed during the fifty years of the happy and prosperous reign of our beloved Queen, is fast hastening to a close. We have long been rejoicing in many an open door for blessed Gospel service. What if through our unfaithfulness and sloth, such should be closed against us? But a span of time remains; let us "be up," nay down, "and doing"—down upon our knees in prayer. This is the best way up. "I have so much to do," said Luther, "that I cannot get on without three hours a day praying." McCheyne wrote to the devoted William Burns, "Go on, dear brother, but an inch of time remains; and then eternal ages roll on for ever."

Let us "go on" praying and preaching and working. Let every period of life left to us, long or short, find us not on bended knee only, but with the upturned face of a simple, childlike confidence in the grace and love of our Father in heaven; the anointed eye of a clear, discerning, penetrating singleness of purpose; the outstretched hand of an eager, yet patient expectation, whilst with feet well shod with Gospel readiness we stand "instantly serving" the Lord as He may direct, loins girded about, and lamps burning, and ourselves like unto men who wait for their Lord. "Who then is willing to consecrate his service this day to the Lord?"

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on a mission at Gargrave, Yorkshire, to commence January 29.——For blessing on missions at Aylesbury, Bucks, to January 23, and at Cuddington, Bucks, from January 23 to 30, conducted by Mr. J. Crofton Rainey.——For especial outpouring of God's Holy Spirit on Brixham, South Devon, during this year.——For special services at Watchet, to commence January 22.——For blessing on meetings to be held in Sittingbourne, Kent, from Jan 16 to 25, by Mr. Henry Varley.——Praise for blessing on mission at Chippenham.

Week of United Prayer.

MONDAY, JANUARY 3.—PRAISE.

Steinway Hall, Portman Square.

IN accordance with the custom observed for many years past, the Council of the Evangelical Alliance arranged for morning meetings to be held daily in Steinway Hall, Portman-square, W. Considering the inclement weather, the average attendance was fair and encouraging, ladies and gentlemen facing intensely cold winds, and walking alternately through snow, slush, and rain, in order to participate in the devotional exercises; these were marked by fervour, and not infrequently accompanied with gracious manifestations of Divine power.

Sir W. McArthur presided on the first day, when the theme was "Praise." The address was delivered by Rev. E. A. Stuart, Vicar of St. James's, Holloway, who gave a brief exposition of John xiii. 1: "Having loved his own which were in the world, He loved them unto the end." Believers, he said, are Christ's by donation, by redemption, and by choice. How strong and deep ought to be our consecration to Him! May these two words of priceless meaning—"his own"—kindle praise in every believing heart.

Centenary Hall, Bishopsgate.

The gatherings in the City were arranged for by the Committee of the East Central Y.W.C.A.

The Bishop of London, who presided here during the first hour, said:—My desire is that every soul may be led to give more thought to the offering of praise in his private devotions; for this week of united prayer ought to be followed by more prayer in the closet than before, on the part of each of us. In moments of distress, and when the power of temptation is felt, what can we do but pray? When the struggle with self and sin is hard; when it seems not only difficult but well-nigh impossible to overcome, what can we do but go to Him who has promised to supply all our need? When we feel the burden of sin; when the clouds are thick about us because of a sense of unworthiness and weakness, what can we do but pray?

But there is something narrow and selfish in prayer when it is confined to ourselves, when it does not correspond with the breadth of the blessing given. Is it not necessary, then, that we should add to our prayers our perpetual praises? Above all, we should praise God for what He is to his suffering, sinful creatures. But must we not, if moved by his Spirit, turn our thoughts even from this, and think of Him. There is a story of a woman who came to a great saint of old and said she had prayed much: had continued praying every day of her life for years, yet she found her heart was still cold and dry; she had no comfort in her prayers; though she prayed earnestly, yet somehow it seemed as if her prayers rather came back to her than ascended up to God. The saint bade her pray not for herself, but for the glory of God. When she came to him again after some time she said she had found a new peace, for she understood better than before what was the nature of the love that had bought her—her soul was lifted out of bondage. So it is with us. We must think of the blessings He has bestowed upon us; but let us lay it upon our consciences to be often praising Him for his essential glory.

Have we not good reason to praise and to thank God as a nation? At such a time as this it is very fitting that we should give our praises and thanks to God for all his goodness during the reign of our beloved Queen. Think of the blessings that have been showered upon us; during these fifty years. Think of the revival of spiritual life in all directions. Think of the great moral movements that have strengthened the spiritual revival—of the devotion that has characterised the efforts against intemperance, and the still more fearful evil of impurity. Think of all that has for years been stirring men's souls to their depths, and which evidently is the work of the Holy Spirit of God. Think of the spread of the Gospel in heathen nations all over the world, in our colonies and elsewhere, and all this done in such a way that we cannot say it was done by this man or that; from the result we know that the workers were sent forth by God Himself. Shall we not, then, praise Him, among other things, for his mercy to us as a nation?

who presided during the second hour, said:—It is good to have a thankful spirit. There is nothing more uncomely than a grumbling, discontented Christian; whereas one who cherishes a loving, grateful spirit, who "looks at the bright side of things," as we say, makes the Christian life and faith attractive. I have often been struck with the largeness of soul of the old Hebrew bards, in stirring up themselves and the people to praise God. There was no narrow temper in them. They went over all the works of creation—the sun, moon, and stars; they spoke of the providences of God, especially to the poor and needy—how He giveth food to all flesh. Especially they made mention of His goodness to the people He had set apart for Himself—their emancipation from the land of Egypt, their deliverance at the Red Sea, their victory over his enemies. All these things they spake of. But even in the best of our Christian hymn-books there is a great want of hymns written from what we may call the historical field of thankfulness. The old poets were filled much more with the thought of God's goodness to the nation in the past than we seem to be at the present time. We sing of our feelings and experiences, of the blessings of God to ourselves; but not, as we ought to do, of the great things God is doing upon earth before our very eyes. Surely there are great events well worthy to be commemorated in our songs of praise, in the little-read annals of the Church, and of the missions sent forth into other lands.

But we may well be thankful for the goodness of God to ourselves. All the blessings we have, whether in the church, the family, or in our individual experience, are given to us in and with and through Jesus Christ our Lord. It is this which makes them so sweet. What a manifestation of God, and the glory of God, was Jesus Christ! How He delighted in showing mercy, not only to the blind, the deaf, or the paralytic, but to the leper, the lunatic, the demoniac. And then He crowned it all by giving Himself for us: because He loved us He endured the cruel cross! All we have to enjoy we get through Jesus Christ. As we look back upon our own lives, how disappointing they appear; what a poor thing we have made of life compared to what we ought to have done. But when we look back over what God has done for us, surely we must say, "He hath done all things well." How, when sad, we have been comforted; when weary, we have been sustained; when all things seemed against us, we have been helped and cheered by the lovingkindness of God which endureth for ever—not least of all in those hours when we have been most ungrateful to Him.

We know not what will be on the morrow, but what I want to know is that the Lord will go on with me—that He will lead and guide me. The year, begun in mist and fog, has in some respects ominous prospects. Those who know most about the state of the nations, and about the temper of their rulers—for, after all, the nations have very little power; one man here, and two or three there, decide the question of peace or war;—those who know most, look forward to the future with grave anxiety. But if we trust in the Lord, never mind. If I did not believe in Jesus Christ, I should be one of the most melancholy of men, which I am not. I do not wonder at there being pessimists. But we who believe have the assurance that He will make all things work to the accomplishment of his purposes. Our God changes not. We change with changing years, but He is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever. Jesus Christ is Lord of all, and Prince of life; therefore be of good cheer, all ye that put your trust in Him. But let me ask, Have you obtained mercy—that mercy which endureth for ever? Then, if so, doubt not the lovingkindness of God, which endureth for ever. We must prepare for changes; the remaining years are very few for some, and some of us have more friends in heaven than here. Some who used to be friends are friends no longer. But our Heavenly Friend does not change or leave us. "What a Friend we have in Jesus!" "The mercy of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting."

TUESDAY.—HUMILIATION.

Steinway Hall.

To-day Mr. Donald Matheson (chairman of the Council of the Evangelical Alliance) presided. Rev. C. Wilson, Congregational Church, Blackheath, in his address said:—We are encouraged to humiliation and confession by the promise of special Divine interposition and blessing. It is evident that a distinction is to be drawn between the act of humiliation called for by special circumstances, and that humility which is the prevailing disposition of Christian life. The history of the latter word is deeply instructive, as showing how Christian teaching has influenced human thought. Heathen moralists flung the word aside with disdain, just as we might fling away a rough pebble. To be humble was, in their eyes, to be debased, mean-spirited, contemptible. But Christianity takes up the word and appropriates it, reveals its true quality, brings to the surface hidden lines of beauty, and gives it to the Church as the rarest gem of Christian excellence.

This grace comes to us through the revelation of God. The mind receives impressions of his infinite majesty and holiness. A new standard of righteousness and of love is given to the word. We receive grace to realise something of the beauty of the character of Him, who has atoned for our sins, and left behind Him an example for us to follow. And yet we are conscious of failures, conscious of imperfections; we are bowed down before God in deep self-abasement.

That is not all. Our life has not been an isolated, self-contained life. "We are members one of another." We are part and parcel of a great commonwealth. We sustain relations to the family, to society, and to national life. What a record we have in the programme before us!—sins, social and national, unbelief and atheism, worldliness and wretchedness. Every word contains a history, with appalling illustrations. We dare not unfold it all, and yet it is all true. Imagination shrinks from the task of reproducing all that the words quoted suggest, especially when we go down to the depths recently described by the Poet Laureate.

We may moralise about these things, and congratulate ourselves that we are outside the contagion of our social sins. We may see the whole thing in the dim perspective of distance, and pass on our way. But is that right? Is it Christian? Is there any sincerity in our humiliation, if that be the beginning and the end of it? Are we not, in some sort, responsible for this condition of things? Is not a great deal of it due to the spirit of the age? And what is the spirit of the age, but the product of manifold, unseen influences, to which every one of us is contributing as surely as every snowflake that fell the other day contributed to the disaster that spread itself over the land, and disturbed our communications? Have we contributed nothing by our own indifference to the prevailing indifference at the present day? Has our formalism never checked the free outflow of God's Spirit? Have we always been so perfectly free from exclusiveness and uncharitableness that we have done nothing to promote those divisions which we so much deplore? It is only when we bring ourselves into direct contact with these things that there springs up within us that feeling of deep self-abasement which will make our humiliation true and sincere before God.

Is there no remedy for these evils, and who is responsible for the application of that remedy? We have our evangelistic agencies, we have our Christian activities in the world, and are not these the medium of God's work?

Who is responsible, then, for the comparative failure of all the forms of Christian effort? You say, The church. But is not the church made up of individuals? And only through individual fidelity can the work of the church be truly done. Is not God humbling us by our seeming failure and weakness to master and to subdue the forces of evil that are about us? It is when we realise our true obligation that we shall "gird ourselves" with humility to serve one another. Only let the Church be brought down into the spirit of deep self-abasement, and God will lift her up. That is the point of contact between the Church's life and God's influence. Let us bow down before God as the only Source of our strength and sufficiency.

Centenary Hall.

Rev. C. A. Fox on Confession.

On Tuesday morning Rev. C. A. Fox said the servants of the Lord who have lived closest to Him have been most ready to confess their own sins, and the sins of their people. In Dan. ix. 4 we have an illustration of this. There are two men who in Holy Scripture are specially called beloved of God—Daniel, who, as he was praying and confessing his sins, was told by an angel, "Thou art greatly beloved;" and John, the beloved of the Lord, who yet wrote, "If we confess our sins He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins." These two men had more visions of God than any others, were under God's special favour; yet they humbly and honestly confess their own sinfulness. This is a very important point in these days. It is a sign of approaching grace when we feel a consciousness of sin. It is a bad sign if our hearts are not moved to sorrow at the thought of sin: of the false motives that so often underlie actions good in themselves. It was God's first act in connection with this fallen world of ours to bring man to confession. To Adam He said, "Where art thou?" and to Eve, "What hast thou done?" but each of them excused themselves. To Satan, however, God gave no opportunity for excuse. He asked no question of him. Ever since that time God has been bringing his people to confess their sins, and this forms an important part of spiritual life.

We who profess to be the children of God should feel not only our own unworthiness, but the sin of our people. This London of ours, the centre of civilisation—during the past year how black has been the record of shame, sorrow, disgrace, and reproach. We need to be humbled in the dust, for indeed there has been enough to show that society is rotten to the core. Then about the unbelief of the present day. True, there has always been unbelief. But that of the present day is of a different description. To-day there is unbelief on principle; before, it was unprincipled unbelief. Worst of all has been the worship of culture and of humanity, which, as Frederic Harrison says, "has displaced the old religion of heaven and hell." That is not the opinion of one man only, but of quite a number of leading men, and youthful men are following on in their footsteps.

Yet we may thank God, too, that our day is distinguished by an earnest, whole-hearted Gospel Christianity. Christendom is more alive than ever; the fire from the altar of God is kindling the hearts of God's servants everywhere; there is more missionary zeal, more whole-hearted surrender, more joy in the Church. And the reason of this increased joy is that there is more whole-hearted service, more of spending and being spent for Him who gave Himself for us. Thank God for this. Yet we cannot but see, as the end of this dispensation approaches, that there is increasing sin, more shameless sin, more bowing to Satan's ungodly will. Every child of God ought, therefore, to be a minister and messenger of the covenant Lord of Hosts wherever he goes, seeking to win souls for the glory of God.

Humiliation, confession, and consecration—these are the steps of the Christian's path. It is no use saying we believe in the cleansing blood of Jesus unless this is accompanied by a whole-hearted consecration to the service of the Lord. May we this day realise the power and efficacy of the cleansing blood of Christ as never before. Let us hold fast to the justice and faithfulness of God; for "if we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins." Yes, God is bound in faithfulness to Jesus Christ to forgive us when we truly come unto Him. In these days the Church of Christ ought to be united like one man. All who believe in the atonement of Jesus, should link hand in hand—not merely not turn the cold shoulder to our brethren, this is a small matter; but, putting a loving hand into each brother's loving hand, be combined and united with the grasp of Christ.

Rev. C. B. Symes took the confession of David in Ps. xxxii. 5, "I said, I will confess my transgression unto the Lord; and Thou forgavest the iniquity of my sin." He said every lowering of the sense of sin hinders the clinging to the Saviour. How much more useful and holy our lives would be but for sin cherished or excused. What is worse than all is that our sin is against God: sins against our fellow-men and sins against ourselves are really and truly sins against God. There is no real humiliation unless we feel the blame to be our own; if it is attributed to circumstances, or to other people, the confession is not real. There is no compulsion to sin—it is not forced upon us; resistance might have been made, and the blame is our own. Sin in the Christian Church is cause for humiliation, and each Christian should realise that he is a part of the church. How much has the Church drunk of the spirit of the world! and how many professing Christians who belong to our churches are mainly swayed by the consideration of how they can get on in the world! How much the Christian has done to inspire unbelief among men it is difficult to imagine. Many young men have confessed it was the inconsistency of Christians that led them into infidelity. Let us beware against encouraging sin in any way, especially in the germ.

WEDNESDAY.—PRAYER for the CHURCH.

Steinway Hall.

Dr. Fraser on the Church's Need.

The chair was occupied by General Sir R. Meade, K.C.B. Dr. Donald Fraser, Marylebone Presbyterian Church, delivered the address.

It is more easy to pray for the Church than to arrive at an agreement among Christians as to the nature, constitution, and history of the Church, or of the duty of individual Christians, particularly those various Christian communities called "churches." Thus we can all pray to be delivered from false doctrine, and heresy, and schism; although, I suppose, we should be a long time before we came to an agreement as to what amounts to heresy, or at whose door blame of schism is to be laid. Again, we pray for the conscious, blessed unity of God's believing children upon earth in the Church; for such manifestation of that intrinsic unity as He sees to be meet and necessary for the health of his church, and for the manifestation of his glory among the sons of men. But who is to be blamed for the discord where there ought to be concord, or what is to be blamed for the extent of manifested disunion in Christendom at the present day? That is not a matter to be discussed on the platform of the Evangelical Alliance; still we may pray before we seek to arrive at any settlement of the question. We should, however, pray honestly: we should not pray in a spirit of mere assertion of the rightness of our own church, or our own branch of the Church. We should put ourselves, with our fellow-Christians, under the guidance of God and his holy Word, as to what is most in accordance with that Word—what is right in church matters and in churchmanship; otherwise we shall be praying, and standing, as I am afraid we often are, away from the answer to our own prayers. It is no use to pray, unless a man submits himself to God and his guidance.

The Church is certainly a characteristic institution of God in this dispensation. The Church of which we are talking to-day is the Church of God everywhere. That is the Scriptural title. It is a shallow thing, among the many shallow things that pass for good things, that we should think of Christ and not of the Church. The Apostle says we should think of "Christ and the Church." It is our duty in this dispensation to receive that grace of God which specially belongs to our own age.

I believe that all good Christians are good churchmen. What is it to be a good churchman? It is to hold the faith once delivered to the saints, and to love and help brethren that hold the faith once delivered to the saints, and to do all we can for the propagation of the faith once delivered to the saints, throughout all the nations of the world. The Church is maintained still in the earth that it may glorify the Lord by thus spreading abroad the knowledge of his grace. The person who does not care for missions is not a good churchman, as it is one of the chief functions of the Church to spread abroad the glorious Gospel.

The Church began with suffering persecutions, and the Church will end with an epoch of judgment. That I believe to be the case with regard to all ages and dispensations of God. The age of the "old world," as it is called in the Bible, ended in judgment, and in deliverance through judgment. It ended in judgment by water, and in deliverance by water. Then came the patriarchal age, ending in judgment, and deliverance by water, the children of Israel being saved through the same element that destroyed the pursuing Egyptians. The age of Israel ended with the judgment of those who were against Christ, by sword and fire. This, the age of the Church, beginning with persecutions, will end with an epoch of judgment, and that judgment is the coming of the Son of Man from heaven. Judgment will begin at the house of God. The Lord will come and try his servants. The Lord will afterwards judge the world, but his people will not come into condemnation, even as at the former crises, when his people were delivered.

We are, I believe, in a pause before the Lord's coming. We should be labouring for the edification of the Church. We do not know how long, or how short a time we may have peace. This is not a time to waste our resources in little wars among ourselves, in fretful friction, and in troublesome controversies about things upon which evidently we are not coming to an agreement. This is a time when we should have peace within, as we have peace without, and use the time for the consolidation of the Church of God. Depend upon it, the wind will rise soon enough. The wind, and the fire also, are going to rise which will try every man's work of what sort it is; and, unless the Church is solidly built, unless it is solidly and well constructed, the winds, coming from all the four quarters of the globe, will soon shake the steadfastness of those who have not been edified.

"The Church of God walked in the fear of the Lord." I wish there were more fear of the Lord. I have a good deal of misgiving about the light and confident temper in which many Christians seem to live through their religious lives, and to lift up their religious testimony. We want fear, as well as great joy; and these go well together, as every experienced Christian knows, fear being, of course, reverence for the Lord Jesus. Let us never be led by hymns, by enthusiasm in prayer, or otherwise, to think that anything but profound reverence is due to the Son of God. Walking in the fear of the Lord we shall have more comfort of the Holy Ghost. There are special times, in churches and individuals, of more enlargement and enrichment of the spiritual life, and of the spiritual testimony, and the spiritual power, and the spiritual consciousness. That is what we ought to pray for. We are touched from on high, we are all touched by the Spirit, we are all, perhaps, to some extent, penetrated; but we are not engrossed, we are not filled, not occupied as we ought to be, with the Divine Spirit. What men want is not occasional rushes of impulse, but to be absorbed in spiritual truth, and impregnated with spiritual power, so that they may discern the Spirit, and act with the Spirit, with regard to everything that comes before them.

When the Church is filled with the Spirit, then she will be a very different power than she is now. No man will be able to move his tongue against the spiritually impregnated Church of God. In the beginning the Christians were filled with the Holy Ghost. Iconium rises up in judgment; but who cares about Iconium? There were Christians at Iconium who were filled with joy, and with the Holy Ghost, and I want to know who their successors are in London. We have fuller Bibles than they had; they had no New Testament. We have immensely increased resources and opportunities for serving Christ. They were strong where we are weak; we are strong where they were weak. We should humble ourselves before God, and ask that we may receive such fulness of the Spirit that we may be full of truth, prayer, praise, and wisdom; that we may be full of the love of the Father, full of the grace of the Son, and full of the mind of the Spirit. Thus we shall get sweetly through all our little church differences, for we shall be filled with patience, filled with brotherly kindness, and filled with sacred charity.

Centenary Hall.

Rev. E. A. Stuart first drew two pictures of "Jesus in the midst"—on Calvary (John xix. 18) and in heaven (Rev. v. 6). But He is also in the midst of his Church. In Rev. i. 19 we read of Him as in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks, and He Himself tells us, "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." Then comes the question, Is He in the midst, in all the varied relationships of life, its companionships and duties? Husband and wife, is He in your midst? He will be no wall of separation between you, but a glorious uniting link, binding you closer together. Is He in the midst, between friend and friend, employer and employed? Is He in the midst in your business—all your accounts and every article on your shelf open to his inspection? He is in the midst now as Mediator. But there is coming a day when He shall be in the midst as Judge.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes was announced to conduct the meeting during the second hour, but was unable to be present through ill-health, compelling a complete cessation from work for some time. Mr. Hughman therefore conducted the meeting, and earnest prayer was offered for our beloved brother that he may be speedily restored to health. Prayer was also made for all pastors, that they may preach the Gospel in all fulness and simplicity, and for the people, that their hearts may be open to receive it; also that believers may walk in fellowship and holy love, remembering that they are members one of another.

THURSDAY.—PRAYER for FAMILIES.

Steinway Hall:

REV. W. F. GOOCH ON FAMILY RELIGION.

Mr. Geo. Williams presided, and the address was given by Rev. W. Fuller Gooch. The welfare of a nation, he said, depends upon the character of the families which compose it; and so it is in the Church of Christ. How much depends upon the character of the families connected with the various branches of the Church! The great need of the Church to-day is a greater measure of consecrated effort, and expectant faith on the part of all Christian parents. If in our families there is the spirit of contrition, the spirit of faith, and the spirit of consecration, we shall find that, as families, we shall be richly used of God and blessed of God wherever we may dwell.

God delights in family religion. Are we praying for our children? Are we longing that our homes shall be radiant with the light of God? The sympathy of our Father above is with us in that yearning desire. The sympathy of our Father in heaven is with us in every effort we make to obtain that blessed result. When the disciples bade the mothers with their children to depart, see Jesus welcoming the little ones, brought from those varied homes, laying his holy hands upon them, and blessing them! Has He changed in his heart, in his attitude, towards the families of his people? Oh, no! Our children are regarded by Him with equal favour.

Sometimes I have been struck to see what a lack of faith there is on the part of many professing Christians as to the capacity of children in early life to receive the Gospel. Ought we not to get rid of any doubt, of any such lack of faith? As soon as our children can know the name of the Lord, as soon as they can enter into the teaching of the simple truths of the Gospel, ought we not to expect that God will bless us, as well as them, by answering our prayers, and bringing them to a loving reception of Christ? We are apt to think that religion consists of a cultured intellectualism far more than it really does. Religion is not of the head in the first place, but of the heart. Jesus Christ wins the affections first; and little children, with their ardent affections, if early directed to Him, may be brought into his fold.

The responsibility of Christian parents to promote family piety in every possible way is very great. But what difficulties there are in the way of home piety. Many of us, I dare say, have often felt and realised them. We love to do the best in secular things for our children. We desire to see their welfare, their prosperity, in relation to the things of this life; but what a temptation there often is to sacrifice spiritual advantage for greater material gain! In how many ways we are apt to sanction alliances in our families which tell against spiritual life and spiritual prosperity! How apt we are, in the matter of amusements, to be too pliant with the ways of the world, to give our children an early bias to carnal amusements, which, if followed, as they very likely will be, in later life, must take them away from the fountain of blessing, from the presence of God. What difficulties there are, in the present state of society, in the way of parents living out their desires and prayers on behalf of their children; and yet, in the Epistle to the Colossians (chap. iii.) what beautiful directions we have as to how to prepare ourselves, as parents, for carrying out our prayers and our desires. There we have abundant counsel as to how to live in order to carry out the relative duties to which we are exhorted. The first is the cultivation of a Christian character; the second is the adoption of the great Christian principle, charity, in all that we do. Then there is thankfulness; there is the Word of Christ to direct us, and to build us up. Not only that, but Christian joy. The crowning virtue of all is this: "Whatsoever ye do, do it heartily, as to the Lord, and not unto men." If these things are borne out by us, and the Spirit of God enables us to do them, we shall have power and blessing in our families.

Centenary Hall.

REV. A. G. BROWN ON CHRISTIAN YOUTH.

There was a larger attendance here to-day than on any previous day, while much earnestness was manifested. Rev. Archibald Brown presided during the first hour. As an encouragement to parents to pray for the conversion of their own children, he mentioned that three years ago a woman was moved to pray that her three children might be converted that same day. Unknown to her, they were present at the time, and were so touched by their mother thus pleading for them that there and then they gave themselves to the Lord, so that when she went home she found it with them even as she had asked. They have since been bright and happy workers for Christ. Proceeding to expound 1 Kings vi. 18: "The cedar of the house within was carved with knops and open flowers," he said the word "knops" might be more correctly rendered "buds," so that this was God's idea for the ornamentation of his temple—buds and opening flowers, even the children and young people whom He called to Himself. Thank God for these buds, for they whisper hope. There is a sad side as well as a blessed side to the spectacle of a number of grey-haired servants of God. Those flowers, so full blown, must soon drop. Their fragrance cannot linger on earth much longer, their testimony can be but for a short time. But God's garden is not going to suffer for want of flowers, and so alongside of those that are full-blown and ready to fall He places the bud and opening flower. We think of those who now stand prominently forward as witnesses for the Lord, and wonder what London would do without them; but a few years ago they were only buds. Visiting a dying woman, whose white hairs told that she had reached a good old age, he found sitting by her side her grandson, and as he read to her out of the Book she loved so well, her eyes brightened; it is a beautiful sight, the full-blown flower and the bud side by side.

Then the buds and opening flowers maintain the freshness of the Church. Any who will look back five and twenty years, and honestly take stock of themselves, will be struck with the change that has taken place in their way of looking at things. They have become much more cautious; they are in the habit of looking at every side of a question, and very often find six reasons for doing something, and six others for not doing it, and so the thing is left undone altogether. Once they talked to God so simply, their faith was as that of a little child; once they prayed like the boy who said, "Lord, do give me grace, and help me not to answer mother back when she snaps at me." It is quite right that the language should be different, but God's Church would be very tame if there were none of that enthusiasm, sometimes even what might be called indiscretion, which distinguishes its younger members. And God's garden, his Church, will never be without these buds and bursting flowers Travelling last year in Switzerland, he was struck with the beauty of the pear-trees, covered as they were with blossom. What a glorious thought that God is pleased to bring the fruit out of the blossom! The church cannot be perfect in beauty unless, side by side with well-developed Christians, we have what Solomon was told to ornament his temple with—buds and opening flowers. Bud life is the same as flower life, and the same grace that works in the heart of the aged is working also in that of the little grandson. Oh, then, tenderly guard these buds, pray that there may be more of them, bear patiently with them, be ever on the look-out for fresh conversions.

DR. PATERSON ON INFIDELITY.

The Gospel received into the heart, he said, is the best evidence which we can present to the world. No testimony is so effective as that given by living men and women to a living Saviour. If infidelity is to be checked, it will be by Christianity, and it is by holy living that Christians may prove to men that Jesus lives in their hearts. To this end we need his presence every hour. I do not tremble for the ark of God, but I do tremble for the consequences to this country if it reject that Gospel which has been the source of its strength since the Reformation. Many are anxious to prove that Scripture does not conflict with the science of to-day. Men should cease their efforts to bring science into agreement with Scripture, and might well be careless as to what science has to say to-day or to-morrow. I am sometimes asked if the first chapter of Genesis is scientific truth, and I say No, but it is God's truth. Some time ago it was argued that geology showed conditions which it would have required countless ages to bring about, but even "scientists" are beginning to take another view now, and it has been set forth in one of the latest issues from the "Clarendon Press" that the greatest changes might be wrought in a moment of time by volcanic eruptions. Of this, indeed, they had an illustration in what happened in New Zealand during the past year. There is full evidence that in God's hands are forces with which He can work wonderful changes in a moment of time. As to creation, we know nothing except what God has told us in his Word, and this we must accept as little children. Spiritual truths can only be spiritually discerned, and to silence the arguments of the infidel is of little avail without the power and teaching of the Holy Spirit. Men's minds are being warped by false views of Jesus Christ. There are hundreds of men and women whose minds are so beclouded by so-called scientific talk, that they have been induced to believe that the Bible is not inspired of God, and does not come to us with authority. The finite cannot understand the Infinite; but the Son of God has revealed the Father. We cannot reach the Father except by Him; but He has translated Himself into our human nature.

that now I can understand something of Him. However infidels may fight against miracles, they do not now fight against those cardinal truths, the death and resurrection of the Lord Jesus, to which the Lord's Supper and the Lord's-day abundantly testify. The disciples, it is admitted, were not deceivers, whatever they were. And wherever the preaching of the Gospel is clearly associated with the death and resurrection of Christ, there is found the fruit of the Spirit. I tremble when I remember that the battlefield is not logic, but the life, and that if Christians do not bear about with them, and show in their lives, the dying and resurrection of the Lord Jesus, true piety will more or less die out, and the world become involved in darkness. I tremble because for a long time a very uncertain sound has been going forth from pulpit and press. Sermon after sermon is preached, but Christ crucified is not in them, and the Gospel with Christ left out of it is a Gospel bereft of its power. I apprehend more from the churches than from infidelity, because in so many there is a practical denial of those truths which are essential, and without which all preaching is vain.

FRIDAY.—PRAYER FOR MISSIONS.

Steinway Hall.

General Sir R. Phayre presided, and the address was given by Rev. J. Kilner. The duty of carrying the Gospel to every nation, he said, is not only enjoined upon the Church, but it is the very function of the Church. "I send you forth as my witnesses," said the Saviour. This is the honour, the joy, the glory of the Church. As a missionary, who had thirty years' hard work, he found that, in India, South Africa, and elsewhere, it is this declaration of good news of salvation through Jesus Christ that reaches and touches the heart of man, wherever you meet with him. Nothing else can do it.

We are invited to pray that "the Church of Christ may feel it a privilege to make sacrifices that her commission may be fulfilled." The association of sacrifice with the Christian life is very close. What is Christianity, from beginning to end, but a glorious illustration of sacrifice for a principle, for a purpose? If we have this spirit poured upon us largely in the various churches we here represent, our gathering together will not be profitless. We are asked also to pray that far greater zeal for the Divine glory, and far more pity for the perishing, may be imparted by the Holy Ghost to all the people of God. If the glory of God be ever kept before us, as the supreme end to be attained, a great deal that we may regard as wrong in the working of missions would be rectified. It would ennoble the work, and give stability to it. If we are only all baptized into the spirit of the Master, and filled with zeal for the glory of God, then there would be inspiration for every missionary, as well as every mission of every Church.

It is well for us to pray that God would preserve the lives of those who are engaged in this noble but dangerous work. Very frequently they are exposed to great trials. We should likewise earnestly pray that God may multiply the number of his faithful labourers. Jesus says the labourers are few, because the work is great, and is expanding; as the work enlarges the labourers are more insufficient in number. The openings on every hand are perfectly astonishing. Let us, therefore, pray that the Lord of the harvest may send forth labourers of the right type and the right spirit to work for Him in the mission field. Prayer is invited "that all converts may be comforted, and made useful in seeking the salvation of souls." Their faith established, they could then be more effectual instruments in bringing others to Christ. We all can heartily join in the prayer that the time may soon come, when the Spirit shall be poured out like floods upon the dry ground, and the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose.

Centenary Hall.

The attendance was again large, the hall being filled. The Hon. and Rev. J. Carr-Glynn presided during the first portion of the time, and spoke from John x. 16, "And other sheep I have, which are not of this fold; them also I must bring." These last words he took as a motto to be kept continually in the mind. We all rejoice in being Christ's sheep; we all love Him as the Good Shepherd; but in these words He tells us of those other sheep so dear to his heart. These, He says, I must bring, and "there shall be one fold and one Shepherd." Why, then, are they not his now? To us, as his representatives on earth, Christ has entrusted the carrying out of the purposes of his heart. When we have come to understand this, then also we can understand something of the miserable supineness of Christendom in being content to take in, and enjoy as a luxury, these good things which God has given us in Christ Jesus, and not to impart to those others for whom his heart pants and yearns. If the Church does not rise and put on the beautiful garments of preparedness for this work, it will never be done. How many there are who pray day by day, "Thy kingdom come," who yet have no sympathy with this first purpose of God in bringing these other sheep into the same fold where we are eating the green pastures and being led by the still waters of our privileges as members of Christ's body. In what a position is this subject put by too many of us! The annual sermon, a careless attendance at some missionary meeting, or a little sympathy to one who has given some friend or child to the work—that for too many is all the interest that missionary labours excite. But is this at all in proportion to that which the Church of Christ should feel?

May we not also form some idea of the vast importance of missionary work from the fact that the difficulty of winning souls in Christendom as compared to heathendom is as one to eight? That is, the difficulty of winning back the lapsed masses is eight times greater than is that of gaining converts from amongst the heathen. This is an important fact for those who are foremost in missionary enterprise at our own doors; for, while there is indeed great need here, I am jealous lest we should forget the cry of those from afar off, "Come over and help us." Referring, then, to a recent pamphlet, "A Century of Missions," he said, Notwithstanding all that has been done by Protestant missions in the last hundred years, there are still a thousand millions of heathens who are strangers to the Lord Jesus Christ; we are not even keeping pace with the increase of population. It is a coincidence that Mr. Gladstone's estimate of the amount in pounds of the national income is the same as that given as the number of the heathen. And to their conversion England appropriates a thousandth part of her income annually. What a miserable proportion to give to such a cause! We should pray, then, that God would touch the hearts of his people in this matter, showing them their individual responsibility. Upon each one this rests, and when we remember that we are not our own, but that we have been bought with a price, even the precious blood of Jesus, and that therefore we and all we have belong to Him, then our duty to do what we can will be clear enough. All will rejoice to know that the British and Foreign Bible Society has invited delegates from all the missionary societies to a meeting to consider whether it is possible to have a Board of Missions thoroughly representative of the missionary spirit in England and elsewhere.

Rev. W. H. Webb-Peploe, in continuation of the subject during the second hour, based his remarks on Ephesians iv. 16. Failure, he said, on the part of any of the members of the body of Christ to fulfil their duty keeps the Lord Jesus waiting for that glorious moment when He shall present unto Himself his Bride, the Church, "without spot or wrinkle, or any such thing." Our life is not a sedentary position in which to enjoy ourselves, but there is a course to be run, an education to be attained, a sphere to be occupied. Not a single member but is privileged to give out of that which it has received, to make known Christ as the Head, to the humblest child, the young man, the busy father. The partner walking with a friend through the city, and speaking one humble word for Jesus Christ is edifying the body of Christ in love; and so is the woman who speaks to her servant with the same object. What an insult to God to despise the day of small things. Many talk about what they would do if called to the distant mission field, who forget that the work of God begins at home. The mission that will most glorify God will often begin at the city of London. Let everyone remember that he is saved to save—to become a witness; and that—according to the old motto, Laborare est orare—to labour is to pray. This God-given work should be done for our own sakes, that we may stand well in the great day of the Lord. A miserly Christian, one who does not make use of the gifts bestowed upon him, is the most miserable of men; but he who gives out abundantly of that which he has received is blessed in his own soul.

SATURDAY.—PRAYER FOR NATIONS.

Steinway Hall.

Colonel Puget presided at this, the final meeting. Prebendary Billing, in his address, said it was clearly laid down in Scripture that God does punish the people of a nation for the sins of their rulers; but it is also distinctly laid down that the hearts of kings and of rulers are in his hand, and it is only when the people follow sin that God will permit their rulers so to sin that the nation must be chastised in order that his holiness and righteousness may be as it were justified. It becomes us to pray for our Queen, and for all who are in authority under her; we should pray that they may be rightly guided in all their counsels and all their business; but we should also pray that the people may be baptized with the Holy Ghost, and kept from sin, which, if persisted in, will meet with God's heavy judgment.

Reference has been made to impurity and to intemperance. Surely we ought to humble ourselves before God, because of what we know to exist in our midst. We should remember that all true national reformation must begin with the individual; that it is not sufficient that we deplore the evil as it exists elsewhere, but we should lament it as it exists amongst ourselves. We should look into our own hearts, and examine our own desires. We ought to seek, by God's grace, to amend our ways in every respect according to his holy law. If there is to be any true reformation of national morals, the correction must commence with the Church. We may well pray that, in the endeavour (for which we thank God) that is being made to promote purity and temperance, evil may not be there. It is quite possible for the Evil One, if he finds that he cannot stay us in our zeal, so to misdirect, and so to mar the work, that harm may come instead of good. We do well to pray God to direct all hearts, and to give all grace, to set a watch before their enemies, and to be careful what they say, and how they say it.

There are other evils which, we pray, may cease. Nothing has distressed me more, and nothing has caused me more to think that we are going in the wrong way, than what has been whispered, and then sometimes actually spoken openly—viz., that the moral character of our public men has nothing to do with the service they might render to their Sovereign and the State; that we have only to consider whether a man is a useful politician and servant of the Crown, and that we are bound not to look into or examine the probity of his character, and the purity of his morals. Nothing has seemed to me to point so much to the degradation of public morals; and I pray God that we may always hold in high position such an estimate of the godliness of morality as has ever been set us by our Queen. May we never tolerate any departure from the law of God as the law of our nation and of our community.

Look at the blackness of the European heavens! With a great deal of talk among the people of the nations, about the blessings of civilisation, and a desire to spread those blessings all the world over, what do we find? Amazing cupidity. We find that the nations, small and great, are spending enormous sums of money, to their impoverishment, upon what are called "necessaries." Necessaries now, forsooth! are large machine-guns, torpedoes, and such things. I feel there never was a time that could be more accurately called a crisis than the present. It is a time when we should humble ourselves before God, when we should ask Him, of his great mercy, to sift us and to get rid of all that is displeasing to Him, of all that may hinder us from receiving his blessing and having his protection. Never was there a time when we should more earnestly pray that God may guide our rulers aright, and that this Jubilee year may be a reign of peace both at home and abroad.

When we come to look upon our position among the nations we cannot but lament that our power, and authority, and influence, and wonderful facilities for blessing the world, are not better used than they are. Thank God for what we have done to put down slavery; but we should be doing much more. God be praised for what we have done to preach the Gospel among the nations. But let us remember that the opportunities afforded us are great. England possesses two things which she is bound to use, if they are to be retained to her in God's service, in order that she may fulfil her great mission among the nations of the earth. She possesses enormous wealth; when I think of the terrible contrast between the poverty at the one end of London, and the wealth at the other; and when I remember what a work remains to be done among our own people, as well as among the the nations abroad, I pray God to pour out upon all his people of the spirit of true liberality and of self-consecration, from which all true giving must come—i.e., self-consecration where there is great wealth. Are we consecrating our two talents of wealth and power, and using them to the glory of God? How are we dealing with God's ancient people, the Jews, and with all those to whom, in this dispensation, we have the commission to go and preach the Gospel? God grant that we may take these things to heart. God bless this Jubilee Year, and grant that our Sovereign may long reign over a happy, peaceable, contented, and God-loving people!

Centenary Hall.

Mr. J. H. Tritton presided, and having read Ps. lxii., quoting the words, "All nations shall call Him blessed," said how very far we are from that time now! Look at the nations of the world with their huge standing armies; look at the darkness of heathenism. The Christian Church was commanded to go and teach all nations. And is not the state of the nations at the present time owing to remissness on her part in fulfilling this command and to want of loyalty to the Lord? Christianity has indeed accomplished great things for the world; the presence of Christ in the hearts of even a few has made them as the saving salt of the world.

Christians have need to rise to a sense of their privileged position in this matter, and to strive to carry out what they know is the will of God towards the nations through the Church. What is the destiny of these nations? We see them now cast out, forgotten, untaught, and we must take shame to ourselves that this is so. But hereafter it shall not be so; the nations shall join in the song of the redeemed, and the nations of them which are saved shall walk in the light. Before the "abundant blessing," of which the Psalmist speaks, surely the Lord Himself must come. At present the nations might be compared to the younger son in the parable of the Prodigal Son—their cry is, Give me! There is the lust of territory; just as with individuals there is the same selfish cry. Their prayer may sometimes be granted, but it will not be for their real good. But when they learn to pray: "Father, make me," we know how that prayer is answered. Until nations and individuals are ready to be made what the Lord would have them be, content to take even the lowest place so that they may enter into his courts with praise, the abundant blessing cannot be poured out.

Wandsworth.

MONDAY.

In Down Lodge Hall, High-street, Wandsworth, meetings were held daily, commencing at four in the afternoon. The attendances were more numerous than at Steinway Hall, in the West-end of London.

On Monday, when Dr. Herbert Watney presided, Rev. C. Spurgeon (Greenwich) gave the address. In Scripture, he said, praise came before prayer. Let them praise God for what they had, and it would be a sure token that they might yet have more. Thank God even for troubles and sorrows; such experience would enable them to minister better comfort unto the children of God. Praise Him for affliction. Music that comes stealing over water is the sweeter. The string pulled the tightest is that which strikes the clearest note. Thank God for Jesus most of all. Surely every Christian heart had a hymn of praise, because they had been saved by grace, and kept by the restraining power of God when sometimes their passions, like Pegasus, would have carried them away. Many were talking of a Jubilee. Oh! that it might come to every heart in the truest and best sense! Let them get ransomed from self and sin and unbelief, and made Christ's for ever. Let them say, "Oh, King Jesus, we should like to celebrate thy jubilee this year in joy and praise to Thee." Martin Luther, when the devil tempted him, began singing. Let the devil have enough of it this New Year! In the hours of grief and of sorrow, in the nights of anguish and of pain, praise the Lord at all times, for it is a good thing to give praise unto God.

TUESDAY.

On Tuesday, Rev. E. W. Moore, commenting on Jonah iii. 5, said:—One of the most remarkable instances of national humiliation, the repentance of Nineveh, was singled out by the Lord Jesus Christ Himself, when He said: "The men of Nineveh shall rise up in the judgment against this generation, and condemn it: for they repented at the preaching of Jonas; and, behold, a greater than Jonas is here." The great metropolis of England had, not less than Nineveh, sins that cry out for vengeance from God. There were prevalent sins of drunkenness, and fearful licentiousness, sapping the foundations of society. When they thought of the terrible evils trumpeted forth through the daily press, of the home heathenism in the cities of this country, and of the many thousands of persons who never enter any place of worship, surely there was need for humiliation before God; and especially when they remembered the spirit of lawlessness that is a marked characteristic of the times in which we live; a spirit of insubordination and impatience of all authority, civil and spiritual, as indicated in the terrible movements that underlie the surface of society everywhere—Socialism in England, Nihilism in Russia, Fenianism in Ireland, not to mention open blasphemy and defiance of God in modern atheism and infidelity. Nineveh repented: the characteristics of that repentance were—(1) it was believing, notwithstanding the terribleness of the message, which had in it not a single word but judgment, and judgment due to the sins of the people. In these days it was often a popular Gospel that left out judgment upon sin. (2) The repentance was universal: they put on sackcloth, from the greatest even to the least. Although we could not in these times ensure a Government appointment of a day of prayer and humiliation, we could, at any rate, make our own repentance universal. (3) Not content with the mere outward expression of grief, every one turned from his evil way. This was practical reformation; God then repented of the evil He said He would do unto them; He repented of his procedure, not of his purpose.

WEDNESDAY.

Captain Dale presided. Rev. F. W. Greeves, D.D., said they had met to pray for the whole catholic church. He, for one, would not give up the word catholic. It was too sacred to be handed over to Romanising interpreters. The catholic church meant the whole brotherhood of believers, for in Christ there was neither male nor female, neither Jew nor Gentile. All who loved Christ were part of his Church. They had met for intercession, in order that they might recognise that brotherhood and union more. He did not believe that object would be best promoted by one visible organic unity. It was a great deal better for Christians to work in their own way, just as the Lord, by his Spirit, would guide and help them. They would gain, rather than lose, by these separate organisations of believers. But there was a beautiful manifestation of union, and a beautiful mode of cementing union, that the Almighty Father was pleased to adopt in reference to the Jewish Church. Three times a year all the male population were required to go up to Jerusalem. They thronged the streets of the city; yet Ephraim did not annoy Judah, and Judah did not vex Ephraim. He could not help thinking of the time when, in like manner, Christian people of all denominations should assemble together in great companies to "pray for the peace of Jerusalem," and to say, "for my brethren and companions' sakes," no matter to what denomination they belonged, "peace be within thee." It was to him a matter of joy to think that they were met to pray that their churches might be more aggressive, and more energetic in the future. The more they understood their church unity, the more would they understand the privilege of aggressive effort. There was no doubt that the coming into their midst of Mr. Moody, while it did much for the conversion of sinners, did quite as much for the cementing of churches. He had had the pleasure of three years' residence in Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and as the result of Mr. Moody's labours, and ever since that first visit, a Central Hall had been filled day by day at the hour of noon with Christians of all the churches in the city gathered together for prayer. There had been a quickening of all the church life in that important centre of Christian effort. He trusted that they would understand this more and more; for it was by the spirit of united effort that the church would make its impression upon the outlying world.

MR. WEBB-PEPLOE ON HOME LIFE.

On Thursday, an address of considerable interest, and listened to with profound attention by a large audience, was given by Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe. Having read 2 Tim. i. 8; ii. 1; and iv. 1, 2, he said: How can we expect God to bless family life unless our own life be such as to bring honour and praise to God in the family? It is said it is easy enough for a man to be a Christian on the platform and in the pulpit, but it is the influence of his home life that tests his professions. Let his wife and servants speak for him, rather than let him speak for himself. The young are saying just now that father and mother are cantankerous, and that somehow it has become impossible to bend the will towards such parents, because they are old-fashioned and out of date. Then, let these young people receive the exhortation of the Apostle: "Thou, therefore, my son, be not thou ashamed of the testimony of our Lord, nor of me his prisoner?"

Are you, who are speaking so strongly against your elders, able to point in all humility to the life you live, as, in the sight of God and before the world; not ashamed of the testimony of our Lord and his Apostle? Are you, my dear young people, who are so astonished at the weakness and feebleness of the present generation that they are not altogether up to date with regard to novels, and that kind of criticising faculty so peculiar to the nineteenth century with reference to the Scriptures—are you strong in the grace which is in Christ Jesus? Whatever you may think of your elders, calling them fusty and out of date, are you so truly anointed of God that you are able to appropriate all the beautiful prerogatives traced out in the second chapter of this Epistle? Are you, my elder brethren, who are so ready in your quiet home life to lay blame on the children, and to find fault with the rising generation, able to say that the third chapter is more strikingly fulfilled in our days than in days gone by, and that our children, alas! have a form of godliness, but deny the power thereof.

I think it would never be said of such persons as gather at these meetings that they are faithless with regard, at any rate, to the fundamental principles of Christianity. But while we are faithful to the doctrine of the Atonement, is there not a further Gospel than that, as to which it seems only too sadly true that we must charge the Church with being faithless, when compared with what she ought to be? How many of those present can take the Lord Jesus Christ as being a provision by God for every detail of daily life, for every duty to which we are called, for every danger through which we pass, for every trial we undergo, for every circumstance in which we can be positioned, to find the Lord Jesus Christ a perfect Saviour? Is this the experience of the great majority of Christians? Is not the habit of life of the great mass who are entitled "believers" rather like this: they believe in what they call the possession of perfect acceptance in the sight of God, and they rest upon that. But they do not believe in a Christ who can keep the temper in the little daily frets of life; a Christ who can keep the lady when speaking to the cook and the kitchen-maid and the housemaid who are not what they ought to be; a Christ who can keep the man of business in his engagements day by day with trying clerks or labourers or workmen who are altogether short of their duties; a Christ who can keep a man in all the cares and anxieties of a limited income, when it may be some of the children or the wife is prepared to expend more than is proper; a Christ who can in the most severe strain of service keep the soul so restful, so calm, even so joyful, that, notwithstanding the human frame may be rapidly wearing out, the soul and the mind and the heart are never fretted and never disturbed, but rest in the Lord and wait patiently for Him.

I think that, as parents, we ought to know why our children pay such small heed to the charges and commandments placed upon them? It is because they see the fretful, fidgetty, nervous, vexed parents, speaking in an irritable manner that is not like the Lord Jesus; they hear of a great profession, of attending evangelistic meetings, and conferences upon holiness, and Mildmay Conferences and conventions, and other assemblies; and they find that these very Christians are quite as fretful, if not more so, than the worldly ones, less prepared to indulge them, of course, with regard to monetary expenditure and what they call their "pleasures," but actually far more bitter and far more sharp—indulgent this moment and harsh the next. Why? Because the soul of the believer too commonly knows not rest, and is not strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus. Thank God, we have, in these days, taken up that eighth verse of the first chapter very thoroughly—"Be thou not, therefore, ashamed of the testimony of our Lord." There is much confession and much profession, and it is well that it should be so; but it has its dangers, because, when Paul says, "Speak boldly," he goes on to add, "Thou, therefore, my son, be strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus."

There is an experience in which we live prospectively, looking forward to the time when Christ would keep the temper, would make one calm, and free from fretting, and joyful in the midst even of difficulties; a time when all these things seem to be just ahead, but not present. In that state one has not half enjoyed one's possession, has not in any sense yet apprehended the real meaning of the unsearchable riches of Christ. But, when we pass beyond that experience and know that we have Him, and keep the Christ, the ever powerful, the always present Christ, who makes all the provision we need for the daily life, no longer do we expect, but we know that He is here, and we can use Him moment by moment. Then, no blame is relegated to God, as I once heard a Christian say, "God does not give me grace enough: God does not look after me quite enough." I said, "You mean that Christ is not quite strong enough to manage your circumstances. Why not tell Him plainly that your circumstances are so peculiar that you are compelled to lose your temper?" She said, and said truly, "That is blasphemy." So it was. Most of us live a life of blasphemy, because we think that God cannot keep our temper, cannot keep us from fretting, cannot keep us quiet in the midst of daily duties and difficulties, cannot meet the demands of our particular circumstances. We ought to believe in a perfect Christ, "who is able to save to the uttermost those who come unto God by Him." Our lives would be very wonderful in the eyes of the world. I do think that, if we lived altogether to the glory of God, we should be, the whole family in heaven and earth, joined in one in the Lord Jesus Christ.

The addresses on Friday and Saturday did have special reference to the subjects of prayer, and we regret not to have space for notes of them.

Conference Hall, Mildmay Park.

Devout and earnest gatherings were held here, morning and evening, throughout the week, agreeable to the custom of the founder of the hall, Rev. William Pennefather. Mr. James E. Mathieson, the superintendent, presided, and a goodly number of local ministers spoke and prayed. A noticeable feature was the frequency of prayer offered by ladies, chiefly the Mildmay deaconesses, the result of the words "and sisters" used by Mr. Mathieson each day when calling for prayer. No one was named, but men and women were free to pray as they felt inclined, and the result was stimulating and comforting to the whole assembly. The severe weather necessarily thinned the attendance as compared with former years. The subjects suggested by the Evangelical Alliance were followed, save that, as is customary here, the Jews were put first, by having Monday devoted to them.

MONDAY.

Rev. John Wilkinson and Rev. A. N. Mackray spoke on Monday morning, the former recounting the story of God's gracious leading and faithfulness in connection with the Mildmay Mission to the Jews. The interest of the meeting was heightened by a brief address (interpreted) from Mr. Joseph Rabinowitz, from Kischeneff, South Russia, where, as is well known, he has been honoured of God in inaugurating a most remarkable movement among the Jews.

In the evening, Mr. J. E. Mathieson remarked that it appeared to him that not only had the Mildmay Mission to the Jews been used for the welfare of the Jewish people, but it had also been a means of instructing the Church of Christ as to the duties incumbent upon it on behalf of God's ancient people.

Rev. John Wilkinson gave an encouraging and interesting account of the progress of the Mission during the past year, dwelling especially upon the Hebrew New Testament Fund. The Mission had been established over ten years for work amongst those people all over the United Kingdom, and its influence had been felt in many other parts of the world. Some further details of the work of the year we hope to give in our next.

TUESDAY.

On Tuesday morning, after much earnest prayer, Rev. W. Spensley spoke on "Humiliation," the subject of the day. He said it was necessary on account of personal sins. Although the Christian is not a lawless sinner, yet he is not sinless; day by day he falls short of the perfect standard. We need to humble ourselves also on account of family sins, as parents and as children, and also because of national sins. If we truly humble ourselves, God will exalt us as families and as a nation.

Mr. J. Mathieson spoke very earnestly about the "Opium Curse." He thought the only way of getting rid of it was by constantly bringing it before the minds of the people, and he suggested that, as there would soon be congratulations presented to the Queen from all parts of the world, there should also be a united request to Her Majesty to abolish the Indian opium traffic.

General Field followed with some practical remarks on the topic of the day. In the course of his address he stated that during the past ten years he had spent every Sunday afternoon in visiting the poorest classes. Christ will be found among them, even where flesh and blood recoil from entering. Only the other day a poor, sinful, diseased man told him that although he had lived for years in the same place no one had ever visited him before.

The subject of Humiliation was continued in the evening, Rev. Alfred Bax, minister of Salter's Hall Chapel, Essex-road, giving the first address. There was a combination of sadness and earnestness in his tone as he pictured the manifold sins of the times, the selfishness of the rich, the rebellion of the poor, the greed of gold, the absolute indifference of the people in religious matters, and the consequent increasing difficulty of getting hold of them. Turning from the world to the Church, he asked, Are things much better? Our Lord's prayer was that his people might be one, and there was no greater barrier to conversion of the world than the want of union in the Church. Many Christians were rivals instead of being helpers one of another. Speaking of worldliness in the Church, he said it was breaking many a pastor's heart. The cry was "Come out!" that we might go back in another spirit to win it, whereas the fact was that the world was in the Church. This was manifest in marriages, in conversations, in maxims, and in amusements. These latter were hostile to the fine edge of spiritual life. The result of it all was that the Church was like Samson shorn of his locks, powerless for work and unable to cast out devils. The remedy for all this was the fresh anointing of the Holy Ghost, which it was the object of the meetings to secure.

The second address, given by Rev. P. Carmichael, of Highbury, was a brief exposition and application of a clause in Ps. li. 3: "My sin is ever before me," having special reference to personal sins. Where there is a true sense of sin we are willing to take the blame to ourselves, and not blame either our circumstances or the force of temptation. Temptation cannot touch us till we touch it. We must take God's version of sin and not ours. There is hope in this confession, for it is on the highroad to forgiveness, and though we might still remember our sins, it would be as pardoned, and not as guilty sinners.

WEDNESDAY.

"The Church" was the subject for prayer at the morning meeting. Rev. D. B. Hankin spoke on Eph. iv. God arranges unity with diversity. There is one God and Father of all, but many children with different gifts, some with one talent, some with ten. Protestant unity of love over minor differences is one thing, and Popish ecclesiastical uniformity, which stamps out all individuality, is another. One of the things he thought we ought to pray for in these days was a sanctified individuality, an inward discernment of the separate or various talents God has given to us as individuals, and a correct exercise of them; not casting ourselves in other people's moulds, but using our talents as God has entrusted them to us.

Mr. Finlay Gibson spoke on Privilege, Power, and Practice.

The first address in the evening was given by Rev. J. H. Shaw, the new vicar of St. Paul's, Ball's-pond. From John xvii. 20—22, he discoursed on the unity of the Church. The secret of this unity was a spiritual unity, depending upon union with the Father and the Son. The means of this unity was the power of the Holy Ghost. Its result was a visible abiding in the love of Christ, so that the world might exclaim, as it did of the early Church, "See how these Christians love one another!"

Dr. J. L. Maxwell took 1 Thess. i. 2—10, and dwelt successively on the three things for which Paul gave thanks, as seen in the Thessalonian believers, viz., their work of faith, their labour of love, and their patience of hope. His main point was that we should so receive the Word of God as to follow it, regardless of all consequences. This would doubtless lead to opposition on the part of others; but then God would give, to counterbalance this opposition, the joy of the Holy Ghost. "The patience of hope" he specially applied to the hope of Christ's appearing, contending that the sight of the Church in this attitude would impress the world more than anything else.

THURSDAY.

Rev. Gordon Calthrop and Rev. James Stephens gave addresses this morning, when the subject was "Prayer for Families." In the evening a charmingly suggestive address was given by Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston on the cure of the lunatic son, Matt. xvii. 14—21. Dwelling on the encouragement afforded by this case, he said: 1. Bring the children to Jesus. The moment the parents did this they got an answer. 2. Note the particular evils, and deal accordingly. 3. Deal individually with the children, and let them know they are being prayed for. 4. Don't make religion the dullest thing in the world. The first thing some parents need is to have a prayer meeting for themselves. This work must be done by love, and not by scolding. 5. Cling close to Jesus yourselves. 6. Never despair. How often, when in the Australian bush, four days from a telegraph office, did we long to telegraph to the parents of some wandering boy his happy conversion. Even if they did not see the immediate fruit of their efforts, let parents pray and labour on.

Dr. William Gauld, of the Bethnal-green Medical Mission, and a returned missionary from China, further expounded the duties of parents. Among other things, he laid stress on the regular conducting of family prayer, and emphasised singing as part of that exercise. But his strong point was that children should be taught from the Bible from their earliest days, as the after-life was very largely determined thereby.

FRIDAY.

The meeting was crowded on Friday morning. Rev. Edward A. Stuart, of St. James's, Holloway, spoke from 2 Kings vii. 9: The story of the deliverance of Samaria from famine by the agency of the poor lepers. After sketching the scene, he said the world now was very much the same as that city then—famine within, leprosy without. This húngry world was for ever asking—What is truth? What is the right? and, Has love no future? The first of these questions was asked alike by the thinkers in India and the ignorant in Africa. Light! more light! was the soul's cry. And only one answer could be given: "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." The second question, What is the right, and how can I attain to it? was an equally conscious want. Can your God give peace? was the cry of the weary soul, Yes; but it was peace founded on righteousness. Our Lord was first King of Righteousness, and next King of Peace. Has love no future? was the third question. Must all my loves and affections perish in the grave? No! Love has found a ransom, and that ransom is the Son of God. The Christian Church only sends out a few search-parties, instead of sending her armies to gather the spoil. Let us tell these starving millions of the bread of life.

Mr. Eugene Stock followed with some cheering facts clustering round four Looks: Look back (Isa. li. 1, 2), Look around (John iv. 35), Look forward (Titus ii. 13), Look up (Heb. xii. 2). He specially dwelt upon the second—Look around; and by pointing out some small beginnings of fifty years ago in India, in China, in Africa, in New Zealand, and in Japan, and contrasting these with the glorious sheaves gathered in from those countries now, showed most conclusively how God blesses every effort to preach the Gospel to every creature. We understood him to say that most of these facts were embodied in a small pamphlet, just issued by the Church Missionary Society, in connection with Her Majesty's Jubilee Year, so that our readers may secure them easily.

In the evening Rev. G. A. Bennets said many people take a gloomy view of the signs of the times, and are downcast because many of the prophecies relating to Antichrist are being fulfilled. But there is another side to the argument—that if these prophecies are being fulfilled, will not also the glorious prophecies relating to our Lord's return be fulfilled? What encouragement there ought to be when we contemplate those sublime prophecies!

Mr. B. Broomhall spoke on the privilege and power of prayer.

was given by Pastor Tonjoroff, who remarked on the great privileges the English people enjoy in respect of religious toleration. He was delighted at seeing the spirit of unity which prevailed amongst the Christians with whom he had come in contact. The English people were unable to comprehend the bitterness which animated the different religious sects in Bulgaria, and the blessed influence which Christ's Gospel worked upon the hearts of those in Bulgaria who had accepted it. He had seen representatives of four or five different sects, who had given up their old religion and embraced the Gospel, sitting quietly learning together at the same table. If only the love of God and the union of Christian fellowship, as taught in God's Word, ruled the hearts of all nationalities, what bitterness of spirit and social and religious curses would disappear.

Exeter Hall.

On Monday thanks were given to God for having kept this country out of war during the past year, and a similar mercy was supplicated for the year just entered upon. Thanks were also given for the missionary zeal which had been stirred up during the past twelve months, by which many souls had been brought to God. The address was given by Rev. Charles Moinet, who selected as his theme two verses from Psalm cxlvii., being an exhortation to praise God. We must be persuaded of the goodness of God if we are to praise Him aright. We can see his goodness as we look back upon the past year. The Church has been able to enter upon fresh fields of labour, and God's Word has been carried more than ever to the outcast and the vicious. Infidelity has been more noisy and demonstrative than before, but the more noisy it is the shallower it becomes. Christians have every reason to take heart and be of good courage. Then, continuing the Psalmist's theme, it is good to sing praises to God, for it is pleasant. When people have the conviction in their hearts that God is good, they will be convinced that it is a pleasant and enjoyable thing to praise Him. Let us all try to get into that way of thinking—that religion is not a dolorous thing, but that it exalts, ennobles, and fills people with gladness.

On Tuesday Rev. Burman Cassin delivered the address, founded on Ps. li. 7, "Purge me with hyssop, and I shall be clean; wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow." He referred to the dazzling whiteness of snow, and then went on to say that David's prayer was bold, but he did not think he was too bold, because in asking of God in earnest prayer a man was made courageous. He remembered Bishop Ryle saying he hoped to be able to repeat the 51st Psalm when he was dying. Some people thought they had ceased to sin, but it was a most dangerous state of mind to get into. They might not, like David, commit adultery or murder, but they had the same heart that David had. God allowed David to fall, however, for a purpose; if he had never been guilty of heinous sin, that Psalm would never have been written. People might be good outwardly, performing religious observances, and so on, but not purified within; and lacking that, they were only going, as Bunyan put it, "a cleaner way to hell." They wanted to know the heinousness of sin before their hearts could be really renewed—to know what was blacker than blackness before they could realise what was whiter than whiteness—"whiter than snow."

On Thursday Rev. L. Forster based his remarks on Deut. vi. 6: "And these words, which I command thee this day, shall be in thine heart: and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up," &c. He described these and the verses following as a wonderful passage of Scripture, giving an admirable view of family life. The family, said Mr. Forster, was the oldest institution we had. It was found in Greece and Rome, Egypt, Persia, and Judæa, and was always treated with reverence and respect. Family life had, therefore, been had preserved it. Being divine in its origin, and therefore immortal, it was highly important that the institution should be sanctified by grace. The reason why so many things occurred to mar the life of families was that God was not acknowledged by them, and the family institution, instead of being a blessing, was often a curse. The family rose and partook of their meal, the father went to his employment, and the children were sent to school without God's blessing being invoked. The training of a child was a duty too often neglected. The children were important from a personal point of view, as they might be destined to fill a part in the world which might be a blessing or a curse to thousands. But, beyond this, they were destined for eternity; and when they were in course of training, how important it was that this should be remembered — that all who were entrusted with the training and teaching of children should teach wisely and well, and with an eye to the glory of God. Passing on to another section of the day's subject, "that the blessing of God might rest on universities, colleges, and schools," the speaker urged that in all scholastic institutions the Bible should be honoured. If our country was to be saved from atheism, infidelity, and impurity, we must take to our Bibles more than we have ever done.

The last meeting of the series arranged by the Young Men's Christian Society at Exeter Hall was held on Friday, and was fully attended. Rev. Dr. Draper, of New York, gave the address. On the subject of missions, he said that the heathen and Mohammedans were increasing seventy times faster than those who were saved to Christ, and even in Christian lands the Church was scarcely holding its own. Infidelity and impurity went on, and the Church did not increase as it ought. The great need of to-day was for wonders to be performed, and that could not be done except by power from on high. Pentecost was given to show what could be done again. He believed that the Christian Church was able to cope with the man of sin on the present lines—through Calvary and Pentecost. It was the want of faith in seeking after the Holy Spirit which crippled the Church.

Meetings were also held at Powis Hall, Bayswater, and in different places in South London. Various correspondents inform us of meetings, encouraging as to numbers and the spirit of union and prayerfulness, held at Bath, Oldham, Redruth, Devizes, and Edinburgh. At the last-named place, it is stated that one of the fruits of the late mission by Rev. H. P. Hughes has been a largely-increased spirit of brotherly love and union between Christians of different denominations.

CORRECTION.—In our report of the meeting at Harley House in last week's number, it was stated that at Dr. H. G. Guinness's meeting for men, in Melbourne, 400 to 500 men entered the inquiry-room; this number rose for prayer, but only 100 went into the vestry.

BEXHILL-ON-SEA.—A House of Rest in connection with the Evangelical Mission, Hastings, was opened here on January 3, for the reception of workers needing rest and change. Meetings were held during the day. It is proposed to hold a meeting for Christians weekly.

SAILORS IN RATCLIFF HIGHWAY.—Seldom has a finer body of merchant seamen been seen than those assembled together last Monday week at the Seamen's Christian Friend Society's Institution in Ratcliff Highway. After tea, in the reading-rooms, the chapel was crowded with seamen, and the meeting was presided over by Mr. M. H. Hodder. Earnest words were spoken by Mr. John Bell, Rev. G. J. Hill, Mr. Isaacs, Mr. Blow, and Miss Messer, and several brief and telling testimonies were given by Christian seamen, who exhorted their shipmates to begin the New Year by trusting in Jesus. Reference was made during the meeting to the terrible loss on the previous day of the Duke of Connaught, with fourteen seamen, and it was stated that one of the Society's Loan Libraries had been placed on board before the ill-fated ship left port. At the close of the meeting nearly three hundred parcels, consisting of woollen socks, cuffs, Testaments, books, &c., were presented as New-Year's gifts to the sailors. The mission was A "TWELFTH-NIGHT" FEAST.

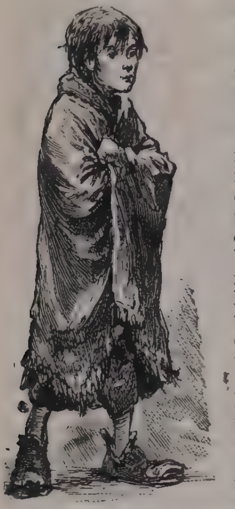
DR. BARNARDO AND LONDON WAIFS.

That high priest of Positivism, Mr. Frederic Harrison, has lately been expatiating on his pet theme, "The Enthusiasm of Humanity." A fine phrase, truly, and the thing it represents is what this weary world wants; but it wants the substance, not the shadow. Why do not Mr. Harrison and his disciples come down from the region of exalted abstractions and glittering generalities, and condescend to give us a concrete illustration or two of the faith that is in them? Why, for instance, do they not collect a couple of thousand wastrels from our city slums, and bring to bear on these items of humanity a little of the enthusiasm which is bursting for expression within them? If they would show their faith by a little work of that sort, they would do somewhat to convince a sceptical generation of the reality of this nineteenth century Gospel of theirs.

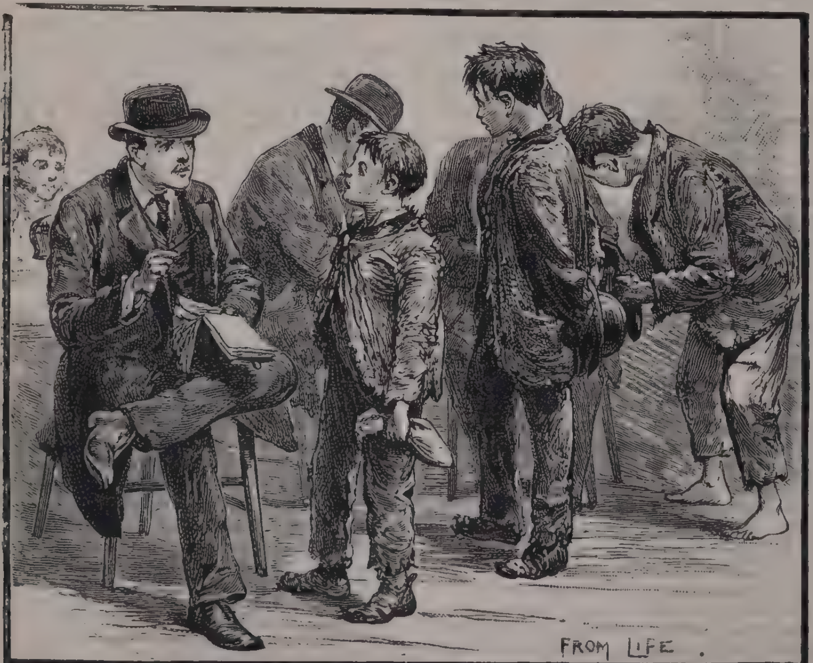


Meantime, humanity is in too parlous a state to wait the convenience of comfortable, easy-chair Positivists—or Negativists, as they might more properly be called. If it were not for the real enthusiasm of some of the followers of that antiquated faith known as Christianity, the cause of humanity would be far more hopeless than it is. We wish Mr. Frederic Harrison would attend one of Dr. Barnardo's yearly feasts for London waifs at the Edinburgh Castle. If he had been there on Wednesday evening last week, even he would have found it a little difficult to enthuse rapturously about a human society that produces such a spectacle as that gathering afforded. But he would have found ample material for his next New Year's address without going so far afield as either the Irish or the Eastern Question. And yet it is not hard to get up some enthusiasm about these human atoms themselves, however much we may deplore the state of society that makes them what they are. Comparing this motley crowd of lads and lasses with former collections in "The Castle," we fancied we could detect some degree of improvement in their appearance. Certainly they were dirty enough and unkempt enough to qualify them for kinship with any savage tribe, but they did not seem on the whole quite so ragged and starved and woe-begone as in some previous years. There were exceptional cases, of course, and these the keen eye of the artist did not fail to detect, as our readers will observe. The degree of lung power they put forth showed the abounding vitality that had survived all the hard conditions by which they are so heavily handicapped in the start of life's journey, and suggested wondrous possibilities either for good or for ill. It will certainly not be Dr. Barnardo's fault if the latter alternative prevails, and they go back to the nameless "warrens of the poor" to "blacken in the city slime."

Where did they come from, and how did they get there? Answering the second question first, we may say that they came by special invitation. Quoth Dr. Barnardo, in Night and Day: "My helpers scour the streets daily for ragged homeless lads and girls, and a strange collection of all sorts and conditions of young folk is being continually hauled into the net and landed safe within the doors at Stepney Causeway." But the "strange collection" before us was the result of special and nightly visits for some time past to London's slums and haunts of misery and vice. As to whence they came, we have it on the Doctor's authority that they represented the whole area of central London, bounded by Islington in the north, Westminster in the west, Lambeth and Deptford in the south, and Shadwell and Poplar in the east—the waifdom of London focussed, and composing a sight unparalleled, we may hope, in the wide sweep of the planet.

The conditions amid which they were found can best be described in Dr. Barnardo's own words:—

> The children present to-night are for the most part genuine waifs of the streets. They were, as in former years, invited by tickets distributed very carefully in common lodging-houses, in places of evil resort, in the streets, at railway stations, along the Thames Embankment, at the public rests on the bridges, in all the London markets, by the waterside, and in some of the worst courts and alleys of the metropolis. The greatest possible precautions have been taken to distribute tickets to those only who were found to be either homeless or living by themselves in common lodging-houses, or with some relative in a "furnished room."



What could even Dr. Barnardo do with two thousand young rapscallions like these? Well, he could feed them, at any rate; and he did, in such royal fashion that they renounced for the moment the creed of poor Oliver Twist, and actually declared, with one overwhelming shout, that they wanted no more—at least, not just then. But what else was to be done with them? They could be talked to, of course; that is, if they would listen—but there's the rub. The host of the evening, with his clear, musical, ringing voice (backed by a small boy with a trumpet); his imperative manner, and his display of some tempting baits, had no difficulty in gaining their ear, as he told out his plans and purposes, and imparted his good advice. But even his powers of persuasive speech could not overcome the scepticism with which these wide-awake youngsters received the statement that he had the power of looking into their eyes and seeing right out at the back of their heads! There is clearly no professor of metaphor in the college of the slums. Any other man who essays to talk, and especially to sermonise, on these occasions is not to be envied, and, considering the circumstances, Mr. J. Bennett Anderson and Dr. Harry Guinness succeeded marvellously well. Year by year these young savages seem to be getting a little more civilised, without the aid of Mr. Harrison; and if Dr. Barnardo is spared another two or three decades to issue his annual invitations, we suppose the Positivist prophet's opportunity will be well-nigh gone.

Bread and butter, and cake and tea, are good, and so is pious advice; but, with active stomachs and short memories, what about the morrow? Ay, that is the awkward question that obtrudes itself, and almost lands one in despair. We know that Dr. Barnardo's heart is big enough to take in all the two thousand; but his Homes, unfortunately, are not; neither is his purse. Indeed, we learn from his official Press "Memorandum" that the Homes before Wednesday week were nearly filled with the 1700 boys and girls already in them. "But additional temporary premises have been taken so as to admit, at least, a number of those now in the Hall, who, it is hoped, may be persuaded to abandon their shifty, hand-to-mouth lives, and submit themselves to ordered discipline." How these elect ones are chosen we have often told, and have not the space to redescribe it now. We may say, in a word, that by a process of careful selection over a hundred were admitted to the shelter of the Homes. The larger engraving gives a view of the cross-examining ordeal through which these youngsters have to go before their fate is sealed for better or for worse. To quote again, and finally, from the Memorandum:—

> Eventually the most eligible of the boys and girls admitted, after passing through the period of thorough training in some industrial persuit, which the regulations of the Home enforce, and after having proved themselves honest, industrious, as well as physically and morally capable, will either be emigrated to the colonies, sent to sea, or placed in domestic service, and in other employments in the United Kingdom.

Work like this speaks so strongly for itself that no advocacy of ours is needed. Our chief trouble is about the remaining 1900 for whom there seem no such bright visions of the future. Is it any use appealing once more to Mr. Frederic Harrison to put his theories to the proof?

CHURCH WORK IN SOUTH LONDON.—Encouraged by God's blessing on the services held for nearly six years at the Royal Victoria Hall, New-cut, Lambeth, the committee have availed themselves of a favourable opportunity of extending the work, and have taken for the months of February, March, and April, Sanger's Amphitheatre (late Astley's), Westminster Bridge-road. This theatre is in a very poor neighbourhood, and thousands are passing every Sunday evening who never attend any place of worship. The hon. sec. is Mr. Neale F. Horne, Bucklebury, Brandram-road, Lee, S.E.

EVANGELISTIC MISSION.—The distress caused by the continued inclement weather has taxed to the utmost the energies of the workers connected with the Evangelistic Mission in relieving cases of need; some of the cases found have been truly deplorable—families without food or fire. A free tea was given to seven hundred of the unemployed at Kilburn-hall, on Wednesday, January 5, but tickets might have been given to thousands of such persons, hundreds having to leave. The meeting proved of the deepest interest throughout, those present listening attentively to the Gospel

GRIPPED BY AN OCTOPUS:

A THRILLING TALE OF THE SEA.

BY AGNES E. WESTON.

EXTRACT.

"... It was the terrible octopus! How his suckers burned and blistered! and how his hairy arms gripped and twisted! I had been near death scores of times; but never near such a dreadful death. I was not a man of prayer: but the words, 'Lord, save me! save me!' rose from my heart, although I could not open my lips. If ever I realised what it was like to be drawn by the devil into hell, I realised it in those few seconds. The octopus dragged me into the shadow of the rock; and there I saw poor old Paterson's body, two of the creature's arms were round it; he was gone, and I was to be the second victim.

"Through the good providence of God, I thought of my knife. My left arm was bound to my side, but my right hand was free; and as I drew the knife, I caught sight of the body of the reptile, as the arms were drawing me within reach of the beak. I had been down so long that my ears were roaring; so it was now or never —I had only a few seconds to spare. I believe now that God strengthened my arm and guided my aim. I struck straight at the jelly-like body until pieces floated round me, and the arms let go their grip; and, thank God, I was saved. I had just strength to strike out for the surface; and I reached it as near dead as any man could be who had still a little life left in him.

"The awful picture was burnt into my brain—the fearful monster; his resistless power; and the stark, white corpse of my old shipmate. I remembered that I had read in God's Book that the devil seeks whom he may devour; and I felt if I had never believed in sin or a devil before, I did then. My poor shipmate was a victim; he had got him fast enough, and I called to mind many old chums who had caroused with me, and I had called them 'jolly good fellows'; but now I saw that, like Paterson, they were in the devil's grip, and that he had destroyed them body and soul in hell, and why wasn't I destroyed? Why? Only through the sovereign mercy of God, who willeth not the death of a sinner, but rather that he may be converted and live...."

A CHOICE GIFT-BOOK FOR A YOUNG LADY.

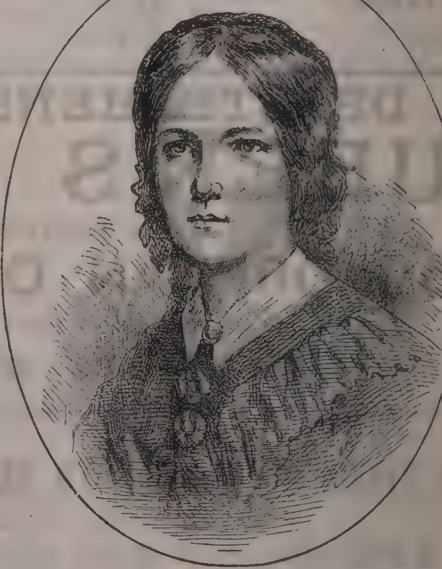
Nineteen Beautiful Years.



RECORDS OF THE LIFE OF A BELOVED SISTER.

By Frances E. Willard.

President of the "Women's National Christian Temperance Union of America."

With Introduction by BISHOP FOSTER; and Prefatory Note by the Poet, J. G. WHITTIER.

SOME EXTRACTS FROM THE MANY APPRECIATIVE REVIEWS.

"We cordially endorse the opinion expressed by the poet Whittier, who says, 'It is a charming piece of biography.' We have no doubt it will find many sympathetic readers."—Temperance Record, Dec. 9.

"For elder girls Nineteen Beautiful Years, by FRANCES E. WILLARD, should be very helpful and stimulating. It is an affectionate record of the singularly beautiful life of the authoress's sister, Miss Mary Willard."—Christian World, Dec. 16.

"A book that may be safely put into a young lady's hands, with the assured confidence that it will serve to strengthen and deepen all influences for good."—The Christian, Dec. 16.

"Mary Willard, the subject of this biography, was as gifted as she was good. The delineation of her character and the portrayal of her life teach a beautiful lesson, and so invest with world-wide interest a book which, at first sight, might seem interesting alone to the friends of the heroine. A capital gift-book for a young lady."

The Bookseller, Dec. 16.

"It is less a record of action than of the yearning after a higher life, and striving to its attainment. The beauty of the life is written in the face of a portrait which accompanies the memoir."—Church of England Sunday-school Magazine, Jan., 1887.

"A book which is introduced by a commendatory note from the pen of the venerable Whittier is sure to make for itself many friends; and its merits are such that it amply deserves them."

Baptist Magazine, Jan. 1887.

"A most interesting biography and memoir of a girl's life. Its details are charmingly written by her sister, Frances E. Willard. The exquisite portrait, and the details of the pure life of a girl who lived but nineteen years, make us hope that the book will find its way into numberless households. It cannot fail to inspire girls and women with a desire to follow in the steps of such a character. It is not a dull, goody book of preachments; but teems with close observations and lively perceptions of the false, the true, and the noble in life. A better, purer present to girls and young women cannot be found."

Ladies' Treasury, Jan. 1887.

"In this memorial volume, Miss Willard tells the story of her sister's life—a life that deeply touched and moulded hers; and to which the world owes much more than at first sight might appear. The name of Frances E. Willard is well known to the world in connection with the Temperance movement; and it is quite evident that the elder sister owes much to the influence of the younger one, whose brief but beautiful life is here recorded. The poet Whittier writes a prefatory note; and Bishop Foster writes an introduction. Neither of these are needed to make those who read the story itself feel thankful to Miss Willard for this volume. . . . We very heartily commend it to all who wish to lead noble lives. If nobility is simple goodness, then a truly noble life is here presented to the world."—Irish Congregational Magazine, Jan. 1887.

"A pathetic sketch of a young American girl's life."—The Graphic, Dec. 25.

"'NINETEEN BEAUTIFUL YEARS' is most touching and interesting; so thoroughly natural and unconventional was her life and the expression of her thoughts. It is good to see how, through all the different modes of thought and teaching, and many mistakes perhaps all round, God draws hearts to rest in Him, and trains characters to serve Him."

Home Friend, Jan. 1887.

"The title of the book seems aptly chosen, it being a record of the life of a young lady possessing rare natural talents; and distinguished by the spirit of piety. It is largely composed of extracts from her own diary, which show better than any observer can do the workings of the inner life of the soul. The beauty of holiness is seen throughout."

Footsteps of Truth, Jan. 1887.

"The young girl whose short life is here portrayed by a sisterly hand was a charming character, and exemplified the graces of a Christian experience. The pages of her diary are a revelation of the writer's bright heart and keen observation of her surroundings; and the portrait and pictures are capital. A delightful biography."

The Christian Commonwealth, Dec. 30, 1886.

"Miss Willard here traces, with a hand as skilful as the heart that guides it is loving, the life of her beloved sister Mary. It is an American biography, but will be read here with as much avidity, and will excite as intense admiration as if it were English. . . . Worthy of being selected as a choice gift-book to young ladies."

Methodist New Connexion Magazine, Jan. 1887.

"Embalms the memory of a young American lady, who passed from this life after a brief term of less than twenty years. Such a biography might appear unlikely to contain many points of interest; but Miss Willard's tender spirituelle narrative is the history of a soul rarely beautiful, unselfish, and sincere. The passages quoted from Mary E. Willard's school-girl journal are almost unique in their unaffected yet often high-reaching thought. Bishop Foster, in his introduction to this book, writes of it as the most entrancing of all stories—the story of the genesis and growth of a redeemed soul. We should like to place this book in the hands of all the girls we know."

Word and Work, Dec. 16.

"This is a charming volume by Frances E. Willard, who is so widely known and honoured for her work of Christian philanthropy. The book is the tender and loving record of the author's sister, Mary E. Willard, whose existence was sanctified by fervent religion, and graced by true womanly dignity. Every page contains sweet thoughts culled from this young girl's diary; with reference to which Miss Willard expresses the hope that 'many a bright-eyed youth and maiden may rise from its perusal with braver hearts to do that which is right; with firmer faith in the unseen powers that work for those who seek the truth; and with a confirmed resolve to be more gentle and helpful, more diligent to win from life its truest joys.'"

EVANGELISATION and the CHURCHES

By Rev. GEO. F. PENTECOST, D.D.*

The tendency to make the church an end, rather than a means to an end, is one of the causes of our failure in the work of evangelising.

Churches are established and maintained more as folds for the flock than as bases of operation for the great work of evangelisation. The church ought to be the home of believers only in the sense that the camp is the home of the army; a place in which the army is gathered, drilled, and cared for, in order to the great work of conquest. If our church is in any sense an army, it is more so in the sense of an army of occupation than of conquest.

More thought and care are bestowed upon the question, "How can we best promote the prosperity of our church?" than upon the question, "How can we make our church more efficient in the work of evangelisation?" In the cities vastly more care and work and anxiety are expended in building finer and larger churches than in aggressive evangelistic work. The wealth and social position of a church is more remarked than its efficiency in winning souls to Christ. The truth is, that, the church being the end, and not the means, when it becomes large and flourishing as to members and resources, the end is reached. Anxiety for souls ceases for the reason that the church does not stand in need of more members or more means.

In fact, at present the average church is intent on taking care of itself and commuting all responsibility for the evangelisation of the world, by paying a meagre amount of money annually to various outside societies which they have appointed to do this work for them. The churches have lost the evangelistic spirit, and are not themselves urgent about the work. If, instead of being taken up with the church and its local prosperity, we knew and "considered the fewness of Christians, the huge multitudes of infidels," and the teeming masses of people all around us who are living carlessly and recklessly without God, and without Christ, and without thought of death and eternity, we would be mourning and praying over their lost estate, and stirring up all our energies, and putting forth all our resources to accomplish their salvation. Our care would not be for the church as an institution, but for the souls of men; using the church meanwhile as an instrument and means to that, and not regarding it as an end. If we gave ourselves to the work of saving souls, God would take care of the church. No individual Christian can make substantial progress in spiritual life by for ever dwelling upon his own religious well-being; so neither can any church make progress toward the Divine ideals, by concentrating her energies upon herself; and yet this is the very blunder we are making.

Another cause of the decline of the evangelical spirit and work in the churches is to be found in the fact that pastoral theology has largely supplanted evangelical theology. We have ignored or set aside the distinct evangelistic gift as provided for by the risen Christ, and sought to merge it with that of pastor and teacher. This has resulted in its utter subordination, and almost total neglect. The work of teaching and edifying has been carried forward at the expense of evangelising. It is safe to say that nine-tenths of the preaching of our pulpits is pastoral rather than evangelistic. I do not say that evangelical truth is not preached; but that it is preached rather from the standpoint of the pastor than from that of the evangelist—rather with the intention of grounding the believer in the truth, than of leading the unconverted to repentance and faith. As a result of this neglect on the part of the church and pastor to make the ministry distinctly and immediately evangelistic, the members of the church lose the evangelistic spirit, and drop into the habit of looking upon the church as a place of religious resort, for their own comfort and edification, rather than as a training school for Christian activity in the direction of soul-saving. New people coming into the church are measured by their wealth and social position, and not by the spiritual force they bring with them, and their availability for the work of evangelisation. A worldly courtesy, rather than spiritual anxiety, prevails in the church's intercourse with the world.

This stagnation of evangelistic life reacts upon the members of the church in another way. Since they are not taught and trained to seek for the conversion of men, they are left almost uninterruptedly to the pursuit of worldly ends, and thus the ascendancy of secular and personal interest over the things of the kingdom of God is almost everywhere seen. There is not one layman in twenty in our churches whom we may call upon to do work in an inquiry-room, or send to make a visit to an unconverted soul with the view of leading him to Christ. The whole burden of the spiritual work is thrown upon the pastor and the very few brethren who may be found to help in these things.

The attempt to combine the evangelistic with the pastoral gift has buried that gift and put added responsibilities and burdens upon the pastor and teacher which are greater than he can bear. The fewness of conversions leaves many of the churches weak, and so far imperils their very existence that the energy which should be expended in the aggressive work of saving souls is devoted to the task of saving the church.

In my judgment it is an utter impossibility for any one man to do what is required of him in the way of pastoral oversight, the work of teaching, and the general care of the church, both as to its spiritual and temporal interests, and at the same time give himself efficiently to the work of effecting the conversion of men. Nevertheless we are all oppressed, year by year, with the lamentable and indisputable fact that, as a great body of Christian people, we are not even measurably discharging our obligation to Christ and the world in the direction of evangelisation.

FOR THE NEW YEAR.

"Ye have not passed this way heretofore" (Josh. iii. 4).

"This is not your rest" (Micah ii. 10).

"Speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward" (Exod. xiv. 15).

"As thy days, so shall thy strength be" (Deut. xxxiii. 25).

"I will be with thee: I will not fail thee, nor forsake thee" (Josh. i. 5).

"I will not leave you comfortless: I will come to you" (John xiv. 18).

"Behold, I am with thee, and will keep thee in all places" (Gen. xxviii. 15).

"I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness. Fear not; I will help thee" (Isa. xli. 10, 13).

"This God is our God for ever and ever" (Ps. xlviii. 14).

"Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on Thee: because he trusteth in Thee" (Isa. xxvi. 3).

"The Lord is my Shepherd; I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures: He restoreth my soul" (Ps. xxiii. 1, 2).

With kind regards and best wishes from

MARTIN HOPE SUTTON.

SOLDIERS' HOME, DOVER.—This Home was established in new quarters on October 30 last, and since then the numbers attending have increased beyond the most sanguine expectations. The new Home, situated near the Infantry Barracks, has considerable advantages over the old one, and the workers feel intensely thankful that the Lord has opened a new door for them. Some alterations and improvements are needed, in order to adapt the building to the requirements of a Soldiers' Home. Miss Wright, 118, Snargate-street, Dover, is the Lady Superintendent.

THE LATE REV. H. J. GAMBLE.

A MOURNFUL company assembled at mid-day on Saturday last in the Congregational Chapel at Upper Clapton to take part in the funeral obsequies of Rev. H. J. Gamble, who had filled the pastorate there for the long period of thirty-four years. He had been for years in feeble health, and last week the summons came. Many ministerial brethren of different communions were present at the funeral. Among others, Rev. E. A. Stefford, vicar of Stoke Newington, took part in the services at the grave, having travelled a hundred miles in order to be present. He bore his testimony to the many high qualities of the deceased, and spoke of the kindly and friendly terms on which himself and the late Mr. Gamble had worked in pastorates which were side by side. Rev. W. Marshall had previously, in the chapel, spoken forceful and weighty words on the people's loss. He spoke of the late minister as one who loved the work of the ministry and the preaching the word. Never physically strong, he took little part in general outside work, and spent much time in his study. He was full of the Bible; and therefore his sermons were full of Christ. Preaching was the great work of his life.

On Sunday morning Rev. Lander Parkyn preached from the text: "Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life" (John vi. 68). The discourse was a powerful and sustained argument in favour of resurrection and immortality. In the evening Rev. George Martin, of Upper Norwood, conducted the worship, and preached.

ZENANA MISSIONS.

On Friday afternoon, in connection with the Week of Prayer, there was held at Exeter Hall a gathering of ladies and gentlemen interested in Zenana Missions. There was a numerous attendance, representatives of seven Zenana missionary societies being present; and the lower hall was well filled. Mr. James E. Mathieson, who presided, referred to two characteristics of the present century—one being that the guilty silence imposed by the clergy upon the laity, and accepted by the latter, had been broken, and the laity were now able to go forth to proclaim the Gospel; the other was the guilty silence imposed upon women. This also had been broken, and they, too, went forth, but the work they had to do, and which they ought to have been able to take up earlier, could hardly be overtaken in this century. This was a Jubilee year, but while honour was being done to her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen, should it not also be particularly a year for the King of kings and Lord of lords? For every man who went out now, two women should go. As regarded America, it was far in advance of what England had done in the matter of obtaining the influence and the labour of women. Prayer was offered for an outpouring of the Holy Spirit on all woman teachers of Christ in heathen and Mahommedan lands; that the Spirit of God may open the eyes of the peoples of these lands, and that Hindoos as a people may be delivered from the debasing influence of child marriage; also that God's Holy Spirit may rest upon the women of the churches at home. Supplication was likewise made for committees and officers of Zenana Societies, and all who helped or were candidates for the work; and that doors at present closed may be opened for this service, and all undue interference with the work in heathen and Mahommedan lands may be mercifully averted. The proceedings throughout were marked by great fervency and zeal.

REV. J. R. MACDOUGALL.—The health of Mr. Macdougall, of Florence, says The Free Church of Scotland Monthly, has not lately been so good as his friends would wish it to be. His long and ardent service in the interests of the Chiesa Libera, together with anxieties in reference to the important project of union between that body and the Waldensian Church, have told upon him, and he has been reluctantly obliged, under medical advice, to take a few months' rest in this country. That he may be restored in full health to a city where his ministry, his evangelistic zeal, and personal qualities have been such an attraction to multitudes of visitors during these past years, must be the prayer of all who wish well to our stations on the Continent and to Italy.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving a portrait and sketch of Rev. Dr. J. Marshall Lang, Barony Church, Glasgow.

Mr. and Mrs. Elbert Clarke, of Ikwesi Lamaci, Natal, arrived in England on Friday last, after twelve years of labour among the Kaffirs. They bring four children to leave at school, and cheering tidings of Kaffir converts.

Mr. J. S. Smithson, late of Dublin, writing from Norfolk, U.S.A., says:—"Am trying a little work amongst the coloured people. Captain Moreton is here, working in the Second Presbyterian Church. Pray for us. All kind wishes to friends at home." We are sure the request for prayer for these dear and much-esteemed brethren will be heartily responded to.

We are daily receiving from mission workers in various parts of the Metropolis heartrending accounts of the distress abounding in the districts where they labour. Some of the experiences of deserving poor are touching in the extreme. The funds with which many of our readers have generously supplied us are exhausted, if any others should feel led to entrust us with more, we shall be glad to see them properly distributed.

We have received a number of suggestions for the commemoration of the Queen's Jubilee, by philanthropic actions of a more or less permanent character. But unless such schemes are backed up by influential support their publication is only useless and bewildering.

We trust the valuable collation of texts given by our venerable friend Mr. Martin Hope Sutton (p. 13) will be appreciated by our readers and made a great blessing to them. We ask attention also to the letter by Rev. J. B. Figgis, of Brighton, on the Mesmeric frenzy in that town.

Dr. Walsh, the rector of St. Stephen's Protestant Church in Dublin, was recently written to by the Secretary of the Roman Catholic Archbishop of Dublin, and requested to attend before an "ecclesiastical tribunal," which, apparently, had to decide upon some questions in connection with a mixed marriage. Dr. Walsh, looking upon the communication as a citation rather than a simple request, declined to attend before a tribunal of the nature and objects of which he was unacquainted. The correspondence rapidly assumed a very warm tone, and the Archbishop's Secretary was anxious to have it kept secret, but Dr. Walsh insisted upon his right to make it public, saying, with great force—

> It is surely a public, not a private matter that the Church of Rome, as appears from your letters, claims authority to annul a marriage, and that in a case in which a Bill for a divorce a vinculo is pending in the House of Lords.

The correspondence has therefore appeared in The Dublin Daily Express, and, even allowing that there is ground for the opinion that the first communication was a request rather than a citation, in these days, when Rome is making such astounding and unwarrantable claims, we are not surprised that Dr. Walsh should have looked upon the matter as an attempt to bring him under a tribunal of an illegal kind.

☞ To prevent delay in the execution of orders, it is specially requested by the Publishers that all business letters may be directed to the firm (Morgan & Scott). Also that personal letters for either partner may be so marked.

There has been some strong expression of adverse opinion with regard to an announcement recently made, that the preacher in a Dublin place of worship would wear a Chinese costume; and grave exception has, very rightly, been taken to the growing custom of calling in the aid of sensational attractions to draw people to "charity" sermons and religious gatherings. Surely there can be no real need for these baits, for the Gospel has not lost its power, and wherever it is preached in sincerity and truth, the declaration will not be ineffectual.

The "Congregation of Rites" at Rome is about to beatify Sir Thomas More and other champions of the Romish Apostasy during the reigns of Henry VIII., Edward VI., and Elizabeth, and it is stated that, for some reason which has not been made public, the process of "beatification" will be carried through as promptly as possible. After the ceremonies have been completed, although More and the others cannot be canonised and elevated to the dignity of saints for some time longer, they may be honoured in the liturgy, their relics may be placed in "consecrated altar stones," and their names may be given to new chapels.

In connection with this "beatification," it is interesting to note that in Chelsea Old Church there is a marble slab upon the chancel wall, with More's own Latin inscription cut upon it. In this epitaph More speaks of himself as having been "troublesome" to "thieves, murderers, and heretics." It is true that on the two occasions when the inscription has been re-cut, the last word has, "for his memory's sake," been left blank, but Rome is less considerate, and it is just on account of what More modestly designates as the "trouble" which he caused to Protestants that she now purposes to place him in the ranks of those whose intercessory prayers are deemed to be of special efficacy.

Not long ago we found a French writer attributing the first verses of Psalm xix. to Blaise Pascal. However excusable such errors may be in a Roman Catholic country, surely The Times ought to be accurate in its Scripture references. The Church Review, however, calls attention to the fact that in a recent leader our contemporary had an allusion to the walls of Jericho as "falling before the noise of empty pitchers."

We are rejoiced to learn that the movement in support of a Dublin University Mission is prospering, and that the Committee are about to send a missionary to Fuchow, China, to work with Rev. Robert Stewart, who has been in that district for some years. Mr. Stewart, then a very young man, took an active part in the evangelistic work among young men during Mr. Moody's first visit to Dublin, and he and his wife, a daughter of Mrs. Smyly, have found in China an ample field for their Christian zeal.

The President of the Baptist Union, Rev. Charles Williams, writing to The British Weekly as to its late Religious Census of London, has aptly said that the most serious aspect of the census is the "apparent alienation" of such vast numbers from the places of worship. In commenting upon the possibility that many of the "working classes" prefer to meet in mission halls, and elsewhere, "apart from respectable congregations," he goes on to say:—

> This is to me a misfortune. Class congregations are undesirable. Religion should unite, not divide the classes. I deprecate separate places for the poor. Surely they should meet with the rich. Really "public worship" in which all join, a "common salvation," in which every man has the same interest, and, in spiritual things at least, a holy communism, in which all share alike, seems to be more Christian, more helpful to true brotherhood, and altogether more helpful than the class congregations which are multiplying...Both high and low, rich and poor together, should meet, for "the Lord is the Maker of them all," and they are children in one family.

These are weighty words, but we fear we are far from the realisation of such a desirable condition of things. Yet a total change would only bring us back to the simple methods of the early Christians from which we have so widely diverged. We know that the "common people" heard Him gladly, and it is not altogether improbable that they would have been less receptive even to the Master's teachings if, when He had commanded them to sit down on the grass, the disciples had divided them into parties, according to their dress or worldly circumstances. The "mission hall," however, has its own sphere, and we do not see that anything more suitable could be substituted for it. If it is a pioneer only, so much the better.

The Jesuits appear to meet with little toleration anywhere but in Great Britain. The Sultan has now issued a decree enacting that henceforth they are not to open any new schools in the Ottoman Empire, that they are not to teach except in schools placed under the authority of the Porte, and that all the schools now conducted by them are placed under the supervision of the State, and must be subjected to a rigorous supervision.

Rev. H. C. Sturdy, of Dorking, writes to The Record to correct the impression formed by "A Mother" during a recent visit to Margate, that in ordinary sermons there is little or nothing which is attractive or interesting to the children present. A stay of eight weeks at Margate in the summer showed the writer that at Holy Trinity Church, at any rate, this lack was abundantly supplied. All must rejoice at the special efforts on this behalf during the summer season at most watering-places, which are warmly taken up by such good men as Rev. T. Hindley, with whom Mr. Sturdy laboured. But we are sure that multitudes of these children, on their return to the places of worship which they are accustomed to attend, find very little, if any, provision made for their spiritual profit in the sermons to which they have to listen. Whilst, therefore, Mr. Sturdy's experience of Margate is a much happier one than that of "A Mother," the "Plea for the Children" which appeared in The Record, and in these columns, from her pen, is fully justified by the actual facts of the case, taken the country over and all the year round.

"A Bible-class Teacher" complains that servants in many "Christian" families do not have sufficient opportunity for attending the means of grace or for quiet reading on the Sabbath day. Every servant should certainly be allowed to go out at least once every Sunday, while at the same time an effort should be made to decrease, as far as possible, the household work on that day. Such consideration would bring its own reward, for if servants feel that they are thus studied, they will naturally take more interest in pleasing their employers.

Referring to "the growing habit of ascribing (it may be only in speech but still is ascribing) conversion to human agency rather than instrumentality," Rev. H. A. Raynes, Exeter, asks us to quote the following words of the late Dr. Duff:—

> We feel we can do everything but convert. We can communicate Divine knowledge, silence objections, remove prejudices, produce the clearest intellectual conviction of the truth of Christianity, but we cannot convert a single soul to God. We can come so sharply to the very edge of conversion that it seems as if we were not separated by a hair's breadth. And yet after reaching and touching, as it were, its very border, that apparently infinitesimal line we cannot cross; there we stand still, gazing on, helpless, impotent, and consciously incapable of further progress. And, standing there with such consciousness, it is not with us a mere deduction of reason, however valid, or a bare inference from Scripture, however valid, but a positive sensation, that nought but Omnipotent grace can cross the line and savingly convert a soul to God. Oh, then, let the Church's prayer be offered up unceasingly for the vivid and copious manifestation of Jehovah's grace in the midst of us.

To-morrow (Friday) has been appointed by the British and Foreign Bible Society as a day for United Prayer on behalf of Foreign Missions in connection with the circulation of God's Word. The Secretaries of different Societies join in this arrangement, and members of Directing Boards, under the presidency, as it is expected, of the Earl of Harrowby, will meet at the Bible House at 4 p.m. Others may find it convenient to unite in supplication at that hour. The account of "A Ministerial Conference," given elsewhere, affords large encouragements for continuing in prayer.

From Japan we learn that the demand for the Scriptures has been so great in Tokio that the agents of the Bible Society have been unable to meet it. Nor is this eagerness shown in a capital city only. From country places similar accounts come, and we are told by a trusted agent,—

> In many instances where a year or eighteen months since all the members of a town were heathen, they have nearly all become Christians, just by the reading of the Scriptures daily.

Surely it is true that the Bible ages not, and that it can discover itself to be the Word of God without any other testimony.

In our last week's issue we took occasion to remark that a missionary bishop's office was no bed of roses. This is pre-eminently true of Bishop Taylor, of Central African renown. It seems but the other day since he landed in this country and sent forth his calls for help in securing a steamer to carry his workers swiftly along the Congo and its confluents. His appeal has been so heartily responded to in Great Britain and America that his mission is fairly on its way to accomplishment, and he is now on the ocean again, speeding back to Liberia; he sailed from Liverpool [illegible] 8th inst.

Some particulars about the new steamer, as supplied to us by the Bishop before his departure, will be welcome to our readers, especially those who have generously contributed towards its construction:—

> It will be built of galvanised steel, and will be 90 feet long, 16 feet wide, with 5½ feet of hold, and drawing 2 feet of water. There will be 2 saloons on deck, and the hold will be for cargo. The vessel will be provided with electric light, and there will be a steam saw on deck for cutting up wood gathered en route. Besides furnishing the power for propelling and steering and electric light, the machinery will include a hose and nozzle for throwing a stream of water with great force a considerable distance. Neither dogs nor men will be able to stand against such a shot of water, which will be sufficient to repel a fleet of attacking canoes, instead of using guns. The builder of the vessel is Mr. Richard Smith, of Preston, and the total cost will be £2500.

The Bishop takes care to add that he does not anticipate any native attacks, but of course it is well to be prepared; his novel device of the hose-pipe may be commended to all engaged in similarly peaceful business. He heartily thanks those who have taken an interest "in our self-supporting missions. I say our because they are partners in the business."

A lady suggests that if superintendents of missions would place a striking text, in large letters, such as "Prepare to meet thy God," or "Thou God seest me," outside their halls, the fact of keeping passers-by thus reminded of the existence and presence of God would exercise a wholesome restraint in many cases from evil doing.

The Western Temperance Herald, Jan., contains an article entitled, "Shem and Japheth cursing Ham." It is a review of a pamphlet published by the Church Missionary Society, entitled, "Trafficking in Liquor with the Natives of India," and "crammed with facts on this important and terrible business, gathered from ten leading missionary societies working in Africa," all of whom "are united in a vigorous protest against the sin of selling liquors to Africans." Truly the curse of Ham has been fearfully avenged, but Shem and Japheth have wantonly helped forward the indignation; and their day will come. Meanwhile the full force of Christian opinion and individual influence should be brought to bear on the perpetrators of this diabolical traffic.

In The Standard of Friday week appeared the following:—

> Yesterday, at eleven o'clock, being the feast of the Epiphany, the customary offering of gold, frankincense, and myrrh was made on behalf of Her Majesty, in the Chapel Royal, St. James's Palace.

We were not aware of this "customary offering" on behalf of Her Majesty. It looks as if she were being drawn in little by little to these Popish practices. The Empress Eugénie has been very much with her of late years.

The formation of a Society, under the sanction of Bishop Ellicott, for the better fulfilment of the Ordination vow, is a sign that at least some attempt is being made against a hireling officialism. The objects contemplated are the consecration on the part of the clergy of a fixed time daily to private devotion, and of an hour for five days in the week to theological study and half an hour of it to Bible reading. We have not large faith in this artificiality, but an honest attempt in a right direction may lead on to the real and the spiritual.

The following paragraph shows that the recent wave of agitation at home has reached Africa, and is exerting an influence, by drastic measures, to protect society from miscreants:—

> The Natal Government has introduced a Bill into the Legislature for repressing assaults on women and children. The Bill makes the death penalty compulsory in cases where the criminal assault has been completed; and for assault with intent, the punishment may be death, transportation, or imprisonment for a long term, with flogging in public superadded. Some opposition was shown to this clause, which was, however, carried.

We could wish that the Cromwellian and just severity of these South African legislators had been introduced more largely into the Act that was lately passed in our home House of Commons. The news from Australia of the execution of several men guilty of a horrible outrage is another indication that some of the colonies are ahead of the Old Country in the suppression of such crimes.

Two letters appeared last week in The Times from writers eminently competent to speak on the burning question of State-aided Emigration. Mr. Middlemore, of Birmingham, contends that the State can never do this work satisfactorily: that it would err in the selection of emigrants, would mistake as to their destination, and would fail to recover loans. His fourteen years' experience teaches him the importance of fostering private benevolence and enterprise. On the other hand, Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., pleads that the State should do more to prepare children for emigration, by manual training; that the crying evil of cities is the absence of parental control, and the life of children in the streets till they are almost past redemption. The State, Mr. Smith thinks, ought to retain a longer hold on the children, and should insist, in these cases, upon compulsory attendance on industrial night schools up to the age of sixteen.

A correspondent of The Daily News reports an extraordinary service on the last night of the old year, in the parish rooms adjacent to a Ritualistic Church at Lavender-hill. The hall presented a purely theatrical aspect; the platform was fitted up as a stage with the usual footlights and drop curtains. The vicar announced that the service would consist of a series of sacred tableaux representative of the Fall of Man, the Promised Seed, and the Nativity. The stage fittings were elaborate, and the costumes of the actors and actresses were really gorgeous; the cost must have been very great.

Not less noteworthy than the fact of this theatrical performance having taken place in a professedly Protestant church, is this other fact that in The Methodist Recorder this "modern miracle play" is graphically described by a writer who, in his extensive wanderings, has been present at many religious services "from the solemn functions of English and Romish churches to the burning of the sacred incense stick in a Chinese joss house." In describing the twelve tableaux vivants of this sacred play, he says: "As to its merits or demerits, I offer no opinion, but merely state the facts." Yet the facts are so stated as to emphasise the merits and to ignore the mischief and heathendom of this "modern miracle play." Thus Protestants lend themselves to eulogise the sensuous attraction of the Romish play, forgetting that it opens the way to the sensual infamies of the Romish confessional and convent.

THE STORY OF JACOB RE-TOLD.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

XI.—BACK TO BETHEL.

Genesis XXXV.

To Jacob, Bethel was the most memorable and sacred spot in all the earth. It was there, on the first night of his flight from home, that the mystic ladder had seemed to link earth to heaven, thronged by angels engaged in holy ministry.

Many years had passed since then—years of searching discipline, which had revealed the meanness, the craft, the weakness of his nature. He had fallen far below the promise of his early vows; his better nature had held but a spasmodic supremacy over his worse; even the angel-wrestle had only momentarily lifted him to the level of Israel, the Prince. And of late it would seem that even worse symptoms had begun to show themselves. His life at the gate of Shechem had done much to lower his standard and aims, and to assimilate them to those of the people with whom he had been associated. He seems even to have winked at the idols which were in common request among his people, and of the presence of which he was perfectly well aware. There had been a time when, if his dearest wife wished for graven images, she must have them surreptitiously; but now he had become so lax himself, that there was no need for concealment on the part of any (verse 2). Alas! what a fall was this for the man who had built so many altars to Jehovah, and was the chosen depositary of those truths for which the world was waiting. For the world's sake, and for his own, it was essential that he should be compelled to regain the ground which he had so grievously lost. It was then that he said to his household, "Let us arise, and go up to Bethel."

This impulse was natural. The emigrant who lives in the soft Bermudas, or in a Canadian log-house, as he reaches mature life, will find a strange yearning rising within him for the Highland glen in which he was born. He sends many a longing look towards the Northern stars, and at last starts on pilgrimage. He may find the scene desolate and deserted, yet he is not wholly disappointed; he needed the glut of reality to satisfy the long fever of his soul. It was something like this that came to Jacob. A voice (shall I not call it an instinct, within him?) cried: Go and dwell for a season at Bethel; gaze once more on the familiar scene; put your head down again upon that stone which you set up for a pillar, and review the way in which the Lord thy God hath led thee.

But his untoward circumstances gave a yet further reason. He was in terrible trouble. He had settled himself down, and sunk a well for his supply, so deep as to be known through all succeeding time as Jacob's Well; he was intimately identified for several uneventful years with the life of the locality; and then his sons had made his name stink among the inhabitants of the land, by the frenzied passion with which they had revenged their sister's dishonour. He was in imminent danger of destruction from the infuriated tribes around him. He must go somewhere, and it was at this moment that the impulse came to him to go up to Bethel. He might not have heeded it, if the waters of that well had sufficed for his urgent need. But now that they threatened to fail, and even to turn to poison, he was the more ready to try what Bethel might afford of comfort and safety, of satisfaction and restoration. A drying well will often lead the spirit to the river that flows from the throne of the Lamb.

But, above all, that impulse originated in God Himself. "God said unto Jacob, Arise, go up to Bethel, and dwell there." Was there an audible voice? There may have been, but I am not sure that there was. If there were, God dealt differently with him than with us. But if God spoke to him through his own consciousness, and within his own soul, we understand something of what it was. He often speaks thus with us. We may even suppose that, at first, Jacob did not distinguish the voice within him to be the voice of God. He acted on it, he knew not why. But as he looked back to it afterwards from the sweet summit of religious revival to which it led, he would recognise, with thankful awe, that the voice to which he had listened in his breast was none other than that voice which he had first heard speaking to him in his angel-haunted sleep. Has it not been so with you? You have followed an inward impulse, not knowing whence it came, or whither it led; you have wandered blindly on, reaching positions of which you had never dreamed, but which are evidently your special sphere, and it is only on looking backwards that you realise how every step of your way has been ordered by a wisdom not your own, how the impulse originated in Him who prompts the swallows to follow the sun to warmer climes, and how the voice that called you was the voice of God.

But there is something better than this blind obedience, and it would be a happy thing if every child of God had reached it. God is always speaking to us in the incidents of daily life; He has a meaning, and transmits to us a message, in everything which He permits to happen. We are wise, therefore, when we set ourselves to decipher the hieroglyphics in which his meaning is enwrapped, and to question each event as to the tidings which He has entrusted it to bring. We are wiser still, when we lovingly, yea joyfully, accept, and unquestioningly obey.

And why did God wish Jacob to go back to Bethel? Because Bethel was associated with one of the most blessed spiritual experiences of his life. And the summons to go back to Bethel was equivalent to an invitation to return to that fervour, that devotion, and those holy vows, which had made that bare mountain-pass the very house of God and the gate of heaven. "Come back, and be as near to Me as you were, when you first set up that stone, and anointed it with oil."

There are some words which cannot be spoken in our ears without arousing in us an immediate and touching response. They come on us as a strain of music, or a whiff of perfume on the summer breeze, awakening far-off memories, and exciting emotions long gone by. So must the word Bethel have sounded in the ear of Jacob, stirring all his better nature, bidding it arise, and come forth from its long death-sleep, and lighting up the nobler spirit of his life. It met with an instant response: "Then Jacob said unto his household, and to all that were with him, Put away the strange gods that are among you, and be clean, and change your garments: and let us arise, and go up to Bethel."

And so he came to Bethel, protected by God's watchful care; and he built there an altar, and God appeared unto him again.

(1) Many Christians are suffering from spiritual declension. They hardly realise it, it has crept on them so quietly; but they have drifted far away from their Bethel and Peniel. Grey hairs are on a man before he knows. Summer fruit is beginning to rot within long before its surface is pitted with specks. The leaf's connection with the branch is severed even when it looks green. The devil is too shrewd to made Judases at a stroke; he wins us from the side of Christ by hair-breadths. We would never think of letting in the lion, but we spare the little foxes, which break down the hedge, through which the lion comes presently. We would never think of letting Delilah cut off our seven locks of hair, but we do not so much object to her binding it with her green withes, though she will creep on to the other. So insensibly have you been slipping back, until you are infinitely farther from God than you were in the sacred, happy days that are passed.

(2) Idols are the inevitable symptom of incipient decay. You may hide your idols, like Rachel; but they will not remain hidden; they will work their way forward, until what was hidden as a sin becomes paraded as a boast. It may be that some backslider shall read these lines, conscious that things are not now what they were between him and God. Such an one will bear witness from his own bitter experience, that in proportion to the decay of the inner life there has been the growth of some idol-love. You have set your heart on making a reputation, or a fortune; you have loved some worthless friend with an inordinate affection; you have lavished yourself on something or someone outside of God, and as your energies have waxed in this direction, they have waned in the other. "No man can serve two masters: either he will love the one, and hate the other, or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other."

(3) These idols must be surrendered before there can be victory or peace. The true reason for Jacob's disgraceful flight before those alien tribes was not so much the action of his sons as the permission of those idols throughout his camp. I always find, in Christian experience, that failure and defeat indicate the presence of some idol somewhere, and the need of completer consecration to God. It may be a hidden idol, and it may be hidden by the Rachel of your heart, lovely and beloved; but if it be there, it will be the certain cause of disappointment. You say that you do not find yourself able to overcome besetting sin, that you are tripped up before you look to Christ; that you are sometimes hot as juniper-coals, and then cold as ice. You talk about your experience as if Christ had failed. No such thing! Get down on your knees, search out the idols, ransack all the camel-baggage, in spite of aught that Rachel may say; bring out the accursed things, and bury them. Put away the garments spotted with the flesh; only thus will you enter upon the life of victory, or will God appear unto you again.

How wise it was for Jacob to bury those idols right away! If he had kept or carried them with him, he might have been tempted to bring them out again. It was so much better to leave them right there, under the oak in Shechem, before he started for Bethel. I do not think he could have counted on God's delivering care, if he had not acted with such promptness and decision. God would not have been the escort of a pack of idols! Burn the books that have polluted your mind. Cut off the hand that has made you offend. Renounce the drink that has obtained such a power over you, and pour the contents of your cellars down the gutter, lest you be tempted to return to them again. Burn your bridge behind you. Hide the idols under the oak. "Mother," said a betting man, "I have taken the first step to Christianity, I have burnt my betting-books." We cannot be surprised at the mighty work of God in Ephesus, after the splendid auto-da-fé that took place in the market-place (Acts xix. 18).

What a man is, his family will be. When his camp saw that Jacob was in earnest, they gave him all the strange gods that were in their hand, and all the earrings that were in their ears. What a solemn responsibility rests on us all, that we should not, by our silence, connive at their follies or sins. If those around us see that we are consistent and determined, they will not let us go to heaven alone. Christiana and her children will sooner or later follow Christian. "Jacob came to Luz, that is, Bethel, he and all the people that were with him."

This, then, is our closing message: put away your idols, and get back to Bethel. Repent, and do the first works. Pray as you used to pray. Study the Bible as you used to study it. Spend the Lord's day as you used to spend it. Build an altar now on the same site on which you built it years ago. Give yourself again to God. True, a sad life of wasted opportunities lies behind you, but do not waste more time in fruitless regrets. Forget the things that are behind, stretch forward to those before. And God will appear to you again, and will renew the Princely Name and the Princely Blessing, to which you might have thought that you had forfeited all right; moreover, He will promise you marvellous fruitfulness in service, and far-reaching possessions in the Land of Promise (verses 11, 12). All these things are in store for you, if only you will bury your idols, and go up to Bethel, and dwell there. "Goodness and mercy shall follow you all the days of your life, and you shall dwell in the house of the Lord for ever." "Return, ye backsliding children, and I will heal your backslidings. Behold, we come unto Thee, for thou art the Lord our God."

CHURCH OF ENGLAND SCRIPTURE READERS' ASSOCIATION.

INSTITUTED IN 1844.

THE Funds of this Society greatly need replenishing. If liberal aid be not speedily forthcoming, the present number of 125 grants to poor and populous metropolitan and suburban parishes must be still further reduced. The Readers visit from house to house and room to room, bringing the Word of God to the poor, the sick, and the erring; and they help generally in the Spiritual work of their respective parishes.

The Committee earnestly appeal for Annual Subscriptions, Donations, Collections, which are greatly needed.

This, the oldest of all the Evangelistic Societies in London, is largely engaged in taking the Gospel to two classes, viz., those who cannot, and those who will not, attend ordinary places of worship. The former are met with in workhouses, infirmaries, and suchlike places; the latter in the open air, common lodging-houses, &c., besides in rooms and mission halls, where every sort of religious, social, and benevolent efforts are in daily operation, by 150 volunteer workers and a large contingent of lady helpers, who visit 12 workhouses and infirmaries; with 12,000 or more inmates.

During the winter, an earnest and most successful effort has been made to reach the "Outcast" from whom the "Bitter Cry" has come. Thousands of them have been sheltered all night, and fed in the Mission Hall, Thrawl-street, Spitalfields. Many have been secured work, and assisted in other ways. To sustain this and the general work, Funds are urgently needed.

Subscriptions and Donations will be most gratefully received by the Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., at the Bank; by the Secretary, Mr. James Atkinson, 10, Enfield-road South, Kingsland, N.; by the Bankers, Messrs. Old STANDING CASE of BRONCHITIS.

Mr. S., of Stourbridge, writing me for medicine on Sept. 14 last, says:—"My wife would like you to send her some Quinine and Camphor Pills which you prepare. She is an old correspondent of yours for bronchitis. The complaint has been almost eradicated by your medicines, but she always keeps your Balsam by her, and resorts to it on every apparent approach of the enemy."

LETTER from a LOCAL PREACHER.

Writing me from Carnforth, Oct. 13, he says:—"Send me two large bottles beside the one for ——. I desire to do all I can for the bodies and souls of men. I told my friend how much good the medicine had done me, since first I came to see Mr. Congreve. Mr. D. also told her that I was a 'far better man for work than ever I was before.' I often tell people that you, under God, saved my life, since which time I have seen much blessing in the work of the Lord."

HOW A REVIVAL BEGAN.

SEVERAL prayer-meetings had been held, in which prayer had been made for the revival of blessing in the church. Especially was it insisted upon that previous preparation was needed for the meeting. At length, at the close of one very interesting meeting, an expression was asked from those who were willing during the coming week to remember specially the church, and pray for a revival in the church.

Of course a great many hands went up, and there was some reason to fear lest many pledged themselves thoughtlessly. During the coming week the topic was ever coming up in the pastor's mind. He wondered how it would fare with all if Gideon's test were applied to any meeting. The sight of several rooms adjoining the vestry suggested to him a plan as he went in to the church that second evening. He opened the service by asking how many had prayed every day, specially and earnestly, for the revival needed. It was noticeable that many hands were not raised this time. Some had remembered the subject the first day; others for two days, but comparatively few the whole week.

Then he read and commented on Judges vii., and suggested that perhaps their prayers were not answered because of deficiencies in their own hearts. "Are we really ready to have this blessing we ask? I propose that we all submit ourselves to a test, as a measure of personal examination. Let us divide ourselves into four separate meetings.

"The children of Israel could not fight well if their ranks were filled with the timid. Perhaps we too have been disheartened. Let all of us then who are discouraged or timid, or are afraid the Lord is not going to bless us this year, go into class-room A.

"Then let all who are conscious that they came to this meeting to-night in an indifferent, self-indulgent, thoughtless mood, make up a contingent for class-room B. Let them choose their leader, and betake themselves to prayer for an earnest spirit of consecration.

"We will form another class for room C. I have yet one more test. Are our hearts right toward one another? Criticism, and complaint, and backbiting, and mutual alienations, are everywhere endangering the Church of Christ. We cannot expect, we cannot pray with any faith for a revival in our church, with any divisions. This very afternoon (and here his voice trembled) one of our number poured into my ear a bitter complaint against a sister. Let all of us who are unwilling to forgive, or unwilling to ask forgiveness from those we have injured; let all who have complained against and criticised their fellow-members; let any who have spread false reports; let all who are conscious of a feeling of bitterness or alienation, retire to class-room C to pray for forgiveness and cry for strength to become reconciled. We will sing two verses of the hymn, 'Am I a soldier of the Cross?' during which those who belong to the more fearful and cowardly will retire to class-room A."

An awful hush followed these words, and many angry faces gave suspicion of inflicted wounds. But suddenly the meeting took a strange and affecting turn. Brother K——, one of the very salt of the church, rose and confessed tremblingly that he had for the past month been discouraged and full of fears, and could see that he was in the way. Sister C—— said as she started down the aisle, "Pray for me, a coward." Somehow or other the angry faces were first filled with surprise, and then shame, and as the hymn was started up, by one, and twos, and threes, they slowly filed into class-room A.

"Now, said the Pastor, "while we sing two verses of the hymn, 'Must Jesus bear the cross alone?' let the indifferent and self-indulgent gather in their prayer-room."

Hardly had these words died on his lips before young brother Henry G—— started, saying, "God has shown me myself straining everything for myself, doing as I pleased, and keeping nothing but leaves for God. I am a sad stumbling-block."

No one ventured even to start the hymn, and amid a silence profoundly solemn their ranks were still further thinned.

"I must myself lead the third company," said the pastor. "I heard last week that two were finding fault with me, and my heart has been full of bitterness. I will this night seek them."

As he left the desk and walked down the aisle, tears came to many eyes, but when the two deacons followed their pastor, the procession was like the journey through the Valley of Baca. One went out of the house, a woman who would not forgive, and who slammed the door behind her.

Only three were left in the large room, and they obscure members, who, instead of praying for the rest, with earnest cries besought God to make them more consecrated.

They used to say in after days that the great revival began that night.—New York Observer.

PREACHING at HEATHEN FESTIVALS

IN The Indian Witness, Rev. S. Knowles gives a graphic description of a Hindu mela, or religious festival, and evangelistic work in connection with it. We extract the following :—

Having had a bumper season of rich harvests this year, the Hindus crowded the Ajudhya mela for the Kartik Ashnan, "bathing at the full moon in November," as they had never in my time crowded it before. During these days, from the evening of the 9th till the morning of the 13th, 700,000 people filled the streets and lanes, and every available space in and about this ancient city, ready to plunge with a thundering shout into the waters of the old Sarju, the moment the moon swelled out into her propitious fulness. On the morning of this 10th day of Nov., what a sight the long street presents, stretching for two miles from the massive fort of Hanuman down to the glittering sands of the river, and deeply packed in its length and breadth with two moving streams of eager human beings going and coming, to and from the meritorious bathing! A ceaseless roaring, like the perpetual noise from the restless traffic and moving multitudes of the London streets, comes up for these three days from this birthplace of the popular Ram, mingled with the frantic tolling of monster bells, the singing of many songs, the beating of big drums, and the part-singing of thousands of women, that deafens and confuses and drives a nervous person nearly crazy. And what a weirdly picturesque view the river gives before the grey dawn of the morning, all agleam with the sheen cast from the full face of the beautiful queen of night, and agitated and broken into swelling waves by the mad rush of 700,000 enthusiasts into its supposed healing and cleansing waters!

The second day of our work in this mela is the Puran-masi, or time of the full moon, when the great, all-important plunge into the river must be taken that will, the poor people think, wash away all the guilt and crime and impurity of another year. As we made our difficult way to a new preaching place this morning, how we pitied the poor shivering crowds of men, women, and children with their wet garments clinging to their bodies, and their teeth chattering from cold, as they came up from the different bathing ghats, and hastened on toward the fort of the monkey-god to make their last offering for the day at his shrine. It was wonderful how the sound of a hymn, or the voice of prayer, would arrest the attention of these on-rushing multitudes, so apparently absorbed in doing their "dead works," and draw them near to listen ardently to the Word of God explained and enforced. And yet there should be nothing surprising in all this, for is it not God, to whom we had previously directed our prayers, and who is ever present in the consciences of even these Hindus, that is working for us to draw these perishing ones to his Son Jesus Christ and save their souls? So this morning, as we drew up in front of the Government school building, a very large congregation, notwithstanding the great excitement which reigned everywhere, silently awaited our usual service.

The power of the Holy Spirit fired our hearts and tongues, and moved mightily on the eager throng. Brother Lawson with his Seetapur Band, standing on the other side toward the river, with as large a populace, closely packed together, experienced the same soul-stirring power. Convinced and convicted, a number of inquirers were wrested away from the place on which they knelt to receive the sign of discipleship. But one man stood out bravely against all the subtle persuasion of the priests, and was baptized. With us, too, a number of earnest seekers were torn away from us. Nine precious souls, however, more courageous than the rest, resisted the entreaty of their relations, and bowed their hearts to submit to Christ. Oh, how happy we felt as we knelt with these nine ardent inquirers in the dust of the road, and in front of the astonished multitude, and, taught them how to lay hold on eternal life!

A Mussulman present was pricked in his heart, and came forward to the seeker's line. He had, he said, some doubts in his mind he would like cleared away before we baptized him. So, bidding him come to our tents, where we should have more time to answer him, we parted from him for the present. Two hours or so afterwards he came to our camp. Brother Lawson and myself prayed with him, and answered all his objections. He said he wanted some test by which he would know that Christ had saved him. We told him if he would kneel down then and there and submit himself to Christ, He, the Great Spirit, would give him the test he wanted. He knelt with us, and confessing himself a lost sinner, he submitted himself to God; and at once peace came into his heart and he knew Christ had saved him. We then administered water-baptism, and prayed for the Holy Ghost to rest upon him.

Another correspondent of the same paper sends an account of the proceedings at a mela at Bithoor, near Cawnpore. He says :—

On the 11th, the great day of the mela, we baptized a Brahmin, aged about thirty-five, a resident of the Cawnpore zilla. This man had long been in search of salvation; he had served the Ganges faithfully, had denied himself in many ways, but all in vain; he heard the preaching, and decided to become a Christian. There was no need of delay, and he was baptized. His home is known, and he will be visited by a native preacher. Several others were convinced, and declared their willingness to become Christians. Some of these came to our tents, but at the last were taken away forcibly by their relatives, who could not see them thus abandon their ancestral faith. With such people it is only a question of time; their hearts are already taking in the truth. The American Methodist Mission has decided to send a native preacher to this famous city, and it is thought that a most interesting work will be developed here. The indications are favourable, and success is assured.

These great fairs should not be neglected by missionaries. The multitudes are to be met and reached here; the seed is sown broadcast in such places: faith and mighty prayer will make these popular resorts the scene of Pentecostal blessings. The missionary, the native preacher, the colporteur, the Bible-reader—all are needed, and all should be present. Whitening fields should call forth sharpened sickles and willing hands; golden grain awaits the reaper.

FLOWER-SELLERS' MISSION, HASTINGS.—In connection with this Mission there has been great blessing lately. Writing on December 13, a correspondent says that a number had decided for Christ during the previous fortnight. "The Lord is indeed doing a most blessed work amongst the degraded and hardened." In the Sunday-school, composed to a great extent of the roughest lads, a good work is going on. One of the first boys who joined the school when it was opened was, with several others, lost in the gale of December 7, and it is earnestly hoped this sad event may be used in bringing some of these lads to decision for Christ.

THE DAY OF REST.

A New Year's Address has been issued by the Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association. It commences by quoting Voltaire's statement that he despaired of crushing Christianity so long as Christians observed the Sabbath as a sacred day. It quotes the opinion of Mr. Howard Vincent, M.P., late superintendent of the Criminal Department, that crime is so much less in England than on the Continent as to admit of no comparison: "The moral greatness of England, her stability and vigour, are largely due to the observance of the Lord's Day, when millions of the people wend their way to the house of God, and are reminded of those moral duties, the discharge of which by the units of society tend more than anything else to build up national greatness."

The most important events relating to Sunday observance are mentioned. In March the House of Lords passed a resolution by seventy-eight votes against sixty-two, in favour of the Sunday opening of museums. It also passed a resolution unanimously in favour of opening museums on week-day evenings. Sir H. Roscoe, in the House of Commons, gave notice of a motion for opening museums on Sundays, but failed to secure a night for its discussion. His resolution was opposed by 1434 petitions, having 171,658 signatures, and there was not one petition in favour of Sunday opening. The Council of the Colonial Exhibition published a rule passed for closing it entirely on Sundays. The Folkestone Exhibition was opened in a most defiant manner on Sundays, but the vigorous opposition of the inhabitants, and the resolution (conveyed to the council) of the Committee of the Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association to prosecute the Council if the place continued open on Sundays, caused the managers to rescind their Sunday desecration resolutions. The Great Eastern steamship was chartered by Lewis's Company and opened as a place of amusement at Liverpool on Sundays. Legal proceeding against the company were commenced by the Association, but before the case could be heard the ship passed again to the control of its owners, who are now exhibiting it, and strictly closing it on the Lord's day. At the Brighton Palace, near Liverpool, concerts were opened for money payment, but closed after remonstrance. At Harrowgate and Brighton Sunday concerts for money admission on a large scale were being arranged, but were abandoned on the heavy penalties for so doing being made known to the managers. The Crystal Palace grounds, and the refreshment department for six o'clock Sunday dinners, were opened to season ticket holders with the view to make money. Both movements have come to an end.

These cases show how eager speculators are to appropriate the Sabbath to dividend making. By twenty-two votes against fifteen the Town Council of Liverpool has abandoned the Sunday organ recitals in St. George's Hall, after an experiment of six months' performances. At Bradford, the Town Council, after contests lasting over several years, has by 31 votes against 24, resolved to open the museum reading-room and reference library on Sundays for six months. The trustees of the People's Palace have, in opposition to strong expressions of public opinion, resolved to open portions of it on Sundays. The Trades Union Congress, for the third time, has opposed the Sunday opening of museums. Out of 16 M.P.'s who were vice-presidents of the Sunday Opening Society in 1885, only four are in the present Parliament. Out of 28 M.P.'s who were vice-presidents of the Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association in the last Parliament, 23 are in the present House of Commons. The rule of the Post-office requiring "substantial unanimity" of the inhabitants of towns to secure the abolition of Sunday postal work in the town is an effectual barrier to obtaining Sunday rest for postmen.

The address concludes with an appeal for co-operation, and pointing out that but for the organised resistance to the Sunday opening party, the toiling millions would rapidly lose their day of rest. The Earl of Harrowby is the president of the Association, and Mr. Charles Hill, 13, Bedford-row, London, is the secretary.

PURITANISM AND PRELACY.

By Dr. ALEX. WHYTE, Edinburgh.*

Bunyan speaks with bitterness of a time when he was overwhelmed by a spirit of superstition about God and the worship of God. In his description of that time, we have a graphic picture of a superstitious man in a superstitious church. He had a religion, but it was a religion without conviction of sin; he had plenty of ritual, but little instruction. His words carry us back to the sore conflict which raged during the 16th and 17th centuries, between superstition and evangelical religion. The Puritans woke up to discover that the vices and errors they had fought against in the Papacy had entered the Church of England. Their foes had passed from the outside to the inside.

The struggle centred round the Word of God. The problem to be solved was, "Has God said, and has He said enough, in revelation, what the rule of faith and worship is?" Prelacy's answer was, that the Church's voice on this matter should be heard, and that her conclusions should be enforced, if necessary, by the civil power. The Puritans boldly asserted that nothing would compel them to worship God, except in accordance with the dictates of conscience. The nature, offices, and powers of the Christian minister were also subjects of dispute. Was he a priest celebrating at the altar, or a minister with the Book in his hand, a pastor visiting and catechising his people? Around such questions the fight was hot and hard. It should be remembered, however, that every Prelatist was not against Evangelicalism, nor was every Puritan against Prelacy. Yet the positions taken up by the two parties were diametrically opposite. The Puritans went as far as they could from Rome; the Prelatists went as near Rome as they could with comfort to themselves.

The necessities of the time demanded that all who could should do their best to solve the questions which arose in the course of the controversy. Ministers were statesmen, and statesmen were ministers. The Long Parliament had both grace and ability to help in its deliberations. Baxter, who, good man as he was, could be very censorious, admitted that there never was such a gathering for learning, grace, and ability. Hooker, in his matchless "Ecclesiastical Polity," defended the Church position. His book is unique for style, depth, and power; yet it is disfigured by serious blemishes. Coleridge was a passionate admirer of Hooker, but he was not blind to his faults. He describes him as a theological giant, with a club of iron. But he is far from endorsing all that the opponent of Dissent says. Quoting the homely proverb, "The proof of the pudding is in the eating of it," he proceeds to test the rival systems by asking whose flocks were best fed, and whose churches and parishes were best looked after, with the result that he feels forced to give the palm to the zealous preaching divines. This is a safe test. Men, books, and systems stand or fall by the kind of life they produce among common people. Courage, sanctity, and nobility of character were the fruits of Puritanism.

So much for a picture of the time in which Bunyan had to grope his way through the mists of superstition. Are we done with superstition? We have entered into the inheritance won for us by our fathers, and enjoy the privileges of clearer light, yet the days of superstition are not at an end. It comes to the Church with stately march, and in various guises. Sometimes it takes the form of Apostolic Succession, or Papal Infallibility, or priesthood—ignoring Him who has gathered up into Himself both priest and altar—or Baptismal Regeneration. Even our own land, highly favoured as it is in the inheritance of pure doctrine and worship, and our own Presbyterian Church, have superstitions in the hearts of their people, which work mischief in life and character. How are we to guard against these mischievous superstitions? In three ways—by having three safeguards.

(1) A heart truly awakened.—When God's Spirit wakens us up, we lay our superstitions aside. A revival brushes away the dust of superstitions in a church. (2) Real knowledge.—A popular proverb has it, "Ignorance is the mother of devotion." The proverb lies. Devotion—what to? Bunyan was ignorant, but what devotion did his ignorance lead to? Devotion to superstition! After his conversion he showed real devotion in his poor Baptist conventicle. (3) Increased spirituality of mind and heart.—Superstition and spirituality can never go together; they are as opposed as night and day. The growth of superstition starves spiritual life. If you are converted, your instinct turns against superstition in any form, and you seek spiritual truth and fellowship at any cost. God is a Spirit, and He must be worshipped in spirit and in truth. The sacrifice He demands is no priest-posturing at the altar, but a broken and a contrite heart. May He help us to offer Him such a sacrifice!

EDUCATION IN FRANCE.

The laws regulating primary instruction in the public schools have been essentially changed in late years. By degrees it has been decided that education should be gratuitous and obligatory, and on October 6, 1886, the Legislature proclaimed the entire laïcisation of the schools. Formerly the moral and religious instruction of Protestant children was under the oversight of the pastors of the Reformed Church, or of the Augsburg Confession. Now all religion is banished from the school, the pastors have no voice in the nomination of the teachers, and the teachers are forbidden to help the pastors, or to undertake any paid or gratuitous service in connection with public worship, as had frequently been the case previously. One day in the week, however, will be given up, so that the parents may provide what religious instruction they please for their children, but the school-room may not be used for such teaching, though it may be hired by any notary for purposes of public adjudication.

French Christians much dread the result of these laws on the future French people, who may soon become, as Pastor Bersier says, "the Chinese of the West."—Christianisme au Xixme Siècle.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The beginning of the year will be a good time to join this Union; the office is at 48, Paternoster-row, E.C. The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Jan. 16, Ps. cxxiv. 1—8; Jan. 17, Ps. cxxv. 1—5; Jan. 18, Ps. cxxvi. 1—6; Jan. 19, Ps. cxxvii. 1—5; Jan. 20, Ps. cxxviii. 1—6; Jan. 21, Luke i. 1—17; Jan. 22, Luke i. 18—33.

A PRIZE OF £50 is offered by a gentleman in Toronto, Canada, for the best essay on "Systematic Giving; what it implies when considered in relation to our obligations to God and the light of the Nineteenth Century." The essay must be terse, outspoken, and incisive; to cover about three hundred pages of two hundred and fifty words each. The competition is open to the world, the only conditions being that the essay must be written in the English language, and must be in the hands of Rev. Dr. Withrow, of Toronto, the Secretary of the Committee of Adjudication by the 1st of October, 1887. The award will be given by the 1st of December following. Each essay must bear some motto by which it may be identified, and must be accompanied by a sealed envelope, bearing the same motto, and containing the name of the writer; the envelope to be opened after adjudication of the prize. No essay will be necessarily recommended for publication, nor awarded the prize, unless in the opinion of the adjudicators it come up to the standard of excellence they may deem necessary. Unsuccessful essays will be returned on receipt of

A TWENTY YEARS' PASTORATE.

Last week Mr. Archibald Brown, his large congregation, and some of his many outside friends, were gathered together for the celebration of his twentieth anniversary as pastor of the Tabernacle in the Burdett-road. Twenty years, as one friend remarked, is a good slice of a man's life. When these years have been full of good, honest, earnest, fruitful work, as in Mr. Brown's case, it will be readily believed that there was plenty to speak, and sing, and pray, and praise about. Praise—not, indeed, of men, but of God—was the prevailing note throughout. The songs were jubilant; the prayers were almost equally so; the speeches were in the major key; the whole proceedings were a prolonged, though reverent, hallelujah.

Mr. S. A. Blackwood's appearance in the chair, after tea-time, became manifestly appropriate when he had related to us how, in the providence of God, over twenty-five years ago, he had been the honoured instrument in Mr. Brown's conversion. Our readers have been told the story before, but its recital the other evening was all the more impressive from the deeply interesting circumstances of the occasion. As Mr. Blackwood well said, it was an encouragement to all Christian workers, who can never tell or foresee the blessing that may flow from a word earnestly and faithfully spoken for the Master. Most valuable, too, in these days, was the statement of the Chairman with respect to the methods that had been adopted by Mr. Brown during the course of his ministry. He had never pandered to the craving for something new or sensational; he had stuck to the good old way of proclaiming the whole counsel of God. God had abundantly honoured the labours of his servant, in giving him to know of at least 4000 souls having been added to the Church these twenty years, besides the many casual hearers who had received spiritual blessing. Mr. Blackwood spoke with a full heart as he recounted these matters, and well he might, as the spiritual grandfather of such a goodly throng.

But these four thousand souls are by no means all that can be shown in connection with the work of the Tabernacle. Mr. Brown is a working pastor, but he has got a working church. No doubt there are drones in the hive, as there are in every congregation, but the number of honey bees who improve the shining hours of service must be considerable, judging from the account that Mr. Brown himself gave. Having referred to his happy spiritual relations with the Chairman, and spoken of the blessings that God had showered on his ministry at Burdett-road, he went on to tell of the operations of the past year. For a full and detailed account of these we refer the interested reader to the Annual Record, from which we made a striking extract last week, but a few items from the pastor's statement will confirm his remark that he has behind him a band of consecrated brethren. Outside of the regular church agencies, there are forty-one societies, in connection with which a large mission work has grown up. The great mass of the poor, said Mr. Brown, will not be reached by churches and chapels or even by mission halls; it must be done by the living, loving agent going to them where they are. The visits paid by the workers last year numbered 24,723; these visits did not include mere calls at the door with a tract, but were real visits, embracing personal dealing with those visited. Relief of some sort, chiefly in food, had been given in 10,100 cases, while over 3300 sick cases had been specially cared for. Many garments for old and young have been supplied, by the help of outside friends, while £300 had been spent in emigration. Under the heading of "sundries," Mr. Brown gave this somewhat curious mixture, remarking that some of the items, though apparently strange, represented facts of the most pathetic interest:—"Medical attendance and repairing mangles, marriage fees and starting a man in the sweetstuff trade, pedlars' licences and paying for repairs to knitting-machines and sewing-machines, keeping insurances, helping to buy a donkey and a crutch, sending girls to their homes, providing a girl with artificial legs." To the seaside Home at Herne Bay, during the year, 200 poor persons were sent for a fortnight's holiday. The orphan home was full of boys doing well; one is being trained for foreign mission work. God had provided the money for all these varied operations, so that there was not a penny of debt on any branch of the work. God be thanked, said the pastor, in closing his statement, for all He has done these twenty years, and to Him be the glory. The work does not flag. The sanctuary is still full, and conversion work goes on; last week we baptized thirty-five on profession of faith.

Space fails us, or we should like to give some of the sparkling and profitable words of congratulation and of exhortation spoken by Revs. J. Hillman, David Davies, and J. Stephens.

The interest of the evening, which had been growing all along, reached its flood mark when Mr. Pinney, one of the deacons, rose, and, in very choice and affectionate terms, presented to Mr. Brown, in the name of the church and congregation, a finely illuminated and framed address, with a cheque for £235; the latter, it was suggested, should be used by Mr. and Mrs. Brown to defray the cost of a visit to the Holy Land. Mr. Brown replied very feelingly, and while expressing his most heartfelt thanks for the generous kindness of his people, asked to be allowed to devote the money to a fund for the relief of poor widows. As Mr. Blackwood said, in closing the happy meeting, this proposal was to all of them a sermon, and an object lesson in self-denial, which he hoped they would long remember with profit.

A CHICAGO MISSION.

The "Armour Mission," recently established in Chicago, promises to become one of the most valuable institutions of that celebrated place. It is located in a building declared to be the finest for its purpose in any part of the world, and this will be in use day and night seven days in the week. The Sunday-school commenced with about six hundred, and a free medical dispensary, day nursery, &c., are features of the work. Besides Kindergarten and industrial schools, there will be frequent evening lectures of a popular and instructive character, and the reading-room will be made as attractive as possible.

Mr. J. F. Armour, who did much for the mission in its early days, at his death left 100,000 dollars for its development, and his brother, Mr. Philip Armour, of the famous meat-packing establishment, has taken the matter up most enthusiastically, expressing his determination to devote to it half a million of dollars. For its support a block of land five acres in extent is to be covered with houses, built in the best style, to be let at moderate rentals to a good class of people, the rentals to go to the maintenance of the mission work.

MR. SPURGEON, writing from Mentone on New Year's Day, says:—In answer to many prayers I am raised up, and I am looking forward hopefully to a happy return to my pulpit. True, I am not strong, and may never be long free from my infirmity; but yet I hope to do good service, and at least to "hold the fort." For this I again beg the prayers of many friends. I hope to be with my congregation on Sunday, January 23.

SABBATH READING GUILD.—Miss Rowland, of Marchmont House, Crouch-end, N., has been greatly encouraged in the attempt "to help young people to form a habit of consecutive and profitable reading on the Lord's Day; and so encourage them to avoid the habit of reading ordinary books, especially light novels, on Sunday." Thus, in addition to the profitable employment of leisure Sabbath hours, the little motto of the Guild may also be fulfilled:—

Little by little I'll learn to know
The wisdom treasured long ago;
And in the future men shall see
The world is all the better for me.

Particulars may be obtained on application.

UNDER THE CURRENT.

By WILLIAM M. BRIGGS.

Across the meadow stands the ruined mill,
  Guarded, as in a dream,
By three lone poplars on a lonely hill,
  Above the sluggish stream.

The pale, low clouds droop heavy with the surge
  Of driving tempests vexed;
Like the chill fleeting forms that haunt the verge
  'Twixt this world and the next.

Lies the day dead within the shrouded sky
  That broods the swollen plain?
Darts there no bird with quick, convulsive cry
  Through the thick, slanting rain?

Like one who walks by northern icy seas,
  O'er miles of drifted sleet,
Till his lips stiffen and his eyelids freeze,
  And pulses cease to beat—

So the chilled heart, affrighted, breathes the air
  Of this ghoul-haunted place;
And, pressing onward, glances here and there,
  And hurries on apace.

Here steals the stream; here stands the silent
  Naught else doth vex the spot; [mill;
And yet, what stirs the current, deep and still?
  What secret hath it got?

What lies beneath? Say! is it lily bloom
  That waveth to and fro?
Or only the white garments that make room
  For the white form below?

Peer in the current! Look adown, adown.
  What rocketh by the shore?
Say! is it floating hair, so long and brown—
  Is't only that—no more?

Only the half-closed eyes, the idle hands,
  The tender, unkissed cheek!
Only the outstretched limbs upon the sands,
  The lips that cannot speak!

Only the vision of what once hath been
  A thing of joy and life.
Only the answering answer to a sin;
  Only—nor maid nor wife!

Only the night or stiller day profound
  Visits this lonely place;
Only the circling waters flickering 'round
  Kiss at the dead, cold face.

Only a reckless plunge. Nay, do not start!
  Only Death's poisonous dew,
That drenched the brain and froze the bursting
  Only a sob or two! [heart;

HOXTON HALL.—Mr. William Noble is expected to reach London on January 22. Arrangements are being made for the great Personal Effort Mission, in London in February. Particulars can be had and societies helped, by writing to John T. Rae, 134, Hoxton-street, N.

SOLDIERS' HOME, NORWICH.—The work in connection with this Home is highly appreciated by the soldiers, pensioners, and poor. The visits in the barrack-rooms and hospital have been well received, and letters from soldiers, once stationed at Norwich, show how much they valued the Home. Cottage meetings, and open-air preaching impart a stimulus to the work, and have been the means of carrying the glad message of salvation to many who otherwise might never have heard it.

WORK AMONG RAILWAY MEN.—In response to an appeal some years since in The Christian large numbers tendered their services to send Gospel papers and letters to the railway officials at Leeds. By this means many have been converted, and, since June last, a missionary has been appointed to work among the men. Friends prevented by any cause from engaging in active Christian work would find this a happy field for service by undertaking to send monthly a Gospel paper and a few tracts to each man; also a letter when convenient. Further particulars may be obtained from Mrs. Cambie, 40, Lucerne-road, Highbury, London, N., who will forward any number of names as desired.

Letters to the Editor.

THE RAPTURE OF THE CHURCH.

DEAR SIR,—Observing in your paper of Dec. 9 an inquiry under the heading "The Rapture of the Church," I send a few remarks.

The inquiry refers to persons who are living on the earth at the second coming of Christ. It is contemplated that some will be walking worthily of their Master, and some unfaithfully. And a question is raised as to the bearing of such coming upon such persons.

But is it wise to consider, are we, indeed, right in considering the faithfulness or unfaithfulness which shall exist at a particular period? May we not err by relegating the application of Scripture to persons who shall be living at the consummation of the age? Does the parable of the ten virgins only apply to certain persons who are living on the earth at the coming of the Bridegroom? Does the parable of the sheep and the goats only concern nations living on the earth at the time of the end? Are not the principles of that investigation of far wider application? Surely all the instruction direct and by parable applies equally to those who listened to the words of the Lord Jesus 1800 years ago, and to those who read them now, as to those who shall be living at the time of the end. All need to be girded, with lamps burning, as servants ready for any master's coming. Details must differ, but every unjust servant, quick or dead, will have his portion appointed with the unfaithful.

Let us then, ourselves, seek to be ready for the Lord's return, so that whenever, or wherever, or how often, or how differently this tribunal shall be set, we may individually be able to give up our account with joy.

In regard to the text quoted in 1 Cor. xv., "They that are Christ's at his coming," I would note that the words translated, "at his coming," would be more exactly rendered "in his presence." And so in 1 Thess. ii. 19, iii. 13, iv. 15, v. 23, and 1 John ii. 28. The two phrases are not identical in their meaning, though the two events will be connected. At his coming brings prominently before the mind the period when a certain event shall happen. In his presence presents the still deeper event resulting from the previous one—the believer and the Lord Jesus meeting together in resurrection.

And herein I trace a community of faith more extensive than might be supposed. For while Christians have different views about the coming, and those who in the main see alike, often see differently as to details (and these divergences I do not make light of), yet I observe in loving Christian hearts a general faith concerning "the presence of the Lord." May we go through the year 1887 in hope of such fellowship.

J. VAN SOMMER.

THE FRENZY AT BRIGHTON.

MY DEAR SIR,—You deserve the cordial thanks of all good men for your outspoken words about the doings of one whom a Brighton paper calls "the Edward-street Mesmeriser." Whether it be mesmerism or not, I do not care to say; but the accounts in the public prints, and tidings brought by eye-witnesses, alike indicate religious frenzy of a kind always culpable and often approaching the indecorous.

Presuming the newspaper accounts to be correct about the appearing of young girls apparently in night attire with vessels profanely called living water, and (Brighton Times, Friday, Dec. 31) about the dancing bare-footed in some so-called holy place, and the rolling about of children, regardless of exposure—this, I say, apart from other statements not printed, is sufficient to make manifest the indecorum of the proceedings.

The fact that the first meetings were much more quiet and sober, and that the appearance of known Christians is the signal for the comparative ceasing of the manifestation, is enough in my judgment to stamp the doings as highly culpable. The requisition that all jewellery shall be given up, apparently for the good of the Home, has a very ugly look.

What, too, are we to say of the way in which a child's word is allowed to disturb the order of meetings, and even to require the removal of some unoffending person from the audience, and what of the fanaticism that calls the leader "King Solomon"?

Mr. Wood has tried to institute a parallel between the present excitement and that which took place in the revival in Ireland in 1859. But nothing could be more unlike. There the excitement was that of anxious souls, roused by the preaching of the Gospel. Here it is that of people under no anxiety, but under what is claimed to be a spirit of prophecy. The reference to Ireland reminds one of a very different matter, viz., the violence that has accompanied the agrarian agitation. The political leaders have been called on again and again to disclaim all sympathy with such outrages. Similarly it seems to me that any Christians who had anything to do with the introduction of the person who is the centre of the present fanatical movement ought now to disclaim all sympathy with him and his vagaries.

Their acceptance of him at first may well be excused by the apparent simplicity as well as sincerity of the man; but now that he has shown himself to be either a deceiver or else sadly deceived, surely such a disclaimer should be made as may save unwary souls from being entrapped. For the children's sake this is specially to be desired.

This is desirable to protect other places also. I suppose (though I do not know) that these strange proceedings are only a repetition of what took place when this self-styled "evangelist" was in Australia, but we received no warning. On the contrary, I have seen recent Australian religious papers in which his teachings are referred to as of special excellence. It is too late now to go back over what has been left undone; but I thank you for breaking the conspiracy of silence, and I entreat you to make the warning so loud and clear that, by God's blessing on your words, the eyes of some of those who have been duped may be opened, or at least that the progress of such "pernicious nonsense" may be stayed.

Yours for the Master's sake,
Brighton, Jan. 6. J. B. FIGGIS.

MR. GEORGE KING, on the 5th inst., gave a free tea to over eighty poor children in the Gospel Hall, Selhurst, followed by a Gospel address. Some of the children, it is believed, were led to trust in the Saviour.

DINNER TO THE AGED POOR.—For several years past Miss Ritchie and Miss Gough, of Glenholme College, West-green, Tottenham, have defrayed the cost of a dinner to aged men and women, their almoners being the managers of the Bloomsbury Chapel Mission, which now has its headquarters in what used to be known as Salem Chapel. Here one evening last week about 250 persons over sixty years of age—twenty were more than eighty years old—were heartily welcomed by the workers, and enjoyed a capital repast. An entertainment followed.

THE REGISTRIES INQUIRY COMMITTEE, an important branch of the National Vigilance Association, have now issued cards containing, in large type, suitable hints and advice to country servants contemplating London engagements. It is desired that these should be hung up in post-offices, shops, and other public spots in every provincial town and village. Any friends willing to co-operate in this work by undertaking to get such cards displayed are invited to communicate with the Secretary of this Committee, Mr. S. M. Smee, who will gladly forward cards to any addresses desired. The office is at 267, Strand, W.C.

Y.M.C.A., FINSBURY PARK.—A conversazione and reception was held in Finsbury Park Hall, on Thursday, in connection with this branch. There was a large attendance of members and their friends, and an excellent tea was provided. In the absence of the president, Mr. R. C. Morgan, the chair was occupied by Mr. F. Searle. Mrs. Aukland, president of the Ladies' Council, addressed a few words of welcome on behalf of the ladies, expressing the hope that the mothers present would train up their boys in the right way, so that they might grow up to be good and useful men. Rev. T. Eynon Davies said he rejoiced with them in the success which had attended the work of the Association during the past year. It was a glorious thing to capture a young man for Christ. He believed there were many who thanked God that they had been induced to join the Association. The chairman congratulated the Association upon its continued prosperity, and Rev. Marcus Rainsford also delivered a short address.

Temperance Notes.

A writer in The Guardian calls attention to their expenditure on drink as one cause of the financial difficulties of hospitals.

"Gough" is the simple but sufficient inscription on the granite monument recently placed over the grave of the world-famed temperance orator.

In "a year's retrospect" The Temperance Record says the hindrance to permeating the Church with temperance principles is "within the Church itself."

The officials of Baptist churches have been requested to arrange for a Gospel temperance sermon on Sunday evening, January 30, to be followed by a prayer-meeting.

The Medical Press states that in the United States there is a rage for "coca," and its victims are to be numbered by hundreds. It is used instead of morphine and other drugs.

A temperance beverage conversazione will be held at the Workmen's Club, Blandford-road, Ealing, W., in February. Friends will confer a favour by sending samples to Miss Peck at above address.

Mr. George Blaiklock has recently lectured at Ledbury, Ross, Monmouth, Abercarne, Tredegar, Ebbw Vale, Abertillery, Reading, and Downton under the auspices of the Western Temperance League.

The British Medical Journal says the general tone of the mass of medical students is yearly improving, owing largely to the spread of temperance.——Some idea of the Christmas and New Year's preparations in Scotland may be obtained from the fact that in two months a total of £61,000 had been paid at the Dundee Custom House as duty on British and foreign spirits. The chapter of crimes and accidents recorded in Glasgow in connection with the New Year's celebration was a very terrible one.

COCOA.—We have received from Messrs. Cadbury Bros. an elegant assortment of their delicacies in the shape of cocoa essence and chocolate preparations, of which we can only speak in the highest terms.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY OF IRELAND.—Captain Kearney White, the Secretary of this Society, recently paid a visit to Edinburgh, and awakened much interest among Christian friends by his accounts of its work. Sir John Don Wauchope, Bart., who presided at a gathering in the Balmoral Hotel, expressed the hope that there might be a Scripture reader placed in every parish in the sister isle.

PARIS.—The Young Men's Christian Association have resumed soup distribution in the McAll salles. Last year they gave about 7000 portions to the poorest among the poor. While the poor starving people are eating their soup, hymns are sung to them, and Christian addresses are delivered, to which they pay earnest and lively attention. Several families that had come for the first time to the salles to receive bodily food have received the food that does not perish.—Record.

EVANGELISTIC JOTTINGS.—Joyful News reports a good work among the soldiers at Hounslow, the evangelist being Miss Rundle, of Chatham.—Messrs. Fullerton and Smith commenced a fortnight's mission at Westbourne-grove Baptist church last Saturday.—A six weeks' mission at Crook has resulted in the professed conversion of over three hundred adults.—Prayer is desired for a mission to men at Plymouth Y.M.C.A., January 16 to 23, by Mr. Shuldham Henry.—Mrs. Horton and Miss Parker are being blessed in their work at East Harling, Norfolk.

HACKNEY JUVENILE MISSION.—At Lyme-grove, Hackney, last week, nearly seven hundred children were provided with a Christmas dinner, a large number of the parents coming in for a share in the feast of good things later on. The Mission, which has been established sixteen years, seeks to rescue and benefit poor children, and through them to reach the parents; and it may be mentioned that while many of the "old boys" fill respectable positions in life, one is in the ministry. Free meals are given every Monday during the winter months.

COSTERMONGERS' COTTAGE MISSION.—The time-honoured custom of giving the usual substantial meal at this season of the year to the young in connection with Mr. Penrose's Mission, in Vinegar-ground, City-road, was observed on Wednesday, January 5. The Ragged-school, situate on the grounds, was kindly lent by the teachers and friends, the Mission-room being too small; and the capabilities of this building were taxed. Another similar gathering took place yesterday, January 12. A new Board-school opens this week opposite here, and many hungry and cold little ones will pass by this door. It is desired, if possible, to give them a hot meal of soup or stew once or twice a week.

The Book World.

The Christian Worker (1d. weekly, Partridge & Co.) enlarged in form is strong on missions in its first issue, and we doubt not will do able service in fostering many good works at home and abroad.

THEKLA'S DECISION, by HELEN HOPE (Elliot Stock), is a pleasant little story of life in Germany. The heroine's "decision" relates to an opportunity which she has of regaining her own rank in life by marriage; but while Thekla is a Christian, the young officer who asks her for his wife is an unbeliever. Thekla is true to her principles, and, of course, all ends happily.

THE SLAVE GIRL OF POMPEII. By EMILY S. HOLT. 1s. 6d. J. F. Shaw & Co. Miss Holt gives an admirable sketch of life at Pompeii and Corinth in the times of the destruction of the former city. The accurate care with which the details are depicted gives added interest to the narrative. It is almost unnecessary to say that a strong religious tone pervades the book.

CHARLES HADDON SPURGEON: Preacher, Author, and Philanthropist. By G. HOLDEN PIKE. 3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. Mr. Pike succeeds, though in a somewhat fragmentary manner, in his self-imposed task, as stated in the preface, of "telling the public what they would like to know respecting Mr. Spurgeon and his work without unduly prying into the Pastor's life." There is little that is new in the record, but the subject is one that it is not easy to exhaust.

THE REGIONS BEYOND. 6d. Partridge & Co. Naturally enough, Africa occupies the prominent place in this quarterly journal of the East London Institute. There has been so much of hope long deferred that it is cheering indeed, as we turn over the pages of this journal, to come across such a heading as "Light at Last; or, A Morning of Joy on the Congo," and to find this so well borne out by the statements beneath it. There is also an intensely interesting article on "The Eighth Crossing of Africa," telling us that "to-day Africa is open." Of the London Missionary Society's work on Lake Tanganyika there is also most encouraging news from Captain Hore. Day and Sunday schools have been established on Kavala Island. The "Brief Jottings from Brethren Abroad" are full of encouragement.

SOME JANUARY MAGAZINES.

THE CONTEMPORARY PULPIT (6d. Swan Sonnenschein, Lowrey, & Co.) is as catholic as ever in the selection of its sermons, and it is evident that the editor has not lost his old skill in arranging his matter.

SUNDAY TALK (3d. James Nisbet & Co.) is a wonderful threepenny-worth. It has lively articles and pleasant pictures. Its talk is just the thing for the fireside on a week night, but it is hardly "Sunday Talk."

THE HOMILIST (6d. Houlston & Sons) has seen many changes in the course of its somewhat chequered career. It is not what it once was, yet it supplies useful materials for country pastors. Dr. Thomas's contributions never fail to be suggestive.

THE BIBLICAL ILLUSTRATOR (1d. James Nisbet & Co.) improves as it goes on. There is a good deal of chaff still mixed with the wheat, but the reader can do the winnowing process for himself. It would, however, save time and labour if the editor did it.

We gladly welcome the first number of the new series of THE CLERGYMAN'S MAGAZINE (1s. Hodder & Stoughton). It promises to prove a real help in the study. The portrait of the Archbishop of Canterbury is very good; we can scarcely say the same of the accompanying sketch.

THE EVANGELICAL REPOSITORY (6d. Glasgow: Thomas D. Morison) is the best number we have seen as yet of this magazine. It is a storehouse of evangelical truth. We cannot always endorse the conclusions reached in the various articles, but we heartily appreciate the Gospel tone which runs through them all.

THE CONGREGATIONAL REVIEW (1s. Fisher Unwin) makes a most promising start under the experienced guidance of Mr. Guinness Rogers. It is shaped largely on the lines of the editor's last monthly, only it is somewhat wider in scope. We so seldom see anything from the pen of Dr. Dale nowadays that we welcome his brief but able paper on "The Old Antinomianism and the New." Mr. Conder makes short work of Mr. Haweis's theories with respect to the early records of Christianity. The new magazine sounds a clear and full note in defence of the evangelical faith, and we wish it all success.

RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY.—The Leisure Hour holds its ground as a storehouse of good reading on many topics. Mr. Gordon's finely illustrated article on the process of coinage at the Mint, and Mr. Rowland's account of matters at Salt Lake City will attract special attention. The translation from the German, "The Queen who did not know how to make Apple Fritters," is a good deal more than amusing.—The Sunday at Home refers in detail to "The inner life of Lord Shaftesbury."

ISBISTER & CO.—Good Words makes a good beginning for the year. The paper by Sir John Lubbock on "Early Closing" ought to help on that desirable movement. Mr. Underwood's delightful sketch of the American poet, Whittier, will be most welcome to his many admirers on this side the sea. —Miss Linskill's new story of northern life in The Sunday Magazine gives promise of the most engrossing interest, both from its local colour and from its vigorous treatment of some pressing problems of the time.

MESSRS. PARTRIDGE & CO.—The Mother's Companion (1d.) is a new venture which, we doubt not, will become a favourite. Poems, pictures, and useful articles, and a story (commenced) by Grace Stebbing, unite to give it a good start.—The Welcome (6d.) commences a new series this year, and is slightly altered in form, with a pretty wrapper. It contains a very interesting illustrated article on "Missionary and Social Life in Japan." —The British Workman (1d.) has a capital article and full-page illustration, entitled, "Beer Blocks the Way," which should be widely circulated.—The Children's Friend (1d.) now appears in a wrapper, and has a special coloured frontispiece.—The Infant's Magazine, Friendly Visitor, Family Friend, and Band of Hope Review each deserve a word of praise.

CASSELL & CO.—Both the December and January numbers of The Magazine of Art (1s.) are especially good. Prominent amongst other fine engravings for the interest they will inspire, and for the significance, too, of the facts they illustrate, are some which bring before us scenes in the great French Revolution, and notably the conquerors of the Bastille.—The Quiver (6d.), in addition to serial stories of no ordinary interest, has two articles which are sure to be widely read—"A Century of Missions" begun by William Carey, and "Charles Wesley in Marylebone."—Familiar Garden Flowers gives this month splendid presentments of the chrysanthemum and cactus.—Gleanings from Popular Authors has some delightful contributions from Whittier, Thackeray, Mrs. Linnæus Banks, and others.—The Old Testament Commentary carries us on from the completion of Judges through the book of Ruth.—The Family Physician contains again many recipes of value for guidance in the sick-room.—The Countries of the World furnishes glimpses of that wonderland of the new Hebrides, the Fiji Islands. The History of England shows us something of life in this country at the close of the tenth century, and of the last of the Saxons.

MISCELLANEOUS.—The Gospel Magazine. (Collingridge.) The "Wayside Notes" and "Pilgrim Papers" give this magazine a unique position.—The Silver Morn (1d. Partridge & Co.) has a continuation of the paper by the late Rev. A. A. Rees, of Sunderland, on "The Millennial Reign."—The Voice of Warning (Monthly Tract Society) deals faithfully with the vital subject of Rome and her assumptions and pretensions.—Woman's Work (4d. Partridge) gives much interesting information from the great harvest-field and the part women are taking in gathering in the sheaves.—The Indian Watchman takes a firm, bold position as an exponent of religious truth in India, and is well seconded by The Indian Purity Trumpet.—The Pioneer (2d. Masters, Vauxhall-bridge-road), as a quarterly record of mission work in South Africa, is already very interesting, and no doubt will become more so.—The (Y.M.C.A.) Monthly Review (1d. Exeter Hall) commences its new volume by giving a speaking likeness of Captain Dawson. Canon Wilberforce contributes an article on "Converted Pockets," and Mr. H. L. Hastings one of great interest on "Difficulties of Unbelief." It is a capital number, and a credit to the Y.M.C.A.—Young England (4d. Sunday School Union) is a thorougly healthy magazine for young people. We observe with pleasure that an effort is to be made, by means of the "Victoria Reading Circle," to reach a higher standard of literary culture.—Home Words and Day of Days (7, Paternoster-square) are excellent. Among such periodicals they have few equals for freshness and variety of contents. The illustrations are also really good.—The Child's Own Magazine (½d. Sunday School Union) has some delightful lessons for the little ones.—The Children's Own Paper (1d. Partridge) is a new candidate for fame, and is notable because several of its contributions are by children themselves.—The Sabbath School Magazine (1d. John M'Callum & Co., Glasgow) is representative of the Glasgow Sabbath School Union, and gives to its readers much good, solid food of a kind to strengthen spiritual life, and to fit them for active work.—Open Doors (3d. Elliot Stock) gives interesting particulars of the Prison-gate Mission carried on by Mrs. Meredith, with notes of the work at the Conference Hall, Clapham-road.

REST AND REAPING. 1d. Morgan & Scott. Under this title an old friend, "The House of Rest Monthly," is incorporated, and while the field of observation is extended, there is evidence in the new number that the work will be continued on the same lines as before.

THE METHODIST SUNDAY-SCHOOL RECORD (½d.) makes a good start as the "cordial help of all true and loyal Methodist Sunday-school workers." The "Lesson Helps" will be valuable to all, and "Elsie's Stories without Names" will surely enlist an army of young Bible searchers.

THE YOUNG MAN (1d. Partridge) starts off with a bright and sparkling number, as far as contents go, but we cannot say much for the attractiveness of the get-up. There are indications, moreover, that both the theological and practical teaching of the new monthly will go beyond evangelical lines, as generally understood.

A CHRISTMAS ENTERTAINMENT to about four hundred destitute children from the poorest streets of Old Poplar, was given last week by the East London Tract Society and Christian Mission. Mr. Fuller, the superintendent of the Mission, had made a selection of the most deserving cases out of the mass of poverty with which he comes in contact. Clothing is much needed for distribution, and will be gratefully received by Mr. Fuller, at 1, Follett-street, Poplar.

PRAYER FOR MISSIONS.—At the London Missionary Society's house, on Monday week, Rev. Jonathan Lees, of Tientsin, China, presided over the monthly prayer meeting. In the course of a brief address, he said he could not help going back in thought to that little meeting at Tientsin, where on Monday afternoons a few of the workers and converts met for prayer and converse. A missionary must needs believe in prayer, for he is often placed in circumstances from which he can be delivered only by Divine intervention, and the most wonderful answers to prayer come. He was reminded of a meeting he once had with some old men in the interior of China. When told of God and his love, they pleaded with him to stay and tell them more, representing themselves as feeling in the darkness if haply they might find God. Their words still rang in his ears. In North China there is no difficulty in gathering large congregations, who will listen with attention to the preaching of the Gospel.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

SPECIAL FOR THIS JUBILEE YEAR.

During the reign of our beloved Queen a marvellous and blessed Revival has taken place, and not only in Great Britain but throughout the world the Gospel has made wonderful progress. As an old worker on behalf of the Friendless and Fallen, I rejoice at the achievements wrought since the Accession in 1837, and now commend the proposal accompanying this to every reader. By God's help I am ready and anxious still to obey the exhortation, "Go forward."

HER MAJESTY'S JUBILEE.

TWO THOUSAND FIVE HUNDRED GUINEAS CONTRIBUTION will enable the Committee of the LONDON FEMALE PREVENTIVE and REFORMATORY INSTITUTION to signalize this most eventful year, and to secure the permanent usefulness of the preventive and rescue work so successfully carried on since 1857.

In that year the Institution was formed under the active presidency of the late Venerable Thomas Dale, when he was Vicar of St. Pancras, since which time the following Homes have been established :—

200, Euston-road (Home).
Maude-grove (Home).
Eden-grove (Home).
Hampstead-road (Home).
Nos. 5, 6, and 7, Parson's-green, Fulham, S.W.
37, Manchester Street, King's-cross (Open All Night).

These asylums now provide for 200 inmates. Since the establishment of the Institution, more than twenty thousand young women and girls have participated in the benefits of the Institution. A large proportion of these have been provided with situations as domestic servants, others restored to their friends in different parts of the United Kingdom; some have emigrated to the Colonies.

The experience acquired by the Committee has shown the importance of the work of the Institution being conducted in district family homes, all carried out on industrial Christian principles.

The Committee desire to signalise her Majesty's reign by three important extensions.

(1) The Opening of a new Preventive Home for Young Friendless Girls.

(2) To secure by purchase another house in a good central situation, and so extend the work of the Open-all-Night Refuge, and thus facilitate the wanderer's return to virtue and peace by an ever open door.

(3) To erect an additional room at No. 200, Euston road, for the reception of applicants seeking admission to the benefits of the Institution.

One Guinea Contribution from two thousand five hundred readers will enable the Committee to achieve these much-needed extensions by June 20 next.

Jubilee Contributions will be thankfully received be Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C., or,

EDWARD W. THOMAS.

SUNDAY, JAN. 16.—JOB XXII.

From this to the end of chap. xxvi. is treated by S. C. as a "third colloquy." This chapter contains the opening of it by Eliphaz, whose "object is to show that he is right in inferring guilt from punishment. He argues that since God cannot be moved by any considerations which affect human judgments, his ways must be altogether righteous and just. This conclusion is not drawn out; he leaves Job to draw it out for himself. This is usual with Hebrew writers; the premiss is stated, the inference omitted."

5.—Is not thy wickedness great, &c.—"Here, for the first time, Eliphaz distinctly charges Job with guilt, the exact nature of which he infers from the special punishment."—S. C.

9.—Thou hast sent widows away, &c.—Job afterwards denies these charges (xxix. 12, 13, xxxi. 16—18); hence we may safely infer, with Delitzsch, that "after Eliphaz, in order to defend the justice of Divine retribution against Job, has again indissolubly connected suffering and the punishment of sin, without acknowledging any other form of Divine rule but his justice, he is obliged, in the present instance, against his better knowledge and conscience, to play the hypocrite to himself, and persuade himself of the existence of sins in Job of which the confirmation fails him, and to become false and unjust towards Job, even in favour of the false dogma. For the dogma demands wickedness in an equal degree to correspond to a great evil; therefore the former wealth of Job must furnish him with the ground of heavy accusations which he now expresses directly and unconditionally to Job."

16.—Whose foundation was overflown with a flood.—"The reference to the deluge is admitted by nearly all commentators."—S. C.

MONDAY, JAN. 17.—JOB XXIII.

In this and the following chapter Job replies to Eliphaz. "He justifies his complaints by the severity of his affliction, and declares (3—7) that were he tried before God's tribunal he would be justified by Him; but (6—9) God hides Himself and will not manifest Himself, although (10—12) He knows Job's innocence, and loving estimation (13—16) of his word."—S. C.

3.—Oh that I knew where I might find Him.—"The efforts of the soul to find Him whom it seeks were never described more truly or affectingly; such sorrow can only be felt by a spiritual mind: contrast this with the feelings described xxi. 14, 15, xxiv. 13—17. It should be observed that Job's conviction of God's absolute presence comes out most strongly when he feels that he cannot discern Him."—S. C.

12.—I have esteemed the words of his mouth more than my necessary food.—For "necessary food," Delitzsch reads, "My own determination;" and Canon Cook (S.C.) renders it, "My own law," and adds: "i.e., the law of my own mind, my own will; the will of the natural man: thus even while justifying his perfect innocence, in a tone which sounds like self-righteousness, Job recognises the evangelical principle (see Rom. vii. 23). This meaning is accepted by most critics."

13.—He is in one mind.—"Is intended to be understood of the unchangeable uniformity of God's purpose towards Job."—Delitzsch.

17.—I was not cut off before the darkness, &c.—"I.e., before these woes came upon me, the same complaint as in iii. 10."—S.C.

TUESDAY, JAN. 18.—JOB XXIV.

1.—Why, seeing times are not hidden from the Almighty?—Delitzsch explains the connection thus: "From the incomprehensible punishment which, without reason, is passing over him, he now again comes to speak of the incomprehensible connivance of God, which permits the wickedness of the world to go on unpunished." Canon Cook says: "By 'times' are meant determinate seasons which the Almighty appoints for the execution of justice, more especially for the chastisement of offenders. The expression 'days of the Lord' invariably means the occasions on which God manifests Himself in righteousness."

2.—Some remove the landmarks, &c.—"These verses describe generally the results of an apparent withholding or delay of judgment, as in Eccles. viii. 2."—S. C.

12.—Yet God layeth not folly to them—that is, not in the way of visible judicial dealing with such folly. Folly here means "the immorality which sets at nought the moral order of the world." Canon Cook well remarks: "It is not merely in remote districts, but in the midst of the city, in the sight of the citizens, that men are reduced to the extremity of misery; and yet (so far as can be seen) God doth not regard the strange and unintelligible course of events."

24.—Taken out of the way as all other.—"The form of the death of the ungodly itself is by no means such as to reveal the retributive justice of God."—Delitzsch.

WEDNESDAY, JAN. 19.—JOB XXV.

"The friends, as was to be expected, are unable to furnish any solution of the mystery, why the ungodly often live and die happily; and yet they ought to be able to give this solution, if the language which they employ against Job were authorised. Bildad alone speaks. Zophar is silent. But Bildad does not utter a word that affects the question. This designed omission shows the inability of the friends to solve it, as well as the tenacity with which they firmly maintain their dogma. Bildad only reminds Job of the universal sinfulness of the human race once again, without direct accusation, in order that Job may himself derive from it the admonition to humble himself; and this admonition Job really needs, for his speeches are in many ways contrary to that humility which is still the duty of sinful man, even in connection with the best justified consciousness of right thoughts and actions towards the holy God."—Delitzsch.

2.—He maketh peace in his high places.—"All possible contentions between the inhabitants of heaven are subdued by God's power. How, then, can he permit man to contend with Him? This and the following verse refer to a primeval revelation of a conflict between the angels, and of the expulsion of the enemies of peace."—S.C.

3.—His armies.—"His 'angels that do his will' and all the physical and spiritual powers of the universe. Hence the great name Jehovah Sabaoth (the Lord of Hosts)."

"The tone of Bildad's speech, though feeble and without an attempt to grapple with the real difficulties of the question, is pleasing in tone, free from Zophar's violence and from the worldliness of Eliphaz. He does not repeat the old charges and insinuations against Job, but admonishes him to submission on grounds which are not calculated to cause any personal irritation, and which Job himself would be first to admit. He brings the discussion, so far as his party is concerned, to a close."—S.C.

THURSDAY, JAN. 20.—JOB XXVI.

"With this chapter begins the magnificent series of discourses in which Job reviews and sums up the controversy. He adopts all that is substantially true in the arguments of his opponents, and recedes from a position which, though tenable against them, does not accord with his own principles, or truly represent the results of his own experience. After a few words of well-deserved but not bitter rebuke, he enlarges upon the first great truth, which has been often stated, but neither on their side nor on his without some admixture of error, or of rebellious feeling, the truth of God's almightiness and omniscience; and concludes a description crowded with sublime imagery, by a declaration that all that can be conceived or received by man, is but a faint echo of the voice which, if uttered, would overwhelm the spirit of man."—S.C.

5.—Dead things are formed from under the waters.—R.V. reads: "They that are deceased tremble beneath the waters, and the inhabitants thereof." The word for "dead" (there is no word for "things") is "Rephaim," which means "those who are bodiless in the state after death" (Delitzsch). The reference to the waters is according to the popular conception that the abode of the disembodied dead is beneath the sea.

6.—"Hell" and "destruction" are rendered in R.V. by their respective Hebrew words "Sheol" and "Abaddon."

13.—His hand hath formed the crooked serpent.—Canon Cook says that this should be rendered "hath wounded the flying dragon." R.V. translates, "hath pierced the swift serpent." The LXX. render it, "he slew the Apostate dragon." The reference seems to be to "the great dragon, that old serpent, the devil" (Rev. xii. 9).

FRIDAY, JAN. 21.—JOB XXVII.

5.—Till I die I will not remove my integrity from me.—"His integrity is a fact, which his very piety to God forbids his surrendering."—S. C. Whilst there was in Job a spirit of self-righteousness, as to which only the Lord Himself could bring conviction to his soul (xlii. 5, 6), we must at the same time remember that as to the point at issue between him and his friends, the general integrity of his conduct, Job was right, and they were wrong. There had been no wrongdoing or wickedness which could explain on their principles Job's visitation, and Job does not question these principles as true in the main, nay, proceeds to endorse them (ver. 13 to end). He only questions their applicability to his own case.

13.—This is the lot of the wicked man with God.—"Job gives back to the friends the doctrine they have fully imparted to him. They have held the lot of the evil-doer before him as a mirror, that he may behold himself in it and be astounded; he holds it before them, that they may perceive how not only his bearing under suffering, but also the form of his affliction, is of a totally different kind."—Delitzsch.

19.—The rich man shall lie down, but he shall not be gathered.—The LXX., followed by the Syriac and Italic versions, render the last clause, "shall do so no more," and this is given by R.V. in margin. S. C. says: "An obscure phrase in the original, and variously rendered. The most probable reading seems to be, 'He lieth down rich, but it (his wealth) shall not be gathered.' The latter clause, 'he openeth his eyes and he is not,' seems to describe the rich tyrant surprised in his fastness, and waking only to see his murderers."

SATURDAY, JAN. 22.—JOB XXVIII.

"The course of thought seems to be this:—Job has declared his conviction that, notwithstanding apparent irregularities and many exceptions, the justice of God is sooner or later manifested in punishing the wicked; but the mystery is still unsolved; he cannot understand God's ways, he feels Him to be incomprehensible, and comes to one certain conclusion, that although the faculties of man are marvellously developed in regard to all physical phenomena, he knows nothing of the true essential attributes of God. Wisdom in its essence belongs to God alone; it is incommunicable by its very nature; but in its practical applications man can attain to it by the fear of God, and by departing from evil."—S.C.

4.—The flood breaketh out, &c.—Modern criticism discovers in this verse a description of the work of the miner. R.V. renders it, "He breaketh open a shaft away from where men sojourn; they are forgotten of the foot that passeth by: they hang far from men, they swing to and fro." This is the view of Delitzsch, Canon Cook, Umbreit, and others.

28.—To depart from evil is understanding.—The phrase "to depart from evil," is in Hebrew the exact expression used by the Lord of Job himself (i. 8, "escheweth evil"), so that we have in this verse Job's unconscious confirmation of the integrity of his own character, as maintained against Satan by God Himself: "One that feareth God, and departeth from evil."

Special Mission to Waifs & Strays,

(ESTABLISHED 1872.)

Street Boys' Suppers Given weekly to Starving, Shivering, Shelterless Boys, through Tickets distributed on the Streets of London at night. After Supper, a plain, straight, kind talk and a living Gospel message, then the boys are individually conversed with, and as far as possible, each one gets A Chance in Life, either by being Restored to Friends, Helped into Employment, sent to Sea, taken into "The Homes," with a view to Emigration, &c. This is quite a new and additional effort, and as the expenses of such an important Rescue Work must necessarily be considerable, FUNDS are earnestly asked for. Full accounts of the work in The Rescue, published at "The Home," monthly, price One Penny. Who will help to rescue orphan and prodigal boys from ruin and misery? The smallest amounts thankfully received and promptly acknowledged.

Next Supper at "The Boys' Home," 95, Southwark Street, Wednesday, 19th, at 7.30. Visitors by Ticket only.

Cheques crossed London and County Bank, Southwark.

J. W. C. FEGAN.

The Boys' Home, 95, Southwark Street, S.E.

AGED PILGRIMS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

For giving Life Pensions of Five, Seven, and Ten Guineas per Annum to the Aged Christian Poor of both Sexes, and of every Protestant Denomination, who are not under Sixty years of age, and who give Scriptural evidence that they are of the "Household of Faith."

Treasurers—W. HEATHFIELD, Esq., and W. J. PARKS, Esq.

During the last 80 years this Society has relieved more than 4,750 of the aged Christian poor, and has distributed amongst them upwards of £179,000. The total number of Pensioners' books is now 1,144.

The annual sum expended in pensions alone is upwards of £7,300.

Additional Contributions are much needed to meet the increased outlay in the pensions.

In the four Homes, situated at Camberwell, Hornsey Rise, Brighton, and Stamford Hill, 180 of the Pensioners have peaceful abodes in the evening of their days. Friends are invited to visit these buildings. Special help for this branch of the work will be thankfully received.

Secretary—Mr. J. E. HAZELTON: Office, 83, Finsbury-pavement, E.C.

BIBLE AND COLPORTAGE SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

AN undenominational Society, with Agents in all parts of Ireland. Carefully selected and trained Colporteurs are spreading the knowledge of Jesus by the living voice and the printed page. They have access to the people everywhere, and are not interfered with in their work. A contribution of £40 will secure a Colporteur for a year in any part of Ireland. Several additional Colporteurs have been recently appointed. Funds greatly needed.—Rev. H. M. WILLIAMSON, Belfast, and Rev. JOHN ELLIOTT, Armagh, Secretaries, by whom contributions will be gratefully received; or they may be paid at the Office of this Paper.

A REAL MUSICAL TREASURE.

THE CELESTINA.

Very suitable for Mission Halls, or Small Churches, or for Musical Drill.

This Charming Instrument performs every description of Music for Psalm, Song, March, or Dance, rivalling the most skilled musician. It plays thousands of tunes—there is no limit to the number.

It requires no knowledge of music on the part of the player, but can be played by anyone, even a child. The tone is rich, round, mellow, and very pleasing, blending beautifully with the human voice when singing. The tunes can be repeated as often as required; and the music is very cheap.

The Celestina is adapted to enliven the Home, and will be found extremely useful in conducting religious services, or for instructing Psalmody classes.

PRICE, packed in strong deal box, including One Roll of Tunes, £6 6s. 0d.
May be had on Easy Terms, or Discount for Cash. Smaller Instruments from £1 1s. 0d.

REV. JOHN MARSHALL LANG, D.D.

JOHN MARSHALL LANG, Minister of the Barony Parish, Glasgow, and one of the leaders of the Established Church of Scotland, is a son of the manse. He was born in 1834, in the Lanarkshire parish of which his father was incumbent for nearly forty years. His father was a clergyman of the good old Scottish type, interested in the welfare and familiar with the personal history of each member of his flock. He was looked up to as a spiritual guide, and loved as a friend and counsellor. He laid special emphasis on household visitation, knowing that in this way only could he win the hearts of his people, and preach so as to meet their individual needs. He devoted much of his time to the meetings called in Scotland "diets of catechising." Men, women, boys, and girls were gathered into a large room or school, and the questions put in the "Shorter Catechism" were asked one by one. The answers formed the basis of helpful expository remarks, which broadened knowledge of Scriptural truth, and furnished aids to the Christian life.

The son grew up in this atmosphere of incessant activity for God, and had his sympathies determined by it. He was one of a family of eleven who shared the benefits of a wise father's training, and of a mother's prayers. He was taught at home by tutors before going to the High School of Glasgow, from which he passed, at the early age of thirteen, to the University. Young as he was, he won an honourable place for himself there by his talents and industry. He had already decided what his life-work should be; he, too, would be a minister of the Gospel. The Established Church required at that time an eight years' curriculum of all who sought to occupy her pulpits, four in the University and four in the Divinity Hall. Mr. Lang passed through such a curriculum, with credit to himself and pleasure to his friends. He was licensed in 1855, and immediately afterwards was called to assist Dr. Clark in the charge of Dunoon and Kilmun churches. The experience thus gained was beneficial to him. It gave him an insight into parochial organisations, and fitted him to occupy a pulpit of his own. In May of the following year he was presented by the Town Council of Aberdeen to the care of the East Church in that city. The work was arduous and responsible. The congregation was large, and the demands it made on a minister's time and strength were heavy. He threw himself heartily into his new duties. He believed in doing what his hands found to do with all his might; he was no half-hearted labourer in the vineyard of God. The results of his activity soon appeared. Every pew in the church was crowded, and all the agencies reached a state of marked efficiency. The strain was, however, too great to be borne long. The minister's health threatened to give way. He was shut up to one of two alternatives: he must either do less, or remove to another sphere of service. He chose the latter, and went to Fyvie, a parish which was distant some miles from Aberdeen, and which had a population of 4000. He spent in it six happy and useful years, following those methods which had made his father a model country minister.

[From Photograph by Mr. J. Moffat, Edinburgh.]

His eloquence in the pulpit and diligence in the parish spread his reputation beyond the limits of his field of labour. His fame travelled to Glasgow, and he was asked to undertake the oversight of a new church there. He consented. The building was ready, but the congregation had to be gathered. He buckled himself to the task of gathering one; and in the course of two years the membership rose from nothing to upwards of 700. Figures can tell a tale sometimes; in this case they tell what prayer and pains can do in filling an empty church. Mr. Lang was happy in his work. His people were attached to him, prized his teaching, and gladly seconded him in his efforts to do good. He might have remained among them in comfort had not difficulties connected with the management of the church hampered him. These difficulties became so serious that he was induced to remove to Edinburgh. He went from a large congregation to a small one, and did in the East what he had already done in the West. The small church in the fashionable suburb of Morningside was enlarged, and, as the months rolled on, its pews were packed with an appreciative audience. There was a magnetic quality about the man which drew warm-hearted Christians to his side. His personality seemed to enter into those who listened to him Sabbath after Sabbath, for they got to be known in Edinburgh for their breadth of sympathy and enthusiasm in Christian endeavour. It was another case of like pastor like people.

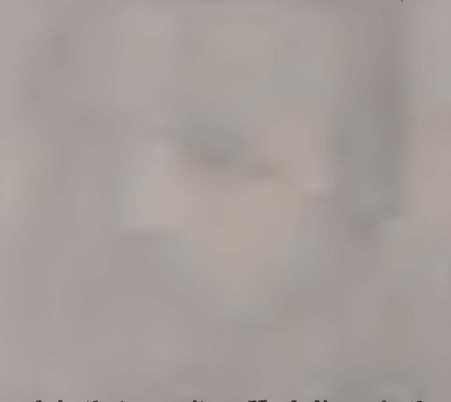
Mr. Lang found time to do good service outside his own congregation. He was ever ready to help on a deserving cause, irrespective of what denomination its promoters belonged to. His catholicity of spirit procured for him the regard and fellowship of men eminent for their consecrated activity. The late Dr. King, who came from London to the United Presbyterian Church in Morningside; Dr. Hood Wilson, the energetic and successful minister of Barclay Church: and the late Mr. Drummond, of St. Thomas's Episcopal Church, whose memory is still fragrant in the district blessed by his labours, were of the inner circle of his companions. All who loved the Lord Jesus Christ were admitted to his acquaintance, and no Evangelical was denied what assistance he could render.

When in Morningside he was appointed Convener of the Committee in correspondence with Foreign Churches. His wide sympathies and genial manner fitted him admirably for such a position. He was sent on a deputation to visit the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Churches of the United States, and was received with open arms. Welcomed at first for the sake of the Church he represented, he was soon loved and respected for his own sake. His addresses roused great enthusiasm, and the tact with which he discharged the duties which fell to his lot, won the admiration of his brethren on the other side of the Atlantic. While in the town of Albany, he heard of the death of Dr. Norman Macleod. He and his companions mourned the fall of a "prince in Israel." Speculation was rife at once as to who would be the successor of the departed leader. An American gentleman asked the deputies, "Who will be the next archbishop of Glasgow?" One of them replied, "I should not wonder if Mr. Lang were the next." Mr. Lang heard the answer, but little did he dream of its truth. The random shot hit the mark; he was to fill the place of the burly divine whose genius and goodness had cast a halo around the city in which he laboured.

The days of patronage were not then ended. Though the Barony congregation fixed their thoughts on Mr. Lang as the most suitable man to supply the vacancy, they were not at liberty to call him. The living was in the gift of the Crown. They did all they could; they unanimously signed a petition in favour of his appointment. Their request was listened to, and they got the pastor they sought.

Barony church is famous because of the associations which cluster around it. It was originally the crypt of Glasgow Cathedral, and figures in Sir Walter Scott's "Rob Roy," where a graphic description of it is given. The parish had at one time a population of 300,000, but, as it was too unwieldy, it was divided into twenty parishes. Under the ministry of Norman Macleod, the church enjoyed a season of great prosperity. It was a serious undertaking to come after a preacher of such exceptionally brilliant accomplishments. Mr. Lang felt the difficulties of the position, but he went forward, strong in faith, believing that God, who had strengthened him in the past, would strengthen him still. He was assured by the thought that it was that he had to do, and for the doing of it he was promised necessary grace. His confidence was not put to shame. He has now been fourteen years in the Barony church, and the glory of that centre of truth is not dimmed, nor is its activity abated. It is still a power for good. It has a membership of 2000, 60 elders and deacons, and a host of agencies, which are to the surrounding streets and lanes what streams are to the fields through which they pass. The influence of Dr. Lang (the degree of D.D. was conferred on him by his Alma Mater in 1874) is felt in every department. His hands hold the reins, and his voice gives the needed stimulus.

His old catholicity of spirit remains with him still. His sympathies are not bounded by his own church or denomination. Every movement which aims at the glory of God and the welfare of men is sure of his co-operation. He took an active part in Messrs. Moody and Sankey's campaign in Glasgow. He is a frequent and always acceptable speaker at public meetings. He is a fearless advocate of temperance reform. Our readers may remember the wise and helpful words he spoke at the Dublin, Copenhagen, and Glasgow Conferences, reports of which appeared in our columns. He is a member of the Council of the Presbyterian Alliance, and has done good work in that capacity. He believes in the brotherhood of Christians, and acts up to his belief.



Busy as his life has been, he has managed to write some books of more than ordinary value. His "Heaven and Home," and "The Last Supper of our Lord," are prized for their warmth of devotional fervour and grasp of Scriptural truth. His "Life—Is it worth Living?" is an able answer to the problem raised by the pessimism of our day. Besides these, he has written many articles for various journals and magazines.

Dr. Lang has given his best to the pulpit; he is first and foremost a preacher. To point to the Lamb of God as the sinner's Saviour and the saints' Example and Friend, is his mission in life. He brings intense belief in the great evangelical truths, wide culture, and considerable powers of eloquence, to the discharge of this duty. Such a man, animated by such a spirit, is bound to be a mighty force on the side of righteousness in a city like Glasgow.

THE LUTHERANS.—The paper read at the last Christian Convention in Dublin, by Rev. Dr. Wright, on the persecutions of the Lutherans in the Baltic provinces of Russia, has not only been given a place in the current number of The British and Foreign Evangelical Review (where many of those who heard it at the Convention will be glad to renew their acquaintance with it in its enlarged form); but it has been translated into German by Professor Merx, and printed in a Berlin Protestant

MR. MOODY'S JUBILEE.

On February 5, 1887, our friend Mr. D. L. Moody becomes fifty years of age. To a very great and ever-growing multitude his words, work, and life have been, by the grace of God, an inestimable blessing. Many, we believe, would rejoice to take the occasion offered by this anniversary to testify in some way their gratitude to God, and to the messenger he has sent them in the person and work of Mr. Moody. We are sure that at this time no undertaking is closer to his heart and life than the two schools—one for young men and the other for young women—which he has founded at the place of his birth and permanent residence—Northfield, Massachusetts.

To the establishment of these schools he is devoting his efforts and enthusiasm so effectually that beautiful and adequate buildings for each institution have already been erected and paid for. Several hundred pupils are now receiving the benefit of these schools, and of the blessed spiritual influence which penetrates all that Mr. Moody attempts in the service of his Master.

What he feels to be urgently needed to crown this work of loving ministry is an endowment, similar to what other more favoured educational institutions enjoy, and which would supply these schools with that portion of their current expenses which is not covered by the small and necessarily inadequate fees received from the pupils.

With a certainty that help in this direction would be specially agreeable to Mr. Moody, some friends, on both sides of the sea, who have been active and blessed in his work, are sending this suggestion, through the press, to other friends likeminded toward him, hoping for their co-operation in the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of his birthday.

Unless you should prefer to send your gift directly to Mr. Moody at Northfield, any contribution you may feel disposed to make to this Birthday Memorial Fund will be received by the treasurer of the fund.

We count it a privilege to unite with the friends in America in the happy plan suggested above, and are well assured that there are very many in this country who will gladly contribute for an object so near the heart of our beloved friend Mr. Moody, as a testimony of their gratitude to Almighty God for having spared him to complete his fiftieth year, and for having made him the instrument of blessing to such large numbers.

Contributions are invited by the undersigned, and should be sent in promptly, addressed to Mr. Robert Paton, 186, Aldersgate-street, London, E.C.

WORKING MEN'S LORD'S DAY REST ASSOCIATION.—The Lord Chancellor has accepted the office of President of the Association for the ensuing year, in succession to the Earl of

THE GREATEST FRAUD.

The Great Fraud of this generation is the Papal Dogma of Infallibility. Nothing could be at once more absurd and more impudent than that a fallible and sinful man should claim the prerogative of the only wise God. And yet Protestant Christians, in the name of Holiness, are in danger of a similar delusion. It may be observed that the great aim of the arch-deceiver is by all manner of subtleties to lead souls to think that by an act of faith they have eliminated sin from this body of our humiliation. Some think they have got back into the Adamic innocence of Paradise; others, that they have got forward into the freedom of the resurrection, never more to be sick, nor to sin, nor die. Another theory is that in those who believe for it, the old Adam life has become extinct, and Christ Himself so lives in the body that all the acts of the body are no longer the acts of the creature, but of Christ. Mr. Prince, again, wrote in his Diary that he had "passed through the midst of self, and come out on the other side into God; therefore, having come to an end of himself, his journal must end also." Unlike the Apostle, who said, "Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfected," Mr. Prince declares that he is "filled with all the fulness of God."

Now, however all these and others may differ in their expression, they all agree in the pretension that the body is actually delivered from the presence of sin; that there is no present inherent tendency to sin; that if there were any original sin derived from Adam, it is not that now with them its promptings are habitually overcome, but that it has, as a principle, been actually eliminated and destroyed, and therefore all the acts of the body are necessarily innocent and holy.

Let it be observed that those who profess these things do not submit themselves to the judgment of others, as to whether they have attained this blessing, but they declare their own consciousness of it, and claim to be accredited accordingly. Nay, the greatest encouragement is given to profess it, and young, and inexperienced, and ignorant persons are launched into a delusion calculated to wreck all inward sincerity and all outward character.

Let it not be said or thought that we are decrying holiness, or scoffing at any experience found at the feet of Jesus. We are seeking to expose a Satanic travesty of holiness, a strong delusion to believe a lie.

We remember a great many years ago reading a passage to this effect:—"It is a real and fearful fall for one who has been blessed of God so to place himself outside the blessing as to define and describe it, instead of being contained and bathed in it." We believe that many of those who are now deceiving themselves and others had received experimental blessing from God; but Satan tempted them to analyse and weigh and measure the blessing, and to be occupied with it instead of with God who gave it, and so, while loud and louder in their profession, they really lost their blessing; the light which was in them became darkness, and how dark is that darkness!

For, let any one believe that the sinful principle in him is dead, and that the risen life of Christ has absolutely and utterly supplanted it, then to blame any action of such a person would be to blame Christ; nay, to condemn oneself would be to condemn Christ; to confess sin or failure in oneself would be for the Christ in such a one to confess Himself to have sinned or failed. Jesuit casuistry never propounded a more subtle and dangerous delusion, a system more essentially and necessarily subversive of the truth. It would give an affirmative reply to the astounding question, "Shall the throne of iniquity have fellowship with Thee, which frameth mischief by a law?" and make "Christ a minister of sin."

MISDIRECTED JOURNALISM.

Here is a picture of it, drawn by one who is himself a journalist and knows whereof he speaks. Mr. Joseph Howard, at one time city editor of The New York Times, and a widely-known correspondent, writes as follows:—

> No city in the world surpasses New York in intelligence, in love of all that is good and pure and noble and decent and humane; but with the exception of a few idiotic reports of sermons, with now and then a record of some English lecturer or Irish orator, all the upper realm is left untouched. Our reporters are instructed to scent the carrion. They never bring the rose with its perfume or the lily with its grace, the pansy with its drooping beauty, before the public attention; but the dead dogs of agitation and the swollen carcasses of crime and the offal of dirt and squalor, these are thrust before the disgusted eyes and under the offended nostrils of an amazed and outraged people.

Unfortunately this is only too true. It is certainly true of the morning papers of this city, and, unless we are greatly mistaken, these papers will compare favourably with their contemporaries in other cities. Thus the paper—we will not name it—which, on the whole, many regard as best suited to family reading still gives more of its space by far to the narration of evils than to the furtherance of good. It will give several columns a day to sporting intelligence and, say, an eighth of a column to an account of a day's session of the meeting of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, except that when there is a debate on a controverted doctrine a third of a column may be devoted to the subject.

For one thing, the underlying purpose of the journalism of to-day is wrong. It proceeds, we believe, on a wrong estimate of what the people really want. That there are some persons, many, perhaps, in the community to whom the scent of moral carrion is sweet, is true enough. But our daily journals seem to be based upon the idea that this is the taste of all the people. At least they nearly all pander more or less to such a taste. There has been no little deterioration in this respect within a few years past. The quality of our great morning papers is not as good as it was a few years ago.

We know, of course, that for a paper to succeed, even to sustain itself, it must have readers. To accomplish this it must, in a sense, cater to the taste of its readers. Under such a rule there will be papers that will appeal to the low tastes of the lower moral orders in the community. But in many respects the average daily paper is an insult to the moral average of the community. Where it ought to aim to lift up the lower strata, its real tendency is to debase those that are higher. Instead of setting high ideals before men that need elevating in the whole tone of their being, it virtually sets low ideals before the men whose moral average is higher than its standards, and the inevitable tendency is that their ideals are debased.

For another thing, it is impossible to be sure of the accuracy of the representations which the Press makes from day to day. Partisanship or self-interest colours the presentation of facts. The "interview" is abused. If it serves the purpose of the journalist, the opinions expressed or the statements made by the person interviewed will be distorted or perverted. If, knowing this, one declines to be interviewed, all the same, opinions and statements may appear, as if of his authorisation. Papers on opposite sides of the political fence will state the same fact in a way that will warrant diametrically opposite opinions. He must be a man of such character as we have not seen in political circles for many a long day who can become a candidate for an office and not become the target for vituperation that with diabolic skill is made to wear the veri-similitude of truth. But all this is exactly the opposite of what ought to be the case.

One plea of our journalists is that they must give a picture of the life of to-day as it is. But surely they are not doing this, when they wilfully distort facts for a purpose; surely they are not doing this when they concentrate detailed attention upon all moral putridity, to the neglect of facts and forces that are making for the regeneration of society. There may be mud in the streets, but the blue sky arches above the foulest thoroughfare. A true picture might show the mud, but it would certainly introduce the sky.

Mr. Henry Watterson, editor of the Louisville Courier Journal, in a recent letter to his paper from Europe discussing this general subject, says that three cardinal principles must lie at the bottom of such a scheme of journalism as shall take the place of the misdirected and wasted journalism of to-day. These are: Disinterestedness, cleanliness, capacity. There is no space to discuss these principles here. But we fully agree with Mr. Watterson when he says that when once the experiment has been tried, "the public, seeing what a newspaper really can be, will not hesitate to make its choice, and, after that, it will pay no man of brains and ambition to fish mud out of the sewers."—Illustrated Christian Weekly.

ONWARD CHRISTIAN MISSION, WANDSWORTH.—This Mission, just one year old, celebrated its first anniversary by a meeting on Wednesday, 5th inst., which was full of encouragement for the future. The mission-room was crowded, and the audience full of sympathy and eager attention. The hon. secretary reported that during the year 270 meetings, had been held, increased by the open-air services held during the summer to over 300. On Monday evenings, boys and girls of the roughest class are brought under Christian instruction. Among the adults some happy conversions have been recorded, and many Christians have been strengthened and built up in the faith. The hon. secretary is Mr. F. Cockrem, 1, Draydon-villas, Merton-road, Wandsworth, S.W.

THE SONS OF HAM.—Rev. T. L. Johnson, who was well known in England as the financial secretary of the African Mission for sending coloured men as missionaries to Africa, attended some time since a Convention of coloured Baptists held in St. Louis, the object being to awaken a deeper interest for Africa amongst the freed men of America. The reception he met was most encouraging. At the Convention many of the most intellectual men in connection with the coloured Baptists of America were present, and several papers of considerable weight were read, showing the moral, intellectual, and religious progress made. In response to invitations given by the leading coloured ministers of the Southern States, Mr. Johnson has since visited several of the States. The conclusion arrived at as a result of this visitation is that, if the coloured churches of America were properly organised, fifty missionaries might be sent out from thence, instead of only six as at present.

THE STORY OF JACOB RE-TOLD.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

XII.—THE SCHOOL OF SORROW.

Genesis XXXV.—XLII.

In manufactories of china ware there are processes which illustrate our lives with startling force and beauty. Amongst others which read us deep and helpful lessons, is the burning in of the colours, which had been previously painted on the ware. It is only the skilled hand that can delineate those designs which delight our fancy, but no skill of the painter could make them other than evanescent, unless there were some other method of rendering them permanent. This is accomplished by placing the newly-painted ware in a kiln or furnace, where it is exposed to very intense heat, and the colours are burnt in and fixed.

It is very often thus, that God makes permanent some great blessing which we have received. He burns it in by placing us amid the fires of keen suffering and sorrow. So often have I noticed this, that I am never surprised to hear men date an unusual amount of trial from the moment in which heaven seemed nearer, and Christ dearer, than ever before. It must be so, or the blessing which they had obtained would fade from their soul, as the tints of sunset fade off earth and sky, or as the photograph fades from the plate, unless it has been "fixed" in the dark chamber. In this respect, there is a precise analogy between the experience of Jacob and ourselves, teaching us again that spiritual life is one, though severed by the centuries, and that the Bible is evidently the Word of God, because it is so certainly the book of man.

When, having left his idols behind, Jacob had got back to Bethel, and had built again the altar of renewed consecration, we are told significantly that "God appeared unto him again, and blessed him." Are all the readers of these lines conscious that the blessing of the Almighty is resting upon them, as the light of the transfigured body of our Lord fell upon the virgin snows of Hermon, and made the darkness light? Has God revealed Himself to you again after the long, sad lapse of fellowship and communion? Is the backslider back again in the house of God, and at the gate of heaven? If not, would it not be wise to do as Jacob did? Ask God to show you what your idols are. Tell Him that you want to be only, always, all for Him. Put away not only your sins, but your weights, i.e., aught that hinders you in the Christian race. If you cannot do this yourself, tell Him that you are willing for Him to take them from you. If you cannot say that you are willing, tell Him that you are willing to be made willing. And when you have thus surrendered your will, give yourself again to Him, entreat Him to take full possession of your entire being, lay yourself as an Isaac upon the altar of self-dedication, and remember that He takes all we give, and at the moment of our giving it. It may be that He will appear to us at once, flooding our spirits with the old unspeakable joy; or He may keep us waiting for a little. But it matters comparatively little, if only we can say, with the assurance of an unwavering faith, "We are his; nothing shall henceforth separate us from the love of God."

It was a great blessing, indeed, that God vouchsafed to Jacob. "God said unto him, Thy name is Jacob; thy name shall not be called any more Jacob, but Israel shall be thy name." The angel had said as much as this at Peniel, and, for a brief moment, he had shone in the transfiguring gleam of royalty. But the gleam was transient enough, like that which sometimes breaks for a moment far out upon a stormy sea, and is instantly veiled again. But there had been wrought on him a deep spiritual change since then, and his experience had been brought into more constant conformity with the level of Israel, the Prince, which was now re-affirmed as his perpetual designation. And forthwith he was plunged into a fiery furnace of trial, which made both name and character permanent.

But this was not all: God constituted him father of nations and kings, and promised to give to him the land in which he was a wanderer, as his fathers before him. Now these two items of fruitfulness and possession are only possible to those who have passed through the school of suffering. It is in soul-travail that our children are born, and it is through much tribulation that we enter into the kingdom. Let no man think that he can win the highest spiritual attainments without paying the price for them. Our Lord could only be perfected as our Captain and High Priest by the things that He suffered; through his sufferings He became the Author of eternal salvation to all who believe.

We need not dwell further, then, on the probable reasons why, from this moment, Jacob's path was draped in the gathering shadows of outward sorrow. But we may notice what those shadows were. And we may interest ourselves in remarking how, as the sorrows gathered, there was a fuller life, and fruitfulness, and royalty. Jacob is increasingly replaced by Israel, the Prince. Does it not remind us forcibly of another, who said, "Though our outward man perish, the inward man is renewed day by day"; our affliction is light, and for a moment, compared with the weight of glory which it is working out.

There are four burials in one chapter (xxxv.), including that of the idols in Shechem. These were the beginning of sorrows.

First, Deborah died, the old favourite nurse, who had accompanied her young mistress, when, long years before, she had left her home across the Euphrates to become Isaac's bride. What a link she must have been with that sacred past! What stories she could tell of the glory of that camp, presided over by Abraham, the friend of God! And often she would live again in the past, and tell how bitterly Rebekah rued the fatal advice she gave to her favourite son, whom she was never to see again, and for lack of whom she pined, until she drooped in death, whilst he still tarried across the distant Euphrates' flood. Rebekah's death may have made the camp of Isaac distasteful to the faithful old servant; and she took the first opportunity of coming to spend her remaining days with him whom, in memory of the long past, she too loved with the tenacious affection of her race. It must have been a sad wrench to Jacob to lay the remains of his mother's closest friend beneath that oak in Bethel. The grief occasioned by her death was evidently quite unusual, since even the oak became known, in after years, as "the oak of tears."

But a worse sorrow was in store. They journeyed from Bethel, and there was but a little way to come to Ephrath. The foremost ranks of the march were already in sight of the hostelry, and were eagerly pressing on for the camping ground. But suddenly, a summons from the rear bade them halt. The beloved Rachel cannot go another step. The tidings of her extreme agony and peril silence the motley groups of drovers and slaves, and servants and sons. Gathered in confusion upon the road, they await the issue with the dread suspense which breathlessly marks each flicker of life's taper. That scene would never be forgotten by any of them, least of all by Jacob. When he too lay upon his dying bed, in that hieroglyphed Egyptian chamber, it came back to him, with touching force and pathos, such as told the freshness of the wound, and the anguish of the grief, which thirty years could not dull. Ah, sorrow! nature may cast its mantle of greenery over her scars, so that golden grain stands in serried ranks upon the field of Waterloo, but thou canst inflict wounds which never seam together, but gape, and gape.

But all the agony of those devoted hearts could not stay that departing spirit; the mother only lived long enough to see her second babe, and to enshrine her sorrow in its name, and then she died, and was buried there in the way to Ephrath, which is Bethlehem. It was a matter of evident regret to Jacob, in after years, that she did not lie, with the rest of her kin, in Machpelah's ancient cave, but he could never forget that lone spot on the the way to Ephrath (xlviii. 7). And when the wheel of time had brought many changes, and that spot had become famous as the birth-place of the great Son of Jesse, still it seemed to the anointed ear of the prophet as if Rachel's spirit haunted the spot, wailing for her children. And even to this day travellers turn aside to visit Rachel's tomb.

But another sorrow was in store. Jacob reached Hebron just in time to see his aged father breathe his last, and perhaps once more to hear those trembling lips pronounce the blessing which had cost him so much. "Isaac gave up the ghost and died, and was gathered unto his people." He joined the great gathering of his clan, in the ranks of which are numbered all meek and true-hearted souls. Who are our people, to whom we shall be one day gathered? And the two sons buried him. Esau came from Edom—the successful man of the world, who had anticipated this moment years before, as likely to suit his purpose for slaying Jacob, but who was sweetened and softened by the mellowing influence of time. And Jacob, limping in his step, broken by hard toils, stricken by his recent losses, came to help him. There they stood for a moment, the twins whose lives had been such a struggle and such a contrast, reconciled in the presence of the great silence of the grave, and soon to take their several ways, never again to meet, but to tread ever diverging paths, both they and their children, and their children's children. We link hands with the playmates and companions of early life across the tiny stream, and for some distance we can keep them linked, albeit that the streamlet widens between us; then loosing hands we walk side by side, keeping each other well in view, and talking merrily; but, at last, the mighty river spreads its volume between us, and we can neither see nor hear anything, save the break of the sea upon the shore. It is all important that those who love should be on the same right side of the stream, if they would escape an eternal separation.

Yet another heart pang was measured out to that much-tried man. We suffer more in the sins of those we love, than in our own; and when the father saw his Reuben and his Judah stained with the soil of nameless impurity, he drank perhaps the bitterest cup of his life.

Nor was this all. He lived to see dissension and hatred rend his home. The elder brethren envied and hated their younger brother, Joseph; the son of the beloved Rachel, and the child of his old age. His partiality most certainly added fuel to the flame. It was a great mistake to confer the costly coat that indicated the heir and prince of an Eastern clan. But we can easily understand how naturally the old man would turn to the promising lad, whose dreams bespoke his regal future, and reminded him of his own. "His brethren envied him; but his father observed the saying."

But there was worse to follow. One day the sons brought home the coat he knew so well, but it was bedaubed with blood and stained. "This have we found; know now whether it be thy son's coat or no." It may be that a suspicion even then crossed his mind that there had been foul play. But if it did, he kept it to himself, and only let it slip afterwards in the bitterness of his grief (xlii. 36). He at least professed to believe that an evil beast had devoured the beloved body, and that Joseph had been rent in pieces. How he mourned only those know who have passed through similar anguish. The father's grief touched unwonted chords in the hearts of his children. They rose up to comfort him. "But he refused to be comforted; and said, I will go down to the grave unto my son mourning. Thus his father wept for him."

On the heels of bereavement came one of those terrific famines to which Eastern countries are subject, and which sweep them bare of people. The family of Jacob was not exempt. The sons seem to have sat down in the stolid indifference borne of long privation, and were only aroused by their father's appeal, "Why do ye look one upon another?" They went down into Egypt, in all ages the granary of the world, and after an agonising interval of suspense returned; but Simeon was not with them, and to get him, and more corn, Jacob must risk the son of his right hand, the lad who had cost him so much in Rachel's death. Who does not sympathise with the cry of agony wrung from that quivering heart, a cry that revealed the depths of love of which it was capable? "Me have ye bereaved of my children: Joseph is not, and Simeon is not, and ye will take Benjamin away: all these things are against me. Ye shall bring down my gray hairs with sorrow to the grave."

In addition to all this, there was growing upon him a sense that his life was closing, that his strength was failing, and that he must prepare to follow his father into the unseen. His years had been few in comparison with those of his forefathers, and he had the weary sense of failure, in that he had not attained (xlvii. 9). It is a pitiful thing, when an old man finds life ebbing fast away from him, whilst all his regrets cannot recall one single mistake, or give him the consciousness of having done all he could. Such sorrows fell to Jacob's lot: they fall to our lot still, and when they do, let us learn how to behave ourselves.

(1) Do not judge by appearances. Jacob said, All these things are against me. It was a great mistake. Joseph was alive, the governor of Egypt, sent there to preserve their lives, and to be the stay of his closing years. Simeon was also alive, the blessed link which was drawing and compelling his brothers to return into the presence of the strange Egyptian governor. Benjamin would come safely back again. All things, so far from being against him, were working together for good to him; and if only he would trust God, he would live to see it so. All things are yours if you are Christ's. All things serve you. Even those that seem most awry and trying are really promoting your best interests. If you knew as much about them as God does, you would go down on your bended knees and thank Him, with streaming eyes, for the most untoward of your circumstances. The seed buried in the ground may rejoice in the frost as much as in the genial sunshine. And even though some events cut us to the quick, if we believe that the infinite love of God is working in and through them, we may sing as Paul and Silas did, though our feet are fast in the stocks. Let us cultivate the habit of looking at the bright side of things. If there are only a few clouds floating in your sky, do not say that the whole is overcast; and if all the heaven is covered, save one small chink of blue, make much of that, but by all means do not exaggerate the darkness.

(2) Be sure that God has a purpose in all your sorrow. The apparent aimlessness of some kinds of pain is sometimes their sorest ingredient. We can suffer more cheerfully, if we can clearly see the end which is being slowly reached. But if we cannot, it is hard to lie still and be at rest. But the believer knows that nothing can come to him, save by the permission of God's love. Every trial must reach him through the mystic barriers that engird him, and must show a permit signed by the hand of God Himself. Nothing comes by chance, or by the will of friend or foe, but all is under law. And each several calamity has a specific purpose. "Fitches are not threshed with a sharp threshing instrument, neither is a cart wheel turned about upon the cummin; but the fitches are beaten out with a staff, and the cummin with a rod." And as the farmer carefully adjusts his method to various kinds of grain, and to accomplish the object he has at heart, so the Almighty varies his method of dealing with us; He ever selects the precise trial that will soonest and best accomplish his purposes; and He only continues it long enough to do all that needs to be done. "Bread corn is bruised; but He will not ever be threshing it, not break it with the wheel of his cart, nor bruise it with his horsemen." I commend that precious promise to those who think their sorrows past endurance. They will not last for ever; they will be suited to our peculiar needs and strength. They will accomplish that on which the great Husbandman has set his heart.

3) Remember that nothing can separate you from the love of God. When Jacob reviewed these dark passages of his life from the serene heights of his dying bed, he saw, as he had never seen it before, that God had shepherded him all his life long, and his Angel had redeemed him from all evil (xlviii. 15, 16). We do not realise this at the time, but there is never an experience in life without the watch of that unsleeping Shepherd-eye, never a peril without the interposition of that untiring Shepherd-hand. The hand of the good Physician is ever on the pulse, as we pass through the operation. "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? Nay." These things may sever God from our eyes and shut away the realisation of his love, but they cannot make Him cease to love us, or hide us from Him, or separate us from Him. Take heart, you who are descending into the dark valley of shadow; the Good Shepherd is going at your side, though you see Him not. His rod and staff shall comfort you; yea, his own voice shall speak comfortably to you. Fear not.

(4) Anticipate the afterward. Look not at the things which are seen, but at those which are not seen. Cast into the one scale your sorrows if you will, but put into the other the glory which shall presently be the outcome of the pain. Consider how splendid it will be, when the discipline is over, and the lovely shape is acquired, and the lesson learnt, and the pattern fixed for ever. Anticipate the time when every vestige of Jacob shall have been laid aside, and Israel is become the befitting title for your soul. Will not that repay you, because you will have been brought into a oneness with Christ which shall be heaven in miniature?

Take heart, thou bit of heaven's porcelain; thou must be shaped and fashioned on the rapid wheel, thy fairest hues must be burnt in amid the most fiery trials; but thou shalt yet grace the table of thy King, and shalt be used of Him for his choicest purposes.

"Wherefore, let them that suffer according to the will of God, commit the keeping of their souls unto Him, as unto a faithful Creator."

Women's Work in America.

Two reports, that of the Home for Destitute Women, Pittsburgh, Pa., and that of the Christian Home for Women, Allegheny, tell us of efforts that American women are making on behalf of their fallen sisters. "Scarcely a week," it is stated, in the first report, "but the deserted wife, and her unfortunate children, with no friend in the world to assist or console her, often a stranger in a strange land, destitute of everything, has found in the Home a refuge indeed." This Home admits every woman in distress for a limited time, though some remain on probation for a considerable period.

The Christian Home for Women is designed especially for reclaiming those who have fallen lower. It is gratifying to state that under the Christian discipline and instruction of the Home a marked improvement is noticeable even in a very short time. "Such an institution as a Home for destitute women, "it is affirmed," would not be needed if the sale of intoxicating liquors could be stopped."

DR. SOMERVILLE IN THE HIGHLANDS.—The conclusion of the remarkably interesting evangelistic visitation undertaken by the Moderator of the Free Church of Scotland took place amid the cold and snow of December. The northern part of Argyleshire was the field of this fourth instalment of the tour, and the services were for the most part well attended. At many places refreshing accounts were given of awakenings—at Muckairn and Ballachulish among the workmen in the granite and slate quarries, and at Ardrishaig and Lochgilphead amongst the fishermen. At the latter place forty young men had been admitted as communicants, and a fellowship meeting, carried on by themselves, has since been formed. Two interesting meetings were held on the isle of Lismore, covered though it was with snow. Here there are only 600 inhabitants, but there are represented the Established, Free, United Presbyterian, Independent, and Baptist denominations!

THE CALL, AND A REPLY.

Lo! the Master's voice rings clear,
  Ere the evening falls,
Unto those who stand and wait
  Graciously He calls.

"Go into my harvest-field,
  Work there is for each;
Gather handfuls, bind the sheaves,
  All within your reach."

A REPLY.

"Something left for me to do?
  Other souls to win
To the way of life and peace,
  From the paths of sin?"

"Something left for me to do,
  Other fields to reap?
While the whitening grain waves high,
  Can I idly sleep?"

THE CALL.

Say a kind and loving word,
  All for Jesus' sake!
In your own, the hand of toil,
  Sympathising, take.

Lift your brother's burden up
  To your shoulders, too;
These, and other works of love
  Angels cannot do.

You can do them! ere the night;
  Work shall then be o'er.
Then, with Christ, our gracious Lord,
  Rest for evermore.

LIGHT IN A DARK CORNER.

IT is truly a dark corner—three doors from the Seven Dials. Materially dark and filthy, it is spiritually dense, surrounded by gin-palaces and wine stores. Here I discovered this bright spot, brilliant with cleanliness, decorated with inspiring texts, and spiritually radiant with love, joy, and service, with the undoubted presence of "The Light of the World." Here Miss Ling for the last seventeen years has laboured in connection with St. Giles's Christian Mission, visiting the homes, entreating the ungodly, helping the needy, battling bravely for Christ. Now her spiritual children are growing up, full of love and zeal for her God and their God. There was a family party the other night, and she had them home to tea. A merry party it was.

After tea the leader of the outdoor band told how, just three years ago, he was a drunkard. He was attracted to the Mission one night by the singing, while staggering from the public-house to the low lodging-house. There he was saved through the grace of God. Now he is well clothed, has a good home, a loving Christian wife, and holds a good situation. Many others, fellow-Christians of three, six, and ten years' standing—men and women who were previously reprobate characters, but are now respectable, well clothed, and in their right mind, who can gauge the effect of their lives in the neighbourhood in which they live.

With prayers, hymns, and testimony, not omitting a sprinkling of happy humour, the evening passed away. The one purpose appeared to be "souls for Jesus." Friends wishing to know more of this blessed work should write to Mr. George Hatton (4, Ampton-street, Regent-square, W.C.), superintendent of the St. Giles's Mission. Better still, let them step in any Sunday evening at 7, or Thursday evening at 8.30. A. W. B.

SUNDAY CLOSING. — The Oldham Free Libraries Committee has resolved to recommend the council to close the library on Sundays, one of the reasons being the smallness of the attendance. The Sunday opening of museums and libraries has already been tried at Maidstone, Worcester, and Chester, and closed after trial, by large majorities of the votes of the several Councils.

For the Young.

THE CONGO.

Most of our young readers have heard of the River Congo, the second largest river in the world. We now present them with a group of pictures giving a view of the river itself (Stanley Pool), and scenes in connection with the country through which it passes.

The Congo rises in Lake Bangweolo, and is there called the Luapula. Running north it crosses the equator at Stanley Falls. It soon turns west, and then southwest, receiving countless tributary streams—some of them large rivers—passes through a mountainous district in a succession of cataracts, and enters the Atlantic. Altogether the Congo drains a district of 1,600,000 square miles. At its mouth it is six miles wide, and many miles out at sea so powerful is its current that the water is perfectly fresh.

Ascending the river for the first forty-five miles, the river banks are walls of tangled mangrove trees, water thickets through which no boat can penetrate to land. Then the mangrove swamps disappear, and bright green plains with noble timber trees and palms are seen. Here, as higher up, the Congo teems with animal life. Hippopotami are numerous, and dangerous to the boats; still more so to men are the swarming alligators. Fish abound. The prairies on each side are haunts of antelopes and zebras, and the trees and banks of gaily coloured woodpeckers, darters, and pelicans. About 140 miles from the sea are the Livingstone Falls—a series of thirty cataracts and furious rapids for thirteen miles. To avoid these in the navigation of the river, Mr. H. M. Stanley and the English engineers have made a handsome road, 52 miles long. This was cut in 1879, in many places through solid slate rock.

Once past these hindrances, the river spreads out in a noble stream, which, but for its current, would seem a lake, with here and there the mouth of a large tributary, and dotted with innumerable lovely islands of vivid green meadows and papyrus groves: 335 miles from its mouth the river widens into the famous Stanley Pool, of which we give a picture.

Here is the rising European settlement called Leopoldville, named after the King of the Belgians, who has conceived the project, under the inspiration of Mr. Stanley, of an international occupation of the river. France claims the north bank of the river, fifty miles up from the sea, and is preparing a railway from the coast-settlement of Franceville to Stanley Pool, 276

guese dispute the possession of the southern bank of the Congo where it enters the sea. It is easy to see how enormous in the future must be the trade, and how keenly coveted is the possession of the mouth of this great highway into Africa. In the 1000 miles between Stanley Pool and Livingstone Falls the largest steamers can pass. The forests yield excellent timber, with gums, oils, and edible fruits. The valley is very populous. At each bend of the river one sees fields and villages, reminding one of peaceful England, with men, women, and children busily at work. Some tribes, however, are still cannibals, building splendid war galleys, and forging iron weapons with excellent skill.

[By permission, with article, from Illustrated Missionary News for January (S. W. Partridge & Co.)]

In the dense forests north of the river, where the colossal ironwood trees and the greater palms almost hide the light of the tropical sun, live the nest-building apes and the gorillas, both shown in our picture. The gorilla is shy, but very fierce when attacked; his strong arms and canine teeth are equally feared by man and beast. His cry is a wailing succession of ear-piercing shrieks, heard at great distances. His food is the harsh, unpalatable berries of certain trees, and the tops of the cabbage palm.

The other animals are the eland, wild buffalo, springbok and other antelopes, the zebra in countless herds, and flying foxes (great bats). The lion is absent, but leopards, jackals, and hippopotami abound. Elephants are found on the upper river. Serpents and crocodiles, with their faithful sentinel-birds, are numerous; as are vultures, kingfishers, flamingoes, pelicans, and other African birds.

Coffee, cotton, and india-rubber trees grow wild. Dyes and copal gum are exported. Many thousand tons of the ground-nuts and palm-oil nuts are sent to Europe to be crushed for their oil. Ivory reaches the coast in small quantities, and alas! slaves are still hidden in barracoons in the Portuguese territory, till they can be privately shipped to Brazil, if they escape the English cruisers. The natives believe everywhere in witchcraft. Their religion is Fetishism, a cruel mixture of charms, spirit-worship, and the ordeal by poison.

Missionaries have visited some of the tribes, and are at work among them, but a vast number have not yet heard the Gospel. May the day soon come when faithful men shall be able to carry it to all the natives of the Congo region, and when great multitudes may become followers of Jesus Christ!

HOME FOR LITTLE BOYS.

In the Home at Farningham there are over 300 boys who have found a shelter in this quiet country retreat. Destitute lads are received as soon as they can walk, and do not leave until, having been educated and taught some trade, they are fourteen years and a half old. The report of H.M. Inspector on the school efficiency attained is very satisfactory, and it is encouraging that a number of the lads have made a public profession of their love to God, and desire to consecrate themselves to his service.

At the Home at Swanley, which is for fatherless boys, there are at present 160 in residence, forty-one being admitted during the past year. Here, besides the school training, there are opportunities for learning various trades, and clever boys are encouraged to study higher subjects, and a large number have passed the South Kensington examination in drawing, while in lithography, photography, and shorthand, good work has been done. The report as to both Homes is full of hope as to the future of the boys. London office: Ludgate-circus, E.C.

NEWS FROM THE CONGO.

BY MRS. H. GRATTAN GUINNESS.

MANY of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN who take a warm interest in the Livingstone Inland Mission on the Congo will be glad to hear a few items of recent news, so as to be put au courant with the progress of the Mission.

Its seven stations are all in full working order, and there are groups of native converts at four of them: Pallaballa, where Mr. Clarke and Mr. and Mrs. Stephen White are resident; Mukunbungu, now occupied by Mr. Westlind and three Swedish colleagues; Lukunga, where Mr. Harvey and (it is supposed) Lieut. Hoste are now working; and, above all, Banza Manteke, where Mr. and Mrs. Richards are rejoicing in over a thousand converts. Dr. Edwin Small and his wife, from America, have probably reached this last station by this time, to assist Mr. Richards in caring for and instructing this young church. He visited us on his way out, and we were rejoiced to find him a bright, earnest, intelligent, energetic Christian man, full of enthusiasm for his work, and full also of that cheerful courage and simple faith which are so essential to success in this difficult and dangerous Mission. He is a fully qualified medical man, and has also had six years' experience as a pastor in the United States, having left an attached people and a very happy home to undertake this work. He is the first American white man to join the Mission. Dr. Scholes, a coloured brother, who is also a fully qualified medical missionary, had previously done so, and is now in charge of Mukimvika Station, near Banana, on the coast, where Mr. Probart is also at present. Messrs. McKittric and Gerrish are at Equator Station, and Mr. Billington, with the Congo lads who spent a year or two in England, are at Leopoldville, Stanley Pool.

A number of the older members of the Mission, who have been on furlough in England, Scotland, and Sweden, will shortly be returning to the field, which has evidently, in spite of all its difficulties and dangers, the strongest attraction for them. Several of them have been devoting their year at home to the acquisition of a little practical medical skill, as, in a country where diseases are rife and accidents frequent, even a little acquaintance with the healing art is precious. Dr. Sims, who has been at home longer than he otherwise would have been, in consequence of his tour in America on behalf of the Mission, has been spending the last few months in the Vienna schools of medicine, in order to study some special diseases of the eye. He will sail this month for the Congo, and Mr. T. B. Murphy, of our Institute, accompanies him. They are hoping to settle at Stanley Falls, where a large Arab population is gathered in addition to the natives, and where they will be seven or eight hundred miles from the nearest missionary station. The Arabs have recently risen against the Congo Free State at this point, and expelled its representative, but this is regarded as only a passing trouble, which will soon be set right, as Tippoo Tib, the great Arab Chief in those parts, is anxious to be on good terms with the white man. Dr. Sims has already visited this place, and been deeply moved by the extreme misery of the people. He regards this point as a centre of great importance, and though it is very far in advance of Equator Station yet the Henry Reed steamer will enable the lonely pioneers to keep up communication with their brethren at the lower stations.

The different members of this Mission have now acquired four of the languages spoken on the Congo, and can by means of these communicate with the Fidte, or Lower Congo, people, with the Bateke and Biyansi at the Pool and on the Upper River, and with the Bangala of the Equator. Besides grammar, vocabulary, and reading books, hymns, and the Lord's prayer, "Peep of Day" has been translated by Mr. James B. Eddie, into two of the languages, and the Gospels and portions of the Old Testament by others. Mr. Westlind has prepared the Gospel of John and part of Matthew, Mr. Harvey has translated Mark, and Mr. Richards Luke. The last, however, is not yet gone to press, as, owing to the heavy pressure of work devolving on him in consequence of the glorious work of the Spirit of God going on in and around Banza Manteka—the first Christian parish on the Congo—he has been unable as yet to revise his version of Luke's Gospel for the press. As he has now, however, not only been rejoined by his wife, but also reinforced by the arrival, as we trust, of Dr. Small, it is hoped he will be able ere long to send his manuscript to England.

Mr. Harvey and Miss Harris were united in marriage last September, on the return of the latter to Africa, and we rejoice that our brother's long loneliness will now be exchanged for those home joys and comforts which, whether in England or in Africa, are so cheering and helpful to a servant of God. Both are experienced missionaries, and both have suffered and survived serious illnesses. May they be spared to each other and to the Mission for many a long year of happy ingathering of precious souls.

Each of the missionaries is cheered and encouraged by the blessing granted at the four lower stations, which are also of course the older stations of the Mission.

Mr. McKittric writes from Wangata Station, on the Equator, mentioning an incident he heard from Mr. Harvey on his way up. Mr. Richards and a number of the boys had visited and preached in one of the towns in the Lukunga district; the king and people were mightily moved by the power of God, and before they finished singing "Come, oh, come to Me," the people gave their idols and charms to Mr. Richards, and quietly saw them burned before their eyes! "Here with us," he adds, "the work is at a different stage, so now to work, to watch, to pray, that God, who has so graciously sent down such a blessing at Banza Manteke, may, in a like manner, visit us. I look forward into the future, and can see—Africa evangelised! And the day is not so distant as some suppose. In fact, it is nigh at hand."

Mr. White says, in a recent letter: "I wish those who take an interest in the work out here could just peep in at the morning and evening services, and see with what vigour the people sing the hymns of praise, the eagerness with which they drink in the Word, and the simple, childlike faith they show in their prayers, they would pray and give more liberally to forward the glorious work of 'Congo for Christ.'"

Friends who have not seen any account of the work of grace now going on in this Mission will find an article entitled "Light at Last; or, a Morning of Joy on the Congo," in the current December number of The Regions Beyond (Harley House, Bow, E.).

Dr. Sims and Mr. Murphy hope to sail by the next mail from Lisbon, and will leave England about the 24th. Any parcels of useful medicines, and surgical instruments, books, barter goods, old rags for dressing wounds, old regimentals for presents to kings, pictures for school use, light Indian clothing, small tents, portable furniture, or other travelling requisites, will be acceptable. The journey is a long and costly one, and we are anxious that our auxiliary in England should save all expense connected with it to the American Board, which has its hands full in sustaining the large staff of the Mission, numbering twenty-three brethren and sisters.

Dr. Sims has received one generous donation of £100 towards the establishment of a medical mission and small hospital at the Stanley Falls. To preach the Gospel and heal the sick in the heart of Africa, 1200 miles from the coast, and 700 from any resident European, is a noble calling! Who will remember the pioneers in prayer when they shall be beyond the reach of any other aid? and who will help that they may be well furnished for their distant and dangerous enterprise?

REV. W. HASLAM has conducted a week of mission services at Trinity Church, Rome.

McAULEY MISSION, NEW YORK.

THIS Waterside Mission in the great American city has lately been much blessed. Hither come the drunkard, the thief, the outcast. Men who have been ruined by rum, when they have reached the very bottom of the decline; men from all classes of society, find their way to 316, Water-street. "The condition of some of these men," says a recent report, "almost beggars description. The devil has done his work, and done it thoroughly. Sometimes without coat, or hat, or shoes, and often without clothing sufficient to allow them to appear on the streets in daylight, they find a welcome here." Then, by the power of the Word, when, like the prodigal, they have come to themselves, for a time they are helped, until by their daily walk and upright life they show to their former companions and friends that they are indeed new creatures in Christ Jesus.

From a report of the recent anniversary meeting it is clear that the strong point in the services is the testimony of those who have been redeemed. "The word 'Redeemed!' was written in joy on every convert's face, and as eyes met—eyes once bleared and blackened through rum, but now clear, bright, steady, and hopeful through redemption and regeneration—cheeks became wet, and voices trembled as they sang." After some seven or eight had thus witnessed to the blessed change manifest in their lives, and to their present happiness, "thrilling testimonies were given by young converts who had been saved one day, one week, a month, twenty weeks; the interest became so intense that scarcely a dry eye was in the house, and right in the midst of their simple, honest, but eloquent testimonies, drinking men arose and asked to be prayed for."

The attendance during the past year has been 25,860, and many have found peace in believing on Christ. Since Mr. S. H. Hadley, who was converted at this Mission four years ago, has been superintendent, he has made it a practice to invite those of the seekers who come forward, who are destitute and appear to be contrite, to come to breakfast the next morning; and in this way some three hundred and fifty to four hundred meals a month are given. "The Lord," says Mr. Hadley, "has fairly showered his blessings on us during the past summer and fall. There are few places where the influence of the Holy Spirit is so plainly felt as here. This has been remarked upon hundreds of times by saint and sinner."

SOCIETY FOR DISTRIBUTING SCRIPTURE TRUTH.—The twenty-eighth annual report of this Society contains many letters from ministers and others, both at home and abroad, as to the value of the rolls, handbooks, and leaflets it has been the means of circulating. A Roman Catholic abbé writes: "I shall hang the leaves where the boys may read them." From the Bishop of Mauritius, Pastor Chiniquy, and from Miss Whately, at Cairo, who uses them in her schools, thankful acknowledgments have been received; while to many a weary traveller, or sick person, or lonely seaman, the simple message on the printed sheet has come as a message of cheer and comfort from God Himself. Communications should be addressed to the Secretary, 47, Pevensey-road, Eastbourne.

SOUTHEND, ESSEX. — The growth of the Christian Medical Mission, in this small sea-side town, has been somewhat remarkable. The work was begun in January, 1885, and during that year 1700 cases received advice and medicine. During last year (1886) some 4000 cases were treated, many of the patients coming considerable distances by road and rail. The development of the work has been such that it was found necessary to have larger premises, and in August, 1886, a mission house was opened. The very pleasant and comfortable waiting-room is used (at times when not needed for the Medical Mission) for a Bible-class, provident society, and a penny bank. The Medical Mission is entirely self-supporting, all the workers, including the physician, giving their services gratuitously.

WHAT THINK YE OF CHRIST?

BY DR. ALEX. WHYTE, EDINBURGH.*

CHRISTIANITY without Christ was John Bunyan's religion at this time, and it is still the religion of a vast number of men. Christendom is cleaved by sects. That is sad, but it is not so sad as to know that there are many Churches and Christians without Christ. Where Christ is, there are Christendom and Christians. Paul said: "There is neither Greek nor Jew, circumcision nor uncircumcision, Barbarian, Scythian, bond nor free; but Christ is all, and in all." So among the disruptions and schisms of our day we can say, "There is neither East nor West, Greek nor Latin, Popish nor Presbyterian, Quaker nor Salvationist; but where He is, all are one in Him." The schisms which perplex us are but skin-deep; they do not dismember, but only bring out the vital union between Christ and those who are living members in Him. There may be, and are, schisms and distresses; but if Christ is preached, we rejoice.

In "Grace Abounding" there is no mention made of Christendom, or of its schisms. John Bunyan's aim is to relate to his spiritual children what the exceeding grace of God did for him, and he sticks to it. Let us do the same. Let us follow along the way he trod, and put our steps into his, if only to see how small our steps are compared with his hungry strides for glory.

Puritan preachers had certain marks they gave to try their hearers, and unmask hypocrites. We mealy-mouthed preachers are afraid events may suggest there are hypocrites in our congregations. Let us look at one or two marks of the beginning of Bunyan's religion, and see if we are beginning in even his poor, irreligious way. He fell in eagerly with the religion of the time. He went to church twice a day. He did not need the minister and an elder to beat him out. He was, doubtless, wont to go to church on Sabbath, by the conversation of his wife during the week, and by his growing superstition. He sang and prayed most devoutly with the best of the worshippers. He was like some people in our day who spend their passion on feelings and postures, and not on indwelling sins. Though he went to church, he confesses that all the time he did not think whether there was a Christ or no. All these things did not really affect him. He took his hard and wicked heart to church twice a day, and took it home again. He afterwards looked back on this period with horror and loathing; all the time he was insensible of sin and misery. Are you sensible of the misery caused by sin—not misery on account of losses, crosses, and trials? Do you feel the indescribable pain of being a sinner?

Another and severer est by which Bunyan tried himself was that he never thought of Christ. This is what Samuel Rutherford calls "the black mark of reprobation." How do you stand in presence of this test? It is not so much what you think about Christ. You have been trained from the cradle to think about Him as the Redeemer of the elect, about what He did, and about the benefits in life, death, and resurrection that come to the believer through his work. But the searching inquiry for you is, What place does He occupy in your heart? Out of the heart are the issues of life, and heart and life will soon be at the judgment seat.

There is no surer test of our being Christians than to notice how our thoughts rally to Christ. The believing man gives his thoughts so to Christ that He shapes his conceptions of the world, and sees all created things, matter and spirit, man and beast, in Christ. So beholding them, he sees new beauty in them; and, best of all, he sees himself in Christ—a son of God, and an heir of everlasting life.

Students! think much of Christ. Love the masters who love Christ. Do you go through the streets startling the passers-by as you clap your hands with joy because you are students of the Word of God? Do you sing beside the country hedges because you are called to be ministers of the Gospel? You think of your college, of your congregation, and of your manse; do you think of them all in Christ? Very soon the exigencies of your business will make you think, write, and speak about Him. There is the danger that will beset you. You may hoodwink yourselves, because his name is ever on your lip, into the belief that you are really thinking about Him. How did your heart gravitate to-day? What thoughts came into your mind as you walked along the streets?

Be ready to live the lives of pure, prayerful, laborious, believing men. If you are not prepared for this, choose some other calling than the Christian ministry. Go to the bar, or the Civil Service, or the army; but do not enter the pulpit. You must be like Paul, if you are to be a true minister, prepared to give up home, kindred, earthly honour, and life itself, for Christ's sake. You must be ready to count all things loss for the knowledge of Christ.

THE JAPANESE VILLAGE.

I FEEL it to be due to your readers that I should inform them, through your columns, that the interesting Japanese party at Knightsbridge is likely to break up soon. Some will be returning to their native land, and some will remain in England. They wish me to thank the kind friends who have taken such deep interest in them during their sojourn of two years among us. They say:—

"We love England and the English people, and are deeply grateful for the opportunity given us of seeing something of the interior arrangements of English homes. It would have been a misfortune not to have had the insight into your domestic life, and the good impression which we have received by social intercourse. Without it we would have left with very false impressions.

"Domo!" (expression of admiration) they have often exclaimed, when returning after a Sunday afternoon's outing: "truly, the shadow of God was over us to-day; such kindness is far more than we could have anticipated. It is food to the heart and medicine to the eyes, &c. We have always felt from what we saw of the daily visitor to the village that we were living among a great and honourable people, and understood by their pleasant manners that they welcomed us to their country, and wished our good. It never occurred to us that we should have been the honoured guests of their family and friends, circles. We are, indeed, profoundly grateful. We shall speak well of you to our people in Japan as soon as we return. Sayonara!" (Good-bye).

I beg to endorse and give emphasis to all they say, and fail to say, expressive of their gratitude to those dear friends who have given me also the great pleasure of spending so many happy Sunday afternoons with my Japanese friends within the last two years in their delightful Christian homes, and about in their beautiful grounds. Our Japanese visitors will never forget it.

Words fail to tell how often it seemed to me to be the success of my feeble effort to bring the Gospel to them. I felt it was my opportunity for enforcing much that I endeavoured to inculcate during my stay of nine years among them in their own country. I have also felt that any effort to influence them with copies of the Scriptures, books, tracts, together with the great advantage of interchanging thoughts in their mother tongue, would have fallen ineffectually to the ground had not so many friends been raised to open their homes, and thus give such clear proof that the heart also was open to receive the stranger in the name of Christ. For it would be very conflicting to an Oriental, to think of the presence of so many earnest missionaries in his native land, if in England, where so much is done for home and foreign missions, no interest were taken in his spiritual welfare; for in England they are practically set free from much that acts as trammels and hindrances to reaching them, and to their

Thus I feel encouraged to believe that some day we shall find that, after all, they entered our English homes with the inquiry of the Greeks of old, "We would see Jesus." I am sure they have received impressions of his loving character, as set forth by the Scriptures, so often perused in the native village. Oh! may it yet be signally manifested that the Master Himself was in disguise and a stranger among you in their persons. So you shall prove that inasmuch as ye did it to the least of them ye did it unto Him.

My Japanese friends desire special mention to be made of the boundless kindness shown them by Mrs. Alexander, Aubrey House, Kensington. When the first Village was burnt, and they, like shipwrecked mariners, were destitute of everything for a time, that lady gave all the women and children shelter, board, and clothing for three days. This, to say nothing of the eleven or twelve times she has had them to her house of an afternoon, was a strong proof of her genuine Christian generosity. And in this Mr. and Mrs. Alexander have proved that their Christian character is wrapped up in their name—Alexander, i.e., "Helper of man." May the Lord bless them yet more and more—spiritually, temporally, and physically.

The Japanese leave us with much regret. One woman returns a widow. Her husband is buried in the Ilford Cemetery, where a small party of us have gone several times, thus giving the lonely widow the opportunity of watering the grave with her copious tears; an opportunity which we improved by reading from God's Word suitable passages bearing on the transitoriness of our earthly lot, and that the true and permanent are only enjoyed and held in Christ.

The unfortunate young man who lost his life in the fire of the first village is interred in the Brompton Cemetery, with an interesting and unique tablet, bearing an inscription in native character, and towards which all the villagers contributed.

Through the kindness of the Dowager Lady Congleton, Admiral Prevost, and others, the British and Foreign Bible Society—on their application—furnished us with a liberal supply of New Testaments in Japanese. I feel sure time will show that it has been as bread cast upon the waters. The fact that they are often found poring over portions of Scripture, and their animated remarks and questionings, are sufficient evidence that we shall reap the seed sown.

The moral tone of the village, taking everything into consideration, has been very satisfactory. Where irregularities have taken place they have been trenchantly dealt with. Thus the reputation of the miniature Japan brought to our doors by Mr. Tannaker Buhicrosan has been creditably sustained throughout. I now tender to him my warm thanks for the access, by means of a free pass, which I have had to the Village, and for the kindness shown me by himself and the staff of English assistants; and I pray that much blessing may come to him and all concerned.—Yours faithfully,

January 13. M. MCLEAN.

P.S.—Should your space admit of the appended list of names, it would be very gratifying to my Japanese friends, who feel much concerned lest I should forget to write and say "sayōnara" (good-bye) for them.

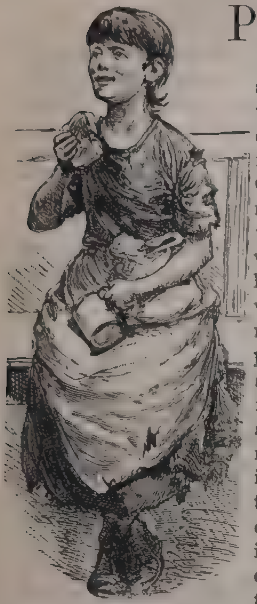
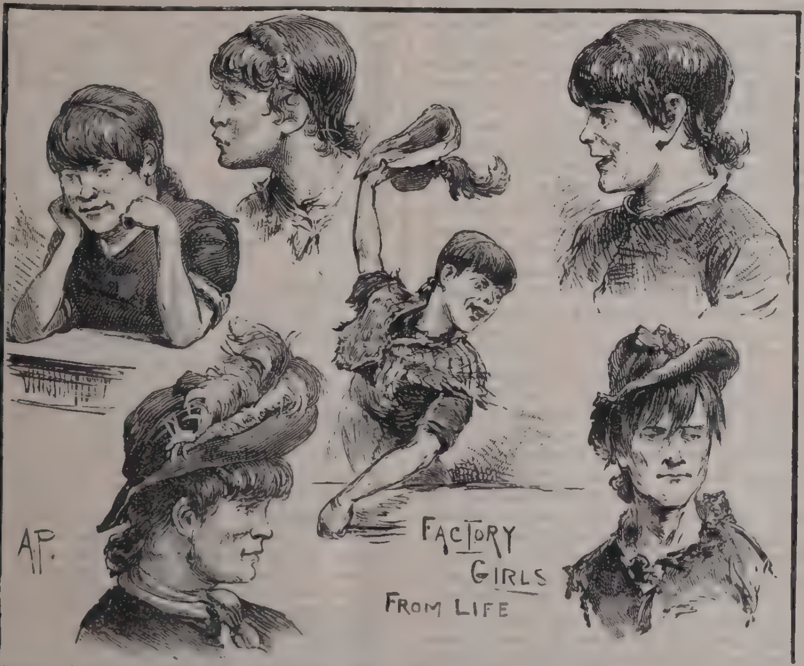
FACTORY GIRLS AT TEA.



PICTURES of social life are being freely supplied just now, and well they illustrate some phases of our many-sided existence. From Mr. George Sims and many another artist with pen and pencil we get sketches of the life of the people, which are by no means lacking in pathos, though they are wanting in the inimitable touches, and also in the humour which Dickens invariably imparted to his subjects. We doubt whether there is any better field for character - sketches than is to be found in that home of the homeless, the Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse, presided over with such felicity by Dr. Barnardo. The other week the boys occupied the field; and what illustrations from low life, almost the lowest, did they afford! The following week the canvas was filled with girls, drawn from a more happily circumstanced grade of life; but what characters are here also the artist's sketches will show. We have said that these are more happily circumstanced. They are all in work, and with but very few exceptions in a state of rude health, with round red cheeks, and an exuberance of vitality which might astonish many who think of factory life as injurious to health. Certainly in this respect they presented a marked contrast to the boys, the ragged condition and starved appearance of many of whom told a sad tale.



The seventeen or eighteen hundred girls assembled at the Edinburgh Castle on Wednesday evening last week were from the East-end factories. There were representatives of the match, and jam, and brush, and rope-making and other industries; and amongst all these no wonder there were many "characters." One pretty general feature scarcely needed the Doctor's remark, "If I had such a fringe as those two girls over there I would be quiet," to point it out. Not to wear the hair in that most disfiguring, often repulsive style, would evidently be to be out of the fashion; a matter of as much import to these damsels as to ladies of high estate. The pity is that, in regard to this point at any rate, the girls do not take their pattern from Our Own Gazette, which this month has a capital article on the subject. Hats, however, supplied variety; not that this was lacking, if you looked at their faces.

And then the scene! How full of animation, and what a babel of noise sometimes, when, for a moment or two, the Doctor seemed to forget his indispensable buglers, with their well-understood proclamation of silence. What a running to and fro before all were settled in their places; and then with what eagerness mugs and parcels of buns, &c., were taken, and the former filled and refilled. Feet kept time as the band played, and when, at a signal from the Doctor, some well-known air was given, it was taken up in a moment by a thousand or more voices. And from this corner and that every now and then there would be a wild waving of hands and hats, which, accompanied by groans and other noises, reached its climax when those who belonged to different factories were called upon to hold up their hands.

But what was the object of the gathering? The previous week this had been very obvious. It was to feed the starving, and to gather out some hundred or so who would be only too glad to get, in Dr. Barnardo's hospitable Homes, food, shelter, and work, together with a fair start in life, which they had never yet had. The object this time was no less important. As Dr. Barnardo stated it, this was to invite the girls to attend meetings held every Tuesday and Thursday evenings, under the direction of Miss Kennedy, in whom they would find a friend. Here, also, they would learn many things which it is important for girls to know—how to make their own clothes, &c. A very interesting part of the proceedings was the presentation of a number of prizes to those who during the past twelve months have attended these meetings regularly, and manifested a desire to improve. These prizes consisted of workboxes, books, and in several cases dresses.

Another object was that the girls by being brought together should regard with friendly feelings those engaged in different factories, instead of with the feeling of antipathy of which there was more than once some manifestation. Dr. Barnardo had asked one girl engaged at Bryant & May's, "What is the great hindrance in the way of you girls getting on?" "Well," she replied, "there is no use in telling lies, because you would know I was doing so. I do believe it is because a large number of us when old enough get to like the drink. We girls lose more through that than anything else." Then in a few telling words he urged them to have nothing to do with the drink, to avoid bad language, and to yield themselves to the best of friends, the Lord Jesus Christ, and to love Him because He so loved them as no one on earth could do.

By way of variation, at an earlier period of the evening, Captain Clinton had endeavoured in a quarter of an hour to take the young people round the world, but we are afraid the impression conveyed was not very vivid. Mr. J. Bennett Anderson also spoke and sang, but it is no easy task to secure the attention of such a company; though we are bound to say the order maintained throughout was most creditable on the whole.

Perhaps the supreme moment of the evening, in which it seemed as if all were swayed by one common impulse, was when, after repeating at Dr. Barnardo's request the text, "Wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow," they sang that well-known hymn, suggested immediately to their minds by the words. It was as if all were animated by one spirit, and in the sound of so many voices blended harmoniously together, as though by some subtle inspiration and in obedience to some sudden but hidden touch, there was a grandeur which must have come as a surprise to many.

Thus fitly ended a most interesting meeting, which we sincerely trust will be fruitful in blessing.

MR. WOOKEY IN SUNDERLAND.

THIS evangelist has concluded a very successful eleven days' mission at Sunderland. The meetings were held in a newly-erected mission chapel, planted in one of the most populous districts in the town, and now likely to become an important mission centre. Mr. Wookey drew together large congregations. The meetings increased, night after night, in numbers and power. His discourses were listened to with rapt attention, and it was found, at the close of the services, that not a few were willing to take Christ as their Saviour. During the mission a Bible-class of boys that the evangelist had inaugurated, all confessed Jesus with but one exception.

An opportunity was given for any who had accepted Christ during the services to testify, and it was particularly interesting to hear one convert, a sailor in advanced life, praise God for saving him at the meetings. He could praise the Lord now for saving him at one time from drowning, and at another time from narrowly escaping being swallowed by a shark when at sea. Both he and his wife have been brought safe to shore in the Gospel net, and are rejoicing in the new life in Christ Jesus. On Sunday week the building was packed; at the close the hearts of the Christians were cheered and encouraged by seeing many come over to the Lord's side.

Sunderland. A. J. PLUMMER.

TRAMCAR MEN.—In a New Year's address to tramcar men, Mrs. Reaney says there is much reason to thank God for hours of labour to some degree lightened, for increased opportunities of Sunday rest, and that fellowship which comes with home life, and for a mitigation in some measure of many of those petty difficulties which embitter life, and weigh down honest labour with burdens grievous to bear. Expressions of sympathy and good will have been received from many parts of the world. Mrs. Reaney reminds the men of their duties, and hopes that the New Year resolves will be faithfully kept, so strengthening their individual manhood and bringing increased blessing to their families.

A PRAIRIE CITY.—Rev. Jas. C. Oakshett, who went out to Watertown, D.T., in October last to take the oversight of the central Christian church in that city, writes of it, that it is a city of homes, with good schools and six churches and Sunday-schools. There was, however, no place for young men, and no special look-out kept for them, so a meeting was convened, and, after discussion, a Y.M.C.A. was organised. A constitution has since been adopted, rooms have been secured, and officers elected. "Though so far west," he adds, "we do not forget the pleasant work and meetings in the Y.M.C.A. of London."

EVANGELISATION and the CHURCHES

By Rev. GEO. F. PENTECOST, D.D.

Let us now inquire into the question, What is "the Relation of the Churches to the Work of Evangelisation?" and, if possible, indicate some lines upon which we may hope so to reconstruct our polity that we may go forward with greater vigour and a truer method to the accomplishment of our mission as an evangelising Church.

I. The Work of Evangelisation is the first and imperative Duty of the Church.

We must put ourselves back to the beginning, and commence our work just as though the commission had come to us to-day for the first time. In fact, the commission: Go, preach the Gospel, and make disciples, and teach them, is contemporaneous with all ages, and every day, and all time. It is as obligatory upon us now as it was at first upon those disciples who received it fresh from the lips of the risen Christ upon the Mount of Olives. Nineteen centuries of Christian progress, and church organisation, and ecclesiastical and theological conflict, have not weakened the imperative force of that command. However unfaithful we may have been in the past, however much we may have allowed church life to take precedence over the initial and pioneer work of evangelising the world, the work is still the first and paramount duty of all Christian people and communities. That commission must be the starting-point and daily incentive to all personal and church work.

With all the progress we have made, with all the triumphs of Christianity behind us and present with us, there are more unsaved people in the world to-day than there were when the disciples first began to preach the gospel. There are more in the heathen world, and there are more in the civilised world—which means that Christianity is not keeping pace with the world's population.

II. The Field of Evangelisation.

In this discussion we take no account of the foreign field, though we are not unmindful of it. The pressing need just now is in the large cities at home, the great centres of population. The city is the seat of intellectual activity and infidelity and crime. Here we must fight and turn the tide of battle; here we must gain our victories, if anywhere.

As goes our work in the cities, so will it go in the country. If we will allow the city churches to become mere centres of social religious life, and not the pulsing centres of evangelistic life, the Church will fail in its great mission, and the country districts will never be evangelised. Already the disintegrating influences of infidel thought are making alarming progress in the cities, and the church of to-day as at present administered is utterly unable to stem it. It is because we have lost our hold on the masses, by allowing the evangelistic work of Christianity to fall by the way. We have moved our churches away from the masses of the people, and practically surrendered the ground to unbelief and the forces of sin, in order that we may establish them among the homes of the wealthy and well-to-do; not so much for their evangelisation as for their comfort and convenience, and the support socially and financially which we may get from them.

III. The Method of Evangelisation.

If we are to return to the primitive type, we must enlarge the function of the Church so that it shall at once become responsible for the spiritual care and edification of its members, and for the evangelisation of the community in which it is located. In order to this several things must be changed.

(1) There must be concert of action among the churches. The isolation of our churches from each other must cease, and concert of action must be instituted.

(2) The ministry of the Church must be enlarged. I do not know of a single church in which there is a recognised evangelist as well as a pastor and teacher, though there is scarcely a leading church in any city where such a minister would not find ample scope for his work; and, indeed, the same might be said of many of the smaller churches. Suppose that, instead of two pastoral sermons on the Lord's Day, there should be one evangelistic sermon, and all the effort and energy of the Christian people should be exerted to bring their unconverted friends and neighbours, and any and all people whom they might induce to come to such a service. There are a few churches that have adopted this plan in part, and made the second service distinctly evangelistic, and the effect has generally been that the house has been filled with people, many of whom were either non-church-goers entirely, or at best occasional attendants. Such services have been particularly successful in bringing out the young people.

The financial question ought not to enter here, but be left for its own solution in the practical working of the new order of things. Certain it is, however, that the function of the Church must be enlarged so as to provide for a more distinct, more direct evangelistic work in our city churches.

(4) The number of public services must be increased.

At present we open our churches twice only during the week for preaching services; both on the Lord's Day, and for the rest of the six days the church is closed. This is a most disastrous and unscriptural practice. We cannot imagine the early churches giving themselves to the active work of saving souls by means of preaching the Gospel and personal testimony on the Lord's Day only, and remitting all public effort the rest of the week.

It was the habit of Paul and his fellow-labourers to preach in the synagogue on the Sabbath days, and between the Sabbaths in the market places and other resorts of the people. The necessity for this kind of aggressive work is as imperative to-day as in his time.

(5) Our preaching places ought to be multiplied. The places of secular amusement, the concert saloons and the common saloons abound on every side, and are open day and night. There is scarcely a whole block in our cities in which one such place is not located, or that is not within easy reach of one. If we were fully alive to our responsibility, we would seize on a thousand places—empty warehouses and stores, small unoccupied halls and other places, that might be secured temporarily, if not permanently, and so confront these multiplied forces of sin.

(6) We must break the caste which prevails in our churches, especially in the larger and wealthier ones. There are churches in our large cities in which there can scarcely be found a single working-man or woman. There is literally no place for the poor in them. The church has gone after the rich to the neglect of the poor, and thus we have lost our hold on the working-man and the poor in general. The artisan, the working-man, and the poor will come to hear the Gospel gladly when the conditions are such that they may come. They are not opposed to the Gospel; the quarrel of the working-man is not against Christianity, but against the church which gives him the cold shoulder. I have in the last ten years conducted evangelistic meetings in many different cities. In these meetings I have seen all classes mingling as freely as if they were political or secular gatherings. I have seen the millionaire, banker, and merchant, sitting by the side of a hodcarrier, and singing from the same book; and his wife arrayed in silk and sealskin, sitting beside a charwoman and sharing her book with her; and they both seemed to like it.

It is not to be denied that the man with a gold ring is more welcome and courteously entreated at the door of the church than the man in vile raiment. If we are ever to win back the poor to the Church and to Christ, our whole policy in this respect must be changed. Of course, this means revolution, but it must be done; and whenever we are willing to do it, we will be able to find out how it can be done. It can be done, and yet the family feeling of the church be preserved.

(To be concluded.)

SERVANTS AT TEA.

BY ONE WHO WAS THERE.

On Thursday week the twentieth anniversary of the Mission to Servants, superintended by Mr. and Mrs. Goodchild, was held at the Mission Hall, in Sloane-terrace, S.W. Every grade of domestic service was represented, and there was a noticeable absence of that careworn countenance so predominative in many gatherings. From the theme of conversation, all seemed to possess "the Pearl of Great Price," and were endeavouring to adorn their lives with that priceless possession. The servants evidently find that "his service is perfect freedom," or their countenances belied.

It was stated that instead of their being compelled to find new premises, the Earl of Cadogan, who is landlord, had kindly extended the lease for seven years. The premises being dilapidated, will require an outlay of quite £150 at once. A glimpse behind the scenes of this association was obtained, for Mr. Goodchild had a batch of letters from Christian servants in country mansions who "only wished they were there." There must have been quite fifty requests for praise and prayer, on varied subjects. A cook wrote praying for grace, and for the family she is serving, "who have all their dinner parties on Sundays," &c. A parlour-maid desired united praise for the oft-prayed-for conversion of a brother; a butler for his efforts in a country village; an ex-servant, now a matron in a girls' home, wrote, "fifteen souls in this house have professed to have found Christ."

The meeting was thrown open, when there was an uninterrupted stream of testimony and exhortation from brethren and sisters. Let your light shine; let your work speak; let your consecration become the Gospel; preach Christ in your life all the day long—were the key-notes of this servants' gathering. A delightful and hallowed freedom pervaded the occasion, and it was only the inexorable flight of time that brought it to a close, after upwards of four hours had gone too quickly. The Women's Branch of this Institution is at Warwick-street, Ebury-bridge, S.W., where lodgings are provided, and a registry is kept. Miss Freeman, the Matron, will forward any information solicited. There is accommodation for about thirty men at the men's branch at Sloane-terrace, which seems to be a veritable "home from home."

SCOTLAND AND THE BIBLE.—It is remarkable that in a year of widespread depression the ordinary revenue of the National Bible Society of Scotland should have been fully maintained. The issues reported for 1886 were 167,352 Bibles, 226,059 Testaments, and 314,169 portions, in all 707,580. The foreign issues were nearly half a million copies or parts of Scripture. In the course of 1886 ten new auxiliaries and parochial associations had been formed in Scotland. Dr. J. Elder Cumming has accepted the chairmanship of the Western Committee for the current year.

EMIGRATION.—An important batch of papers has been issued from the Emigrants' Information Office, recently opened at 31, Broadway, Westminster. Intending emigrants would do well to consult these, for in them is included all information that can well be put on paper concerning the broad fields of labour in Canada, as well as in the Australian and South African Colonies. With these papers in his hand, the man who thinks he can do better in other lands may make a choice, on thoroughly reliable information, in what direction he will bend his steps. In addition to all particulars concerning the passage, there is a brief description of the leading features and climate of each colony, with the advantages they severally possess, and other details, such as the cost of living, rent, &c. From these papers we see at a glance where certain classes of emigrants should or should not go; to whom, and to what colonies, free passages are given; where it is hopeless for men without capital to go; and we cannot do better than recommend all those who think of emigrating to study well the facts here stated before making up their minds.

PEARL DIVING IN THE EAST-END.

AMONGST the quiet but happy efforts in our land is that carried on by the Old Ford Y.W.C.A., 237, Roman-road, E., in behalf of those sadly-neglected girls who swarm by thousands in our East-end jam, rope, fringe, slop, match, and pickle factories. Few outsiders are aware of the terrible condition of many of these girls, the wretchedness and misery of their homes, and the abounding temptations which beset them in their factory-life, on the public streets, and at the vicious music-halls. The Vicar of Old Ford, seeing the fearful evils in existence, took a large building (Auleta House) in the Roman-road as a centre of work amongst them in East London. This was done with the help of kind friends, who also urged the employment of a paid mission-woman, whose special duty it should be to visit every factory where girls are employed, to accost them on the public thoroughfares, and to invite them to the cosy and comfortably furnished rooms.

This is being done carefully and systematically, and the work is making progress in every respect. The girls are taught reading and writing. They are trained to sing and sew, to dress dolls for children's hospitals, to cut out clothing, &c. The girls have their clubs; and lectures on subjects of interest in nature, science, and household economy are given. Teas and simple games are not left out, but the chief attention is paid to Christian evangelisation. Miss Rowland, the superintendent, conducts a Bible-class in the evening at the rooms. Several interesting cases of conversion have recently taken place. In one of these the practical evidences of true life-consecration to the glory of God in her factory have been most cheering. The persecution through which a Christian girl has to pass is so great that its recital would be regarded as unreal. One companion, when pressed by the superintendent to give her heart to God at once, said with a shudder, "I can never become a Christian, and have to go through what —— does at the factory." There is a grand field for winning souls from among these thousands of East London girls, over whose hearts and lives there is need to grieve. Far more ought to be done for them. Lady helpers are needed, willing to hold Bible-classes, give lectures on thrift and cookery, and deliver addresses on all kinds of domestic and social themes. Miss Rowland, 237, Roman-road, Old Ford, E., invites such.

ORPHAN HOMES, LEOMINSTER.—The seventeenth annual report of these Homes is delightfully illustrated, and should prove effective as a specimen of the work done at the "Orphans' Printing Press." The present number of children in the Institution is thirty-seven, six of whom (all boys) have been admitted during the year; it is rather curious that in this time not a single application on behalf of a girl has been made. The bigger girls are capital nurses to the little boys, and are trained for domestic service, while some of the lads go into the printing office, and are apprenticed to trades or placed in situations as funds permit. The most of those who have gone forth into the world from hence have done well. There is appended a report of the Leominster Tract Association, which during the year has issued 368,000 of these useful messengers.

THE JAFFA MISSION.—The work long carried on at the ancient Jaffa by Miss Walker-Arnott continues to maintain its usefulness and interest. The day-schools have been attended by more than one hundred girls, while forty-five others have been boarded in the Institution, a few at their own cost. A weekly religious meeting held in the house of one of the Moslem girls who was married a year ago, and attended by about thirty women, is a notable addition to the operations of the Mission, as is also a working party of ladies to make clothing for the poor children. The large hall of the Institution, which accommodates nearly five hundred people, has on several occasions been quite filled. Some of the girls who have passed through this Institution are now teachers. Rev. William Fraser, of Brighton, in a letter accompanying the report, speaks with great pleasure of the visit he and his companions made last spring.

MR. RABINOWITZ IN ENGLAND.

AN INTERESTING RECEPTION.

THE well-known leader of the evangelical movement among Jews in Russia, having come on a visit to this country, a large and influential company assembled at the Conference Hall, Mildmay, on Tuesday week, at the invitation of Mr. J. E. Mathieson and Rev. J. Wilkinson, to give him a Christian welcome. The account Mr. WILKINSON gave of the manner in which his friendship with Mr. Rabinowitz arose was full of interest. About four years ago he saw in a newspaper cutting some mention of what Mr. Rabinowitz was doing, and, later on, observing a similar paragraph, he wrote to him. A correspondence ensued, and, there being an earnest desire on the part of both to see one another, a meeting took place in Berlin in August, 1885. The first interview was of a very touching character—at the words "Wilkinson," "Rabinowitz," in true patriarchal fashion, they fell on each other's necks and wept and kissed each other. The brotherly love thus commenced has grown and strengthened, and now, feeling a great desire to consult Mr. Wilkinson, Dr. Saphir, and other friends, and to have the joy of communion with Christians in England, Mr. Rabinowitz came to London after Christmas. He had not come to be lionised, Mr. Wilkinson said, but it was felt that it would be a great help and comfort to him to mingle amongst those who loved the Lord Jesus Christ, and especially to be introduced to the friends at Mildmay. This meeting had therefore been arranged that they might give to their brother the right hand of fellowship. Mr. Rabinowitz had already addressed several gatherings of his Jewish brethren, and very touching it was to hear him preface an address to a number of Jewish children with the words, "My dear little brothers and sisters."

Mr. RABINOWITZ, speaking in his own language, and his interpreter being Mr. Adler, told how, after years of study of the Holy Scriptures, his eyes were opened to see that Jesus, of whom the New Testament testified, is the Messiah for whom all true Israelites were looking. He told how, long ago, he was in the habit of reading the Old Testament with his Jewish brethren; how at St. Petersburg, Constantinople, and other places he had sought to improve their position, and to obtain for them equal rights with their fellow citizens. At one period he hoped much from the liberal disposition of Alexander II., but all hopes in this direction were scattered to the winds by the outrages in Bulgaria, by the Russo-Turkish war, and by the persecution that broke out in Moscow. He turned his thoughts then to colonisation, and, visiting Palestine, was deeply pained as he beheld the indignities to which, at the Wailing Place in Jerusalem, his brethren were subjected. Here also, as he was standing on the Mount of Olives, the conviction was forced upon him that the Jesus of whom he had read in the New Testament was the Messiah. Then it was that the words of our Lord, "Without Me ye can do nothing," came home to his mind. On returning to his native place, many Jewish brethren visited him, and with these on the Sabbath he read the portion of the Old Testament appointed for the day, and then some portion of the New Testament, expounding it to them. Many of them came to think of Jesus as he did, and then, feeling that, in order to convince them that he had indeed accepted Jesus as the Messiah, he should be baptized, he went to Berlin for this purpose. Some thought that then he would become a Christian, but he told them that he was a Jew still, only that he had received Christ into his heart as his Saviour.

Another text much impressed on his mind about this time was, "If the Son shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed." After his baptism he thought the Jews would not call upon him as they had done before; but even more came, because then they saw that he was really in earnest in the matter, and they argued that, as he had always taken an interest in his brethren, and by his efforts secured them some advantages, he must mean well. Some few, however, opposed him, and wrote letters to the papers against him, but this soon died out. Having given himself to the study of the New Testament, he taught openly and publicly, and also published his sermons and pamphlets in the Russian language, these being circulated by the thousand. Many then began to see that it was a good thing to be a Christian, and asked for baptism. Thus he showed that there was life amongst the Jewish people, though they seemed to be wrapped in death, and now they needed a place of worship, a liturgy, and several other things, about which, indeed, he had come to England to consult his friends. Above all, they needed that passport, the Bible, which God Himself had provided for them, but which they had so long neglected. And this he prayed his Christian friends to help to give to his Jewish brethren.

Rev. Dr. SAPHIR said it was a great happiness to have seen their dear brother face to face, and if they could not understand his words, his voice and emotion sufficiently testified to his sincerity. Mr. Rabinowitz is a type of the God-fearing Jews who believe in Scripture and love their nation, and who in that way are prepared to receive Him who is the centre of Scripture. It is not enough to remember that in sending missionaries to the Jews there is a foundation on which to rest. The Jews, as a people, cannot forget that they are children of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and they believe, notwithstanding all they have gone through, that God will be faithful to them, and that He has still some purpose in regard to them. Unfortunately, Christian and Gentile with them are synonymous terms, and what they who believe in Jesus as the Messiah had to show was that they had so accepted Him, not although they were Jews, but because they were Jews. Here was the sum and substance of the whole thing. Their friend preached now before numbers of Jews, and, as they heard first words from the Pentateuch and the Prophets, and then from the Gospels and Epistles, they could not but feel that in all there was the same voice, the same language, the same Lord. All this is the Lord's doing, and it is wonderful in our eyes. Christians should not be surprised that the first thought to a Jew was with reference to the deliverance of the nation by the promised Messiah. The same thought was seen also in the song of Zacharias, as in that of the Virgin Mary and the aged Simeon. In regard to this work he felt they should have no theories, no systems, nor say this must be or this must not be; it was for them simply to watch God's hand, who opens and no man shuts, and shuts and no man opens.

Colonel PASCHKOFF also briefly addressed the meeting, showing how God's Spirit often speaks directly to the heart without any interference from man. This was clearly the case in regard to Mr. Rabinowitz, and for this, as for the wonderful evidences that God is moving in the hearts of men at the present time in a very extraordinary manner, it is impossible to feel too thankful. The meeting was closed with prayer by Mr. Reginald Radcliffe.

SAN REMO, ITALY.—Meetings were held here this week in connection with the Week of Prayer. All the topics suggested for exhortation in the programme of the Evangelical Alliance were taken up. Rev. J. Livingstone Fenton, of the English, and Rev. Alexander Robertson, of the Scotch Church, took part at all the meetings, and were assisted by lay and clerical visitors to San Remo. The attendances were not large, but much interest was manifested in the proceedings, and an impetus given to Christian life and work in the place.

PORTSLADE-BY-SEA, NEAR BRIGHTON.—For some years there has been a growing population at this place, and their spiritual wants have been ministered to by Rev. J. Thornberry, minister of the Congregational Church at Fishersgate. Besides the iron church, which on Sunday evenings has an average attendance of four hundred, three mission-rooms have branched out in different directions. The present building, an iron one, being in a dilapidated state, it is proposed to erect a permanent structure in a central position, and a site has been given for the purpose. The cost of building will be about £1200. The ministers of several churches in Brighton join in commending this effort.

YOUNG MEN at ALDERSGATE-ST.

FIRSTFRUITS FOR THE NEW YEAR.

On the evening of Monday week the familiar rooms at "186" were thronged. Mr. and Mrs. George Williams had sent out invitations for a New Year's feast. Unlike the bidden ones of old, the business youths and young men of the City accepted as with one consent; insomuch that the press was greater than the reception-parlours would comfortably bear.

As the young fellows streamed into the entrance-hall, the hearty greetings of Secretary Burn and his henchman, Mr. Putterill, were a prophecy of good things to come. Probably few dreamt that it was to be so good as it turned out. Some of the choicer spirits, we heard it whispered, had been praying much that God would be present of a truth, to crown the opening year with an unusually big blessing. They must have prayed in faith, for the blessing came.

The host, of course, took the chair after tea time; by his side sat his wife, the worthy hostess; both were cheered to the echo. Some sacred songs were sung in a swinging fortissimo, and then Mr. Hodder prayed that everybody might get a wonderful lift heavenward. Those who did not must already have been very near the gates of the celestial city; or else they must have been uncommonly hard to move in that direction. Mr. Williams wished all a happy New Year, and proceeded to tell his young friends how they might make it so in reality. What his prescription was may be easily imagined: make the most of the advantages offered by the Association. He told the story of the wounded French soldier, who said to the surgeons that if they probed deep enough they would find "Napoleon" written on his heart. In Mr. Williams' own case we may safely substitute for Napoleon, "Y.M.C.A." All City people, he said, are aiming at success; the disciple of Jesus Christ is the only truly successful man. From the way these business boys looked and listened and clapped, they evidently believed it without a doubt.

This was a fitting time for Mr. Burn to intervene and unfold his programme for the coming months. In his own brisk and big-hearted way he vindicated the Institution from any possible calumny as to its being a dull and gloomy sort of place. If Mr. Matthew Arnold had been there to hear Mr. Secretary's tale, he must surely have been convinced that at last he had happened upon a real centre of "sweetness and light." Brother Burn mentioned in order all the different helps provided for the physical, mental, and spiritual nourishment of young men—so as to make them manly, noble, and straightforward in all departments of life—and said the house was open to them. Let them come in and get and do all the good they could; then they would be able to tell Mr. Williams next January that it had been indeed a happy year.

General Sir Robert Phayre, in a brief address, bore a simple, manly testimony as to the power that the faith and service of Christ had exercised in his chequered experiences in India. He spoke well of the Saviour, and commended Him to all his young friends. In the intervals between the speeches, everyone was charmed with the sweet, compelling strains, vocal and instrumental, kindly furnished by the Misses Deacon and Mr. Claude Pym.

Last of all came the turn of Dr. H. Grattan Guinness. Those who listened to him with sympathetic ears could well understand the secret of his recent successes at the other side of the globe. As a speaker to young men it would be hard to imagine anyone better qualified. With a goodly presence, and an artesian flow of choice, impressive speech, he has a rare enthusiasm and a directness of method that are simply irresistible in their combined effect. His clear exposition of truth, his vivid description and illustration of the two paths of life, and his burning appeals for manly decision cannot soon be forgotten by any who heard him that night. We absolutely proclaim our inability to represent in any words of ours the closing scene. At his call, affectionately and skillfully reiterated, one after another, some times groups of three or four, came from different parts of the hall down to the front, and in the face of the deeply moved assembly shook hands with him, in token of their determination to be the Lord's from that night thenceforward. To each he gave some word of good cheer and a text on which to plant the foot of faith, as on the solid rock. One pathetic incident thrilled the meeting. After a youth had come forward and got his handgrip and his text, a man rose and said the youth was his son, who had been the child of many prayers. The father's joy found vent in a stream of thankful praise and prayer, to which Dr. Guinness and others responded with fervent Amens. More than a score of young men took their stand in these memorable closing minutes, and as each one forged his way to the front his fellows cheered right lustily. It was the first meeting in our experience at which confessions of Christ were made to the accompaniment of handclapping; but it was such a spontaneous expression of genuine feeling that there seemed no incongruity about it. We trust these "firstfruits" were but the droppings of a great shower of blessing among our City youths this year.

AN ARMENIAN SCHOOL.

It is just twenty years since a few Armenian girls were gathered in this city into a little boarding-school home. Begun in weakness, it has by gradual growth developed into an institution, venturing to call itself "Mount Holyoke Seminary," of Koordistan. So far as circumstances have permitted, it has been modelled after its New England mother—whose name it bears.

For years the number of boarders was below twenty, since even within the last quarter of a century female education in these parts was deemed largely superfluous. Now it has a membership of forty boarders and two assistant teachers. A primary department, which all day pupils attend, numbers about the same. Last year a class of four young women took diplomas, having completed a regular course of study. This was the fourth class who have thus been graduated from this institution. For all these graduates the hope is entertained that they are sincere Christians.

The chief object of this school is to be instrumental in fitting the girls for lives of usefulness. Realising that the blessing of the Lord is needed to vitalise the Gospel seed sown in these hearts, the teachers of this school send forth a most urgent plea that all interested in the good cause of evangelistic educational work, be kindly pleased to pray for the students now under training.

C. E. E. & M. A. C. E.

Bitlis, Turkey, Dec. 21.

Y.W.C.A., EALING.—Spring Lodge, now the home of this Association, has accommodation for nine boarders, large class-room, sitting-rooms, &c. The home, which was opened in October last, is in every way suited to the requirements, and all are sure of a welcome from Miss Harvey, who left the Gloucester branch to devote herself to the Lord's work amongst young women here. Eighty-four new members joined during the past year, bringing up the muster-roll to two hundred and twenty-eight. The Sunday and week-day Bible-classes are well attended, as is the missionary working party.

THE DEATH RATE THROUGH DRINK.—In a striking poster just issued by the Mason-street, Hull, Temperance Society, some startling figures illustrating some of the evil results of the consumption of strong drink are set forth in all the prominence of unusually large type. The facts thus conspicuously exhibited are not new, but it may be hoped that their frequent reiteration in this way will impress men's minds, and cause them to reflect. One of the most startling facts here brought out is that of the great disproportion between the number of deaths amongst public-house and hotel servants, and masons, or those engaged in other trades, reaching almost three to one. The posters can be had of Mr. Waller, Lowgate, Hull, at 1s. 6d. per dozen.

MILDMAY MISSION TO THE JEWS.

At both meetings recently held at Mildmay, Rev. J. Wilkinson gave a brief account of the Mission. It is ten and a half years old, and has twenty-six agents, male and female. Their work is very varied. Some visit houses and shops, and distribute tracts in the street among the middle and lower classes. Some send Gospel messages by post to the higher classes in the suburbs, followed by a personal call. There are the Medical Mission, preaching stations, Bible classes, prayer-meetings, inquirers' and converts' meetings, sewing classes for Jewesses, attached to which is a provident fund to encourage thrift, a night-school for Jewish children, a convalescent Home at Highgate, an Inquirers' Home and Printing-house, and a Children's Home. During the latter months of the year the work has been extended to the Continent, an account of which appeared in recent numbers of Service of the King. Considerable numbers, still unbaptized, confess their faith in Jesus as Messiah before their brethren.

Rev. A. N. Mackray, of Croydon, gave the address in the morning, and Rev. E. W. Bullinger, D.D., of Walthamstow, in the evening. The latter traced the hand of God in providing for modern missions to the Jews the Hebrew New Testament, translated by Mr. Salkinson. A second edition of 110,000, carefully revised, had been issued, and Mr. Wilkinson had been able to secure 100,000 for wide distribution on the Continent. A very providential coincidence was mentioned by Dr. Bullinger. Just at the time, he said, when Mr. Wilkinson called on me to ask if the Trinitarian Bible Society could publish this New Testament, as it had been refused elsewhere, I told him it was very possible the Society might take it up, as they had had a legacy of £1000, and had been holding a prayer meeting to seek the Lord's guidance in its use.

In the middle of each meeting twelve little Jewish children, from the Home on Newington-green, were marched into the room, under the charge of a deaconess, and sang, in Hebrew, "Unto us a child is born," &c.; they also sang, in English, "When his salvation bringing," &c., and "Children of Jerusalem." Many were touched to tears with what they saw and heard.

On Thursday, January 6, the Mission gathered its night-school and other Jewish children to the annual tea and Gospel meeting at the East-end. This school is conducted by Christian ladies four evenings in the week. Many of the children recited verses of Scripture, setting forth the way of salvation in Christ. Prizes were given to some, and presents to others. Mr. Rabinowitz addressed his "little brothers and sisters" with much energy and affection. The singing of Gospel hymns, answers to Scripture questions, and the amount of Scripture stored in their minds, indicate most careful and prayerful teaching.

On Friday, the 7th, the annual tea for Jews and Jewesses was held in the same room—the large room under Sion Chapel, Whitechapel-road, close to the Medical Mission Rooms in Cannon-place. Gospel addresses were given by Mr. Wilkinson, Mr. Hutchinson, and by Mr. Rabinowitz, who interested his Russian brethren marvellously. It was a most interesting gathering, which we trust may issue in many conversions to Christ.

On the following day—Saturday, 182 Jews gathered in the same room to hear Mr. Rabinowitz, who preached the Gospel with power. At the close there was some confusion, but some half-dozen groups were formed of those desirous of asking questions.

EVIL-SPEAKING.—"Before you speak evil of anyone, ask yourself three questions: (1) Is it true? (2) Is it kind? (3) Is it necessary?" So runs the members' card of the "Speak no Evil" Society, which may be had (6d. per doz.) of H. B. Crisp, Saxmundham.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE AT ASHBY-SCREEDS, near BRIGG (Linc.).

Mrs. KATHERINE RAINER, of the above address, having furnished me with a statement of her case and symptoms on Jan. 9 last, I forwarded her advice and medicine.

For nine months she had had a cough with aching pains, with painful and difficult yellow-green expectoration, a little spitting of blood, great shortness of breath, profuse night sweats. Her strength was now all but gone, and loss of flesh had taken place all over the body.

Improvement was slow but sure. The medicine was continued pretty regularly for six months, but left off I think, too soon. However, after an interval of three months, she writes me Oct. 7:—"I am thankful I ever heard of your remedy. It has been the means, by the blessing of God, of restoring me to the health that I now enjoy. The doctors had given me up, and said I should not get better. As bad weather is coming on. I will keep a little medicine by me. I have recommended it to many friends."

Prayer for China's Women.

To the Members of the Women's Prayer Union.

DEAR FRIENDS,—There is a class of women in China, whose numbers are daily increasing, for whom your prayers are specially asked. More and more our sisters are getting entrance among the better classes of Chinese women. Many of them are intelligent, and some are able to read the Word of God. Their difficulties of confessing the Lord Jesus seem to be even greater than those of their poorer sisters. At the present time there are not a few who seem to have received the truth, have given up idol worship, and pray to God, and who are glad to have our sisters visit them. They even speak to others about the Saviour, exhorting their friends to trust in Him, while they themselves are afraid to take the steps of being baptized. We are very anxious for them, for if they are not decidedly on the Lord's side, there is great danger that they will go back altogether. There is no possibility of their remaining permanently in their present position.

If our sisters at home, who are so blessed by the Gospel, could earnestly bring these cases before the Lord it would be well. Let them ask definitely that the Lord would give special guidance to our sisters who are labouring among such women, and that He would, by his Spirit, so reveal the love of Jesus to their hearts that they may be led to confess their love to Him.

Some sisters are again working on the Kwang-sing River in Kiang-si. They would be glad to feel that they are specially remembered by their sisters at home. They have had some very interesting openings into good families, and found several young ladies in these families just eager to be taught. It was so pleasant, in some cases, to introduce the Word of God into the family, and to find that it was being read, and, to some extent at least, appreciated. Surely, there are many of the members of the Union who might be engaged in such work, if they would but listen to the call of the Master. The day of such opportunities will soon have passed away for ever, and then what regrets!

Special prayer, too, is asked for our sisters, Miss Malpas and Miss Todd, who are working away in the south-west at Yunnan Fu. The province of Yunnan has suffered much in the past from long years of rebellion. In consequence, the women, especially in the country parts, are in a specially deplorable condition. Indeed, it was their evidently wretched condition that so pressed upon the mind of the writer of this note as to lead to the formation of your Prayer Union. If, then, you have received blessing yourselves in waiting upon the Lord, you will feel under some special obligation to remember the women of Yunnan and our sisters, who are, at present, the only ones to labour among them.

Special prayer should follow our sisters, Mrs. Hutton (née Miss A. Le Brun) and Mrs. Laughton (née Miss A. Brown) to their new spheres of labour. Mr. and Mrs. Laughton will soon be far away in Kan-suh, at Ning-hsia, on the borders of Mongolia; Mr. and Mrs. Hutton, accompanied by Miss M. L. Legg, are now on their way to Fan-cheng. Miss Legg expects soon to go on to Han-chung Fu for work among the girls and women there. Our sisters will all be cheered by the consciousness of loving hearts following them, and will be really helped of God, in answer to your prayers, in taking up their new work.

And may we not ask that special prayer may be made to the Lord of the harvest that more labourers of his own selection may be sent out. The openings are so many, and the labourers are so few in comparison, that we cannot afford to neglect the Lord's own command. We must pray, and some must go. May the call of the Master come with irresistible force to many members of the Union.

Yours in Gospel bonds, J. MCCARTHY.

Yiang-tsi-Kiang, December 2.

P.S.—Would it not be well if each member of the Union decided to try and get at least one new member the first months of the new year?

A Chinese Official Proclamation.

DEAR SIR,—I read with devout thankfulness the reports you publish in THE CHRISTIAN of the various conferences on the Evangelisation of the World. The increasing interest in this all-important subject encourages us to hope that this vast and needy land will have the Gospel of God's love proclaimed soon throughout its length and breadth.

The signs of the times are favourable for a more decided advance upon this domain of heathenism than we have yet witnessed. It will be interesting to not a few to hear that lately one of the high Chinese officials—a Governor of Chê-Kiang province—has issued a proclamation, by instructions from Pekin, in which he says: "Know, therefore, all men, of whatsoever sort or condition, that the sole object of establishing chapels is to exhort men to virtue: those who embrace Christianity do not cease to be Chinese, and both sides should, therefore, continue to live in peace, and not let mutual jealousies be the cause of strife between them. If cases come before the Courts, the local authority should investigate them impartially, having regard only to the merits of the case, and not to the religion of the litigants, and should give his decision quickly. Thus neither party shall inflict injury on the other—each shall pursue in peace and quietude his calling, and the desire of the State to include in its kindly benevolence the men from afar equally with its own people shall not, I trust, be frustrated...." No more important document bearing upon the toleration of Christianity has ever been published in China.

Since my arrival in China, this last time, I have already travelled extensively in eight provinces, and I can speak from experience that large tracts of country—inhabited by multitudes of our fellow-men—are perfectly open to the missionary. Such splendid opportunities, if not speedily embraced, may soon pass away, not to recur again—at least, in our day. Then, again, it is most hopeful to find the native brethren in some places so active. At one place on my journey I found some of the native Christians in the habit of frequently seeking God with fasting and prayer. The influence of such men on their fellow-countrymen for good was abundantly apparent. God is raising up holy and devoted Chinamen to be pillars in the Church and mighty men in the advancement of his kingdom in this land.

It has greatly cheered us of the China Inland Mission to welcome twenty-two new workers this year, five of whom are self-supporting; but this increase appears so insignificant in contrast to the vast needs that many of us have banded ourselves unitedly to pray definitely for one hundred new workers to be sent us during 1887. May I ask very earnestly that your readers will also join us in prayer that the one hundred consecrated and fully surrendered servants may soon be sent forth by the Master?—Yours faithfully in Christ, JOHN W. STEVENSON.

China Inland Mission,

Takutang, Kiang-si, China, Dec. 3.

Letters from the Front.

Very interesting letters are recently to hand from Mr. Hudson Taylor and Mr. Stanley Smith, of which we give extracts. They were written shortly after receiving copies of Mr. Radcliffe's paper on "Floods of Revival," which appeared in our columns some months since.

MR. HUDSON TAYLOR SAYS:—

"I have been travelling inland for many months, and have visited in succession nine of the eighteen Provinces. If you could have been with me on my recent journey, you would indeed have been cheered. A Conference of native Christians at Mr. Stanley Smith's place was in many respects the most remarkable meeting that I have seen in China. Two other gatherings that we had in other parts of the same district were likewise very noteworthy. You could imagine how glad it made me in Shan-si and Shen-si to meet upwards of 500 native Christians; bearing in mind that but a very few years ago there was not a native Christian in either of these provinces, or a missionary attempting to win any.

"The subject Mr. Radcliffe has dwelt upon in his paper is a very important one; and really one does not see any reason why people should not as easily be converted in great multitudes as in units, seeing that conversion in any case is the work of the Holy Ghost. I am afraid that we are in great danger of repeating the words, 'I believe in the Holy Ghost,' when in point of fact our faith is a very dishonouring one, and a very limited one."

MR. STANLEY SMITH SAYS:—

"Hung Tung, Shan-si, Oct. 5.—Yes, it must be 'floods,' nothing less: only we want to remind ourselves that abiding in Christ, although resting, is activity—'We rest on Thee, and in thy name we go.' Abiding in Christ means believing, praising, praying, fighting. No longer alienated from the life of God, but channels in connection with Him, the source of all life, through which the life of God can flow into—even to 'flooding'—a world full of trespass. He that spared not his own Son but delivered Him up for ALL; how shall He not freely make Him known? Why not known to 'all,' at any rate 'multitudes, multitudes.' 'I will say to the east, give up; and to the west, keep not back: bring my sons from afar and my daughters from the ends of the earth.' At the end of the Exeter Hall meeting they asked me to pray; I could only plead one sentence, but I know I pleaded it in the name of Jesus—it was this promise: 'God shall bless us, and all the ends of the earth shall fear Him.' Is it not a promise given by the living God to his Church?

"I am expecting about thirty baptisms here at Hung Tung in less than a month. The Lord is giving me daily preaching. Oh for a thousand tongues! and yet one tongue will suffice—the Pentecostal tongue of fire. Grand! 'He maketh his ministers a flame of fire.' I am hoping soon to start street processions.

"Mr. C. Studd and Mr. Beauchamp are probably on their way back here from Hanchung, whither they accompanied Mr. Hudson Taylor. Mr. Cassels and Mr. Hoste are at Ping-yang, pegging away at the language, and living and working for Christ. A new pastor and wife are soon going to Ping-yang-fu, Mr. and Mrs. Bagnall. Mr. Bagnall is a delightful, humble, earnest man, originally a blue jacket; for some years he has been in the American Bible Society."

From Swatow (says The Presbyterian Messenger for January) we learn that Mr. Duffus and Mr. Smith had received into the Church by baptism, in October, thirty-four adults. Their hearts have been greatly cheered by these accessions.

MR. W. G. STEVENS, a member of the Aldersgate-street Association, and also of the Young Men's Foreign Missionary Society, left London in July, 1885. He has settled down at Port Elizabeth. Notwithstanding the recent date of his arrival, he has been instrumental in forming a Young Men's Christian Association in that important centre.

BELFAST STREET ARABS.—About four hundred of these unfortunates, in whom Mr. David Henderson has long taken a deep interest, were recently entertained. Most thoroughly they seemed to enjoy both the material and the mental parts of the feast provided. The climax was reached by a pathetic rendering of "Where is my wandering boy to-night?" This annual entertainment is a means of bringing together a large number of these poor children, amongst whom much good and permanent work is being done.

MEDICAL MISSION, OLDHAM.—I recently visited this large and flourishing Medical Mission, and gave a Gospel address to the patients assembled, numbering on this occasion about 140 suffering ones. Mr. A. Butterworth, of Spring Bank, Oldham, bears the entire expense of this work. We could wish that other Christian men, whom the Lord has made his stewards, would "Go and do likewise." Besides the Central Mission, there are branches at Middleton and Hollinwood. All are under the medical supervision of Dr. Duncan, and the attendances during the year amount to nearly 11,000.

A VISITOR.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we shall give portraits and sketch of Mr. and Mrs. James McGranahan.

In a recent letter from Rev. J. McCarthy, of the China Inland Mission, he says:—

> I expect that Mr. Hudson Taylor will soon be able to leave for home. He will have a good story to tell; he has been into Shan-si, where the work is flourishing.

Many readers will be glad to know that the papers on the Life of Jacob, by Rev. F. B. Meyer, that have been appearing in our columns for some weeks, will shortly be published in book form.

The "London Cottage Mission" has made considerable capital of the singing of Lady Colin Campbell. We know of no trustworthy Mission which would have acted as that one has done.

In our last issue we referred to the significance of a favourable report of the tableaux vivants in a church at Lavender Hill, representing Bible scenes, appearing in The Methodist Recorder. It is only just to the conductors of that paper to say that in their editorial remarks they disclaimed all sympathy with such performances.

> At this happy season, when we commemorate the infancy of Him who was ever the children's special Friend, can there be anything more thoroughly praiseworthy, more honestly commendable, or more perfectly enjoyable, than the execution of a design which proposes to make a number of little ones happy?

Most of our readers will assume that these words, with their reference to Christ, are taken from an appeal for funds for an orphanage, or from an account of a breakfast given to outcast, starving children, gathered from the slums and cellars of a large city. Nay, they form part of a provincial contemporary's account of a "Children's Fancy Dress Ball," with its concomitants of refreshment tables and supper rooms. If our contemporary were in earnest in putting the question we have quoted, an answer might be found in the words of Jesus: "When thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind: and thou shalt be blessed; for they cannot recompense thee."

At about supper time, and only a little distance from the scene of gaiety, a woman "apparently forty-five years of age, poorly clad, was found in a dying condition" upon a step, and conveyed to a hospital, the house surgeon of which "found that life was extinct." This event, however, appears to have been considered far from noteworthy, our contemporary giving only some half-dozen lines to it as a "supposed death from destitution," a column being devoted to the "trance of delight" which will rest in the memory of the young guests, the writer says, "for long years to come, and will form a blissful retrospect when the stern battle of life hereafter swallows up the child in the man or woman of the world."

These are days of strong contrasts, we know, and we are frequently informed that deep shadows necessarily accompany brilliant civilisation; but it is nevertheless pitiful to reflect that perhaps a few pennyworths of food would have saved the life of the destitute woman, "poorly clad," who sank upon a city step to die in the dark.

Of the blackness of the shadows which heighten the lights of modern life, as political economists tell us, thousands of earnest Christians have but little idea. Living away from the sights and scenes which to those who dwell in large centres are so unpleasantly familiar, they scarcely recognise the urgent need there is on every hand for remedial work, spiritual and temporal, in our very midst. What must be thought of our civilisation when a London vicar, untiring in his sixteen years of labour in a parish "without vicarial endowments, for they have been withheld owing to the mission church being too small to be consecrated," can say, without hesitation, in an article in the current issue of Eastward Ho, upon the children of the "one room" inhabitants of his parish who "die off from bad nursing and want of natural nourishment," that a large proportion, "happily for them, die off in infancy." Surely "it is not the will of your Father which is in heaven, that one of these little ones should perish."

Most people would think that if in any country Christians ought to be filled with the spirit of union, they certainly should be lovingly united in Ireland, where the Protestants are in the minority, and Rome presents so unbroken a front. We are, therefore, sorry to find that in certain quarters a contrary spirit is evinced, and that The Irish Ecclesiastical Gazette has not hesitated to print the following:—

> The Belfast branch of the Evangelical Alliance has just made provision for the wants of some of the clergy who desire to lay in their annual stock of ecclesiastical licence. The "provision" has taken the shape of prayer meetings and addresses during the week, which commenced on the 3rd inst. To those who regard the Church as on the same level with Dissent, the opportunity afforded them must prove eminently gratifying. Happily, however, the majority of the Belfast clergy (to their credit be it said) stand aloof from such gatherings, though one or two names may be noticed among the list of speakers, of whom better things might have been expected.

United action of religious bodies is a necessity, and also hopeful as a mark of the times. The Congregational and Baptist Boards met last week to prove that there might be denominational names and brotherly love. In Yorkshire it is proposed that two Congregational Colleges shall become one; while the question of union between the Wesleyans and the New Connexion Methodists is, apparently, taking a practical turn, and exciting much interest.

Some years ago Mr. Frederick Boyce called upon us and assured us that it was the Lord's will that we should publish his views and messages. We replied that when the Lord made this known to us we would do so—not before. Mr. Boyce is now publishing his autobiography, in which he claims to be the Lord's "special messenger" and "authorised servant." He says that this series of articles is hereafter "to be published in THE CHRISTIAN, by Divine authority, when its Editor is prepared to do his heavenly Master's will, and not listen to those who would turn him aside from the path of duty and obedience. The times, however, are not ripe for this at present."

How is it that Boyce, Wood, Prince, and all the other men and women who teach perverse things, succeed in drawing away disciples after themselves? We fear that one chief reason is the lack of definite teaching of foundation truth. A large number of church members know little more after years of association with the church than they did at first, and either lapse into indifference and worldliness, or are caught by some fanatic or seducing spirit which presents to them the counterfeit of that spiritual power for which their souls hunger.

The scandals at Brighton will now come before a court of law. Mr. James Barker, dentist, and Mr. George Hughes, oil merchant, have been committed for trial on a charge of "disturbing a place of religious worship." The evidence elicited in cross-examination showed the indecorous and indecent character of the proceedings carried on by "King Solomon," under whose spells women and children danced and fell prostrate, having to be covered with rugs and wraps to prevent exposure.

But this vulgar imposture has, we should think, been sufficiently discredited in the eyes of all respectable people. There is far greater danger to be apprehended from the extravagant perfectionist propaganda emanating from the Agapemone, the "testimony" of which has been revived, or galvanised into a ghastly activity, by Messrs. Ker and Fox, and others whose names we deeply deplore to see in this connection.

We have received £2 towards the Defence Fund for Messrs. Barker and Hughes, and shall be glad to receive further contributions.

Apparently with special reference to this and other forms of delusion meetings are to be held on January 25—27 at Alexandra Hall, Cambridge, conducted by Mr. H. F. Bowker, Rev. Evan H. Hopkins, and other friends. The circular convening them is issued by Revs. John Barton and Handley C. G. Moule, and is significant as affirming the authority of Scripture above personal experience and supposed special illumination; the existence, to the very last, in the believer of "the flesh," and its tendency to evil, which may be divinely counteracted by the indwelling Spirit, but is not removed (Rom. viii. 7; Gal. v. 17); and other truths in opposition to current errors.

Much as has been written and said against war and in description of the horrors which ever follow in its train, there is still need for earnest advocacy of peace, and, perhaps, never more than at the present moment. Amongst the latest issues of papers by the Peace Society are two giving a glimpse of the horrors of the Franco-Prussian war, and of the atrocities committed in Bulgaria by Turkish soldiers. If such recitals could have any influence in restraining the passions of men or nations, these might well be considered sufficient.

There is an argument, however, which is higher still, and which is presented in a third paper—that war is altogether contrary to the spirit of Christianity. Yet the armaments of Christian governments, even in times of peace, are of the most fearful character, and Christians of the nineteenth century have developed the arts and implements of death as never before. The message of Christianity, peace and goodwill, is sadly contradicted by the nations who profess to take the Bible as their rule of life. The Peace Society, through its literature, pleads that there should be a tribunal, to which disputes between the members of the European "family" should be submitted. To say that the question is in the hands of the Christian people of this land, may seem to some like a satire. But no doubt there is much truth in the statement, which should stir up believers in Christ and his teaching to more active endeavour for the carrying out of the Divine precepts in the affairs of nations as of families.

The beautiful and quiet-breathing word "Peace" has a most unnatural meaning in Europe just now. According to the speech of Prince Bismarck in the German Reichstag last week, it means increasing the army, calling out young men from industrial pursuits, adding to reserves, and augmenting war taxes. In France it means spending a fabulous amount upon miles and miles of fortresses, holding in readiness for war an army approaching three millions of men, and preparing artillery and agencies a hundred times more destructive than gunpowder for such a belligerent force. It is a new thing in the world when peace has its terrors and its continually augmented forebodings, and it may well be thought to belie the sceptical philosophy that teaches men that this is an age of moral progress.

The modern idea of the improvability of nations by civilisation alone, without religion, has another startling refutation given to it. The quinquennial census of France has just been completed. It presents some monitory facts. In Paris the increase was low in 1881; it was then 280,000; now it is only 75,000. In the two great manufacturing towns of Lyons and Lisle, the increase is no more than 35,000. In thirty-two agricultural departments there is, on the whole, an actual decrease of 110,000. Doubtless, reckless marriages have their evils, but these facts point to evils far more threatening. When the vitality of a race is arrested, a nation must be nigh unto decay and judgment.

A correspondent says that he and others living in the villages and small towns read almost with envy the accounts in our columns of stimulating and strengthening conferences in cities and larger towns. He puts in a pathetic plea that a little of the Christian warmth and comfort concentrated in these great gatherings should be diffused among the villages and small towns, where earnest but lonely workers are toiling amid much discouragement and difficulty.

Nothing is better than to interest children in the Bible; nothing will turn out more dangerous for a generation than to lower its authority over them. Can it be wise for the January number of the Sunday Magazine, which was started by Dr. Guthrie, to speak of Moses and the first chapters of Genesis after this manner:—"The First Story Writer for Children, and some of the Stories he told"? The "stories," the paper says, were the legends of the Hebrews: may have been told by an angel when the world lived in half a dozen huts as rough as the Canadian beaver's home; were told to Moses by his mother (the italics are the writer's), and were put in writing for children. We say nothing of the modern scholarship this representation ignores, but such unguarded teaching, however well meant, and ably presented, lowers the inspiration of Scripture, and must be full of peril to those who listen to it.

There are often given to us unlooked-for proofs of the wise cautions of the Bible. The Times of the 12th instant spoke thus of an honoured and lamented nobleman the day before his death: "Lord Iddesleigh will go to-morrow to Osborne, will then deliver up his seal of office, and will on Friday return to Pynes, Exeter." Let us listen, however to Holy Scripture: "Go to now, ye that say, To-day or to-morrow we will go into such a city . . . whereas ye know not what shall be on the morrow." Even journalists might well remember this.

A correspondent complains of the total irrelevancy of some addresses given during the Week of Prayer, to the subjects appointed for the day, the speakers often discoursing upon some favourite theme instead of that upon which they had been invited to speak. "If it be true," he asks, "that out of the abundance of the heart the mouth should speak, can there be much abundance of the heart when the mouth utters not a single word of that of which the praise, the prayer, and the Scriptures read were full?" Though there appears to be ground for our correspondent's protest, the addresses given during the Week of Prayer in London were, on the whole, remarkably pointed and appropriate.

Some men carry their Christian credentials in their countenances. Like Moses of old, their faces glow with "a light that never was on sea or land"—a light that comes from close and confidential communion with the Father of Lights. Such a living epistle, to be read and known of all who met him, was Rev. James Robertson, of Newington, whose Memoir has just been published (Elliot, Princes-street, Edinburgh). For freshness and fragrance, this unvarnished record of a gracious life is like the soft southern breeze that blows across his native Scottish uplands. The value of the book is well stated in the words of Dr. John Ker, whose touchingly sympathetic preface derives an added interest from the fact that he, too, has gone into the silent land:—

> To Christian ministers it may be a stimulus to varied and unwearied diligence, and especially to the truth of what Philip Henry says, that "weeping should not hinder sowing." It is a great encouragement to all Christians to see that a life of much trial may be a life of deep happiness, "as sorrowful, yet always rejoicing."

Himself a man of gentle and child-like spirit, Mr. Robertson was one of the elect of the elect in preaching to young people. Any of our readers who heard his addresses to children at the Haymarket Opera House in 1875, during Messrs. Moody and Sankey's London Mission of that year, will still have a clear recollection of their felicities of method and diction. We have a specially vivid remembrance of one address, entitled, "Baskets of Summer Fruit," reported in these pages at the time. Another brief extract from the book itself will be interesting to many in this connection. During a visit to Stirling he preached a sermon to children, and asked if someone among the youthful hearers would read the text:—

> The large audience held its breath for an instant or two, when a responsive movement was observed behind the preacher. Mr. Robertson, turning round and taking a little boy by the hand, said, "Here is a little man who is kindly going to read my text for me." In clear, distinct tones, slowly and reverently, the words were read, "They shall be mine, saith the Lord of Hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels." "Thank you, my little boy," said the preacher. "When you grow up to be a man, I hope you will become a minister of the Lord Jesus Christ, and read many such texts from all the pulpits round." The "little boy" is now Professor Henry Drummond, of the Free Church College, Glasgow, whose name as that of an author and evangelist is so familiar to us all.

The Psalms are more read than any other part of Scripture, and the literature concerning them will never be exhausted. "The Psalms in History and Biography," by the late Rev. Dr. John Ker (Andrew Elliot, Edinburgh), is a valuable contribution, containing deeply interesting facts and incidents gathered from many sources, largely from Scottish history.

In our reports of the Northfield Conference (Mass., U.S.A.), in the August of the two last years, we made prominent mention of the striking missionary addresses by Dr. A. T. Pierson. With great gratification we now call our readers' attention to his eloquent, enthusiastic, and encouraging book, "The Crisis of Missions: or, The Voice out of the Cloud" (Nisbet, 3s. 6d.). In a series of brief chapters, teeming with facts, he shows how wonderfully God is opening the world to the Gospel, and laying the responsibility and privilege of entering these open doors upon the hearts of his awakening people. This book gives the brighter side of the great question, the darker side of which has been ably considered by Rev. J. Johnston, in his "Century of Missions," to which we have more than once referred.

We are deeply grieved to hear of Lord Cavan's serious illness. Our correspondent, Mr. Douglas Russell, says:—"His condition is most critical. His own desire is 'to depart and to be with Christ, which is far better' than the best to be experienced here, and he rejoices at the prospect of being soon with the Lord he loves. He sent to the meeting on Lord's Day a request for praise for himself, and prayer for Lady Cavan, that she may be sustained in this trying hour. He says to his friends, 'I'm the happiest man in Weston! Don't pray for me, only praise!' Much praise has gone up for the Lord's abounding grace to his beloved servant, mingled with prayer that, if according to his will, our friend might yet be spared for awhile to us. I am sure you will unite in this, and enlist the sympathy of others."

SUNDAY TRADING.—It seems, says The Presbyterian Messenger, that in the East of London the custom of keeping shops open on Sunday is growing more prevalent; so much so that in some streets there is hardly any perceptible difference between Sunday and week-day. Quite irrespective of the religious question, the prevalence of such a custom must act injuriously on the interests of the working-classes. From a merely economic and social point of view the working-classes ought to be very jealous of any invasion of the day of rest.

MR. ANTHONY COMSTOCK, of New York, the indefatigable agent of the Society for the Suppression of Vice, is preparing a memorial to the U.S. Legislature, backed by a petition, to which he expects to get at least 10,000 signatures, praying that some restraint be placed upon the publication of such details of divorce and other criminal cases as tend to the prejudice of public morals. He reasons that if the Government has deemed it worth while to prohibit the importation of immoral pictures and publications, it is not less incumbent upon the State to legislate against similar indecencies at home.

PRAYER-MEETING NOTES.

On the Monday following the Week of Prayer there was a much larger attendance than usual at the noon prayer-meeting in Aldersgate-street. Mr. Robert Paton, who presided, mentioned, as full of encouragement to those engaged in work amongst youths, that latterly he had been visiting a dying boy who was one of a number who for some time met at his house. He had been obliged to discontinue the class, but when this lad fell ill one of his companions asked him to visit him. Having done so several times, last week two of his little girls accompanied him and sang the hymn—

> At even, ere the sun was set.

The lad seemed to have been impressed with the line—

> Thy touch has still its ancient power, for at night he called out, "Mother! mother! Jesus has touched me! I am going to that happy land. Jesus! Jesus! Jesus will fetch me in a chariot. I am going soon." Other incidents were noted, such as the conversion of the leading man in a shop full of shoemakers, and the restraint which the Word of God had had on a man who had determined to commit a murder. Prayer was offered for these, as well as for the four men rescued from the wreck of the Duke of Connaught, which went down with fourteen of her crew.

On Tuesday, Dr. Maxwell, of Formosa, referred to our Lord's words: "Say ye not there are yet four months unto harvest; but I say unto you the fields are white already to harvest." There are many signs, he said, that the harvest of the world is not very far off. Glancing at the lights and shadows to be seen on looking over the great mission-field, he said there was much land yet to be possessed. South of the great African Sahara they were face to face with a stretch of 4000 miles without a single missionary or Christian amongst the multitudes of people to be found in villages and great cities. Mentioning other great centres of population in Africa, in which indeed there is room for thousands of missionaries, he spoke also of Beloochistan, Afghanistan, Cashmere, Nepaul, Thibet, Eastern Turkestan, the Corea, Upper Burmah, and Siam, as almost entirely without any missionary light; the mere enumeration of these is quite sufficient to send us to our knees to cry to God for more labourers. Turning to the hindrances to Christian work in heathen lands, he mentioned, as worst of all, the opium trade fostered by ourselves, and the traffic in strong drink. No wonder that political difficulties like a great cloud are perplexing us, when we as a Christian nation are guilty of the sin of poisoning numbers of the Chinese people and hindering their reception of the Gospel. This is a jubilee year, and in olden times years of jubilee were times of releasing from burdens. Better far than any Colonial Institute or Church House, as a celebration of this jubilee year, would it be that we, as a nation, should set ourselves to put away these sins which cry aloud for vengeance. The fact that there are now 2500 missionaries in various parts of the world is encouraging, but much more so the thought that the vastness of the work to be done has created in God's people a great sense of their own helplessness, so that they are crying aloud to Him.

Very encouraging is the news from various tribes of the Zulus. The son of Cetewayo is asking for a missionary to come and settle amongst his people, and another tribe has issued a proclamation to missionaries, saying "the land is free to you everywhere; come and preach the Gospel." In Japan, again, how wonderful has been the progress of Christianity. The Government, indeed, is so ready to adopt Christianity that the fear is lest the form should be adopted without the power. Not long since the heathen governor of a large city sent to the authorities of the Training College at Kioto, offering to pay all expenses of buildings, &c., if such a college could be established in that city. And now, in the midst of this heathen city, this Christian institution is actively at work. In the short space of twelve years 170 churches have been established, and there are now 1300 Christians in that land. From Formosa he had recently heard the encouraging tidings that from the churches in that island native missionaries were to be sent to the Pescadores islands.

Reference was also made to an article in The Times of the previous day, the importance of which cannot be over-estimated, in which is contained a proclamation under the sign manual of the Chinese Government stating that everywhere Protestant missionaries and native Christians are to be protected, for the missionaries are good people, and their only aim is the increase of virtue.

Christian Work in Madrid.

We have received an account of mission work at Madrid which is of the greatest interest. Special efforts were put forth last winter by Pastor F. Fliedner to alleviate the sufferings of the people consequent on the visitation of cholera, and these have proved of the greatest blessing.

Three sewing meetings were started in connection with different Protestant chapels, and to these all in want were invited, the women receiving a small sum for the afternoon's work. In one of the school-rooms forty women met twice a week, and it was easy to see how much they were suffering. One poor woman, who fainted shortly after taking her seat, had not tasted food for two days. Very pleasing was the readiness with which one came forward to nurse an old woman who had broken her leg. During the meeting the wonderful allegory of "Pilgrim's Progress" was read, and Christian's wanderings were evidently followed with the greatest interest. All the women worked heartily, evidently wishing not to lose a moment of time, and the cheerfulness with which they agreed to a proposition that after some weeks they should give way to others who were as badly off as themselves, was very gratifying.

The people of Madrid very readily help in this good work, many giving freely a penny a week to the young collectors, the sons of Pastor Fliedner, in connection with whose chapel this work is carried on. Our correspondent adds: "Is it not a joy to be allowed to unfold the banner of Christian mercy here and to carry it in every direction? Perhaps some of the young readers of The Christian will help us this winter in carrying on this work amongst the poor people of Madrid."

Pastor F. Fliedner's address is 3, Almudena, Madrid, Spain.

THE CONGO.—M. Janssens, the Governor of the Congo State, who has just returned to Brussels, states that the incident at Stanley Falls will not imperil on any way the work undertaken in the Congo.

WEEK OF PRAYER.—At Leamington the Week of Prayer closed with a united communion service in St. Mary's Church on Saturday evening. The meetings during the week were very well attended, notwithstanding the storm.—The meetings so long held at the iron room, Emmanuel Church, Wimbledon, by the late Rev. Clarmont Skrine, were continued, being conducted by Rev. G. Arbuthnot, who is temporarily supplying the vacant place. They were well attended.

"SAVE THE CHILDREN."—Inquiry shows that there is an immense amount of juvenile suffering altogether outside the reach of those who are seeking to rescue the children of the degraded and criminal from the evil associations by which they are surrounded from infancy. The Children's Aid and Rescue Fund is continually and systematically employed in this beneficent work, and under the powers of a recent well-known Act, about five hundred children have been rescued by its officers. The support of children thus rescued, and grants to industrial and reformatory schools, &c., comprise the two branches of work undertaken by the Fund, which has been the means of benefiting several thousand children. The office is at 32, Charing-cross, S.W

SCENES IN EAST LONDON.

On Wednesday week, at the North-east London Mission Hall at Millwall, a dinner of soup and bread was given to hungry dock labourers and other unemployed men. The total provided for was 200, but just before the last score or two were passed in, the fear of losing the chance of a meal was so exciting that nothing could prevent a rush at the door which tore it from its hinges, and the crushing mass of half-famished men came, or rather fell, into the already nearly full building. The limited help received has not allowed these meals to be repeated oftener than once a week, though last year they were given twice and thrice a week.

Over a thousand poor children have been given a free meal, and made happy at least for one evening this Christmas by this Mission, amongst whom some hundreds of garments have been distributed. Some of the poor children came to the feast with bare feet, and well-nigh bare backs, too, and one little girl could come in none but a boy's old garments. Perhaps the child that touched our hearts most was a tiny little match-box maker, whose age was three years. With aged face, bare feet, and nearly naked, her figure will not wane from our vision for a while to come.

During the late severe weather, the visitors found a mother, with a babe almost newly-born, upon the floor, without sheet or blanket, and nearly naked of clothes, whom the brokers had just cleared completely out; while two others have just succumbed in childbirth, in deplorable destitution, near each other at Bow Common. Help has been given by supplying blankets, food, coals, and otherwise helping, as far as the limited supplies received have allowed. More poor children have been taken for a time from homes where the struggle with starvation is scarcely maintained.

The Superintendent of the Mission is Mr. W. Chorley, 2, Marquess-grove, Canonbury, N.

SIGNOR GAVAZZI, in spite of his great age, has commenced his weekly lectures, and with his usual eloquence inveighs against the errors of th church of Rome. On Christmas-eve he took for his theme, "Anti-clericalismo," and described how the religion of the church of Rome has caused the increase of atheism by her war against science, the monstrous dogmas she inculcates, the scandals in the lives of her clergy, her neglect of the precepts of the Gospel, her struggles to regain the temporal power, and the want of patriotism in her clergy.—Record.

TASMANIA.—Mr. George Soltau, writing from Launceston, Tasmania, in November last, says:—"Travelling is slow and rough; but with due notice the people will gather for miles round to hear the Gospel. I long for a band of evangelists to send away roving through the Bush—men on fire for souls, able to rough it and live on coarse food, to ride or walk, and carry the Gospel. There is no opening for any men in these colonies unless they have plenty of muscle and know a trade. Clerks are starving, and every branch of business is overdone. Farming means Bush clearing. A man needs a little money to live on till he has cleared patches of land and got his first crops off. That may be in two years."

THE NEWS FROM UGANDA.—An interview with Rev. R. P. Ashe, who has reached England, is reported in The Record. Some two hundred native Christians, "whose danger is gauged by their devotion," yet remain in hiding. Mr. Mackay, if alive, is practically a close prisoner, preserved because of his mechanical skill, but unable for one moment to rely upon the King's friendship. There seem no hopes of any influences upon the coast effecting his release, and we are driven to sit with folded hands whilst the lives of God's servants are at the mercy of a passionate youth. But there yet remains the weapon denied to no Christian's will. Relief expeditions and diplomatic interference are slowly moving agencies; the power of prayer knows no such delay. We are persuaded that every heart touched by the story of Uganda will send up its earnest petitions for Mr. Mackay as well as for those native Christians over whom the shadow death still hangs.

BUNYAN'S PILGRIM'S PROGRESS.

NEW EDITION,
ILLUSTRATED. 6D.

EVANGELIST POINTING THE WAY.

> "This CHEAP EDITION of A BOOK THAT WILL NEVER WEAR OUT will be heartily welcomed by the people generally."
> Christian Commonwealth, Dec. 2, 1886.

> "This is by far the BEST of all the CHEAP EDITIONS."
> Christian Leader, Dec. 23, 1886.

"It is a marvel of neatness and cheapness. No home need now be without this wonderful work."
Oldham Chronicle, Dec. 25, 1886.

"The time is opportune for the appearance of so handy an edition of a work which has been so largely used as a means of spreading the truths of the Gospel. This edition by its size, clearness of type, and the vigour of its Illustrations, will be prized by all—both those who as givers are doubly blessed in the giving, and those who are the recipients.
The Christian, Dec. 2, 1886.

"This Edition is well printed on good paper, and enriched by several original Illustrations, specially engraved for the work. It is of convenient size; and is published at a very moderate price."
The Bookseller, Dec. 16, 1886.

"Care has been bestowed upon the revision, the text having been closely compared and brought into harmony with the early editions. The type is new, and very readable; and the book, printed on superior paper and adorned with upwards of a dozen original Illustrations costs in its cheapest form only SIXPENCE."
Christian Leader, Dec. 23, 1886.

An Entirely New Work by the Favourite Writer,

2s. A. L. O. E., 2s.

Author of "Pearls from the Parables," "The Shepherd of Bethlehem," "Rescued from Egypt," &c., &c.

Printed in very clear readable type,
With Carmine Borders,
Attractive Frontispiece,
Handsomely Bound.

VERY SUITABLE FOR A GIFT-BOOK.

"The 'Gallery' is hung with many quaint conceptions, and all teach some lesson of spiritual import."—Church Sunday-school Magazine.

"PERCIVAL'S PICTURE GALLERY is a prettily illustrated book, containing a collection of fanciful legends, which equally merit the name of parables, since they convey many spiritual lessons in the form of a story. The familiar letters A. L. O. E. will be sufficient guarantee for the devoutness of tone and originality of style which mark this volume."—The Literary World.

"The volume is most beautifully got up, printed on fine paper with large margin; and most artistically illustrated. It will prove a very acceptable present to one who loves the beautiful, and who can appreciate A. L. O. E.'s tender and touching words."
Irish Congregational Magazine.

"In the introductory preface we are told that some of the ideas contained in this little book came to the author in a chamber of sickness, and proved both pleasant and soothing."—Fireside News.

Contents.

INTRODUCTION.
THE PASSAGE OF THE RED SEA.
KING DAVID'S MISSION.
THE CARPENTER'S DEATH.
HOMELESS.
LEGEND OF THE SELF-MADE GRAVE.
THE THREE "BIHISTIS."
LEGEND OF THE SHEKEL.
THE NIGHT AFTER THE CRUCIFIXION.
THE LEGEND OF THE ROMAN SOLDIER.
"FALLEN ASLEEP!"

"Percival is a young artist, who, almost at the outset of life, suffers from an injury to the knee which renders him an invalid. . . . The chapters describe various illustrations of Scripture, designed and sketched by the young artist; in these he departs entirely from the ordinary conventional treatment; and his designs are eminently original and suggestive. The book is perfectly printed, and would form an appropriate present."—The Christian.

"The name of the writer is sufficient to secure for this pretty book a cordial welcome. Percival, an amateur artist, beguiles the long hours of his dying illness by representing on canvas fancies and legends connected with our Saviour's life on earth. The tiny thread of narrative is used to string together these parabolic scenes."—The Record.

"This book is a gem. The invalid artist sketching his pictures and telling his wonderful stories is a tender and beautiful portraiture. The get up of the volume is a credit to the Publishers. It will make a fine gift-book, fit for any recipient."
The Christian Commonwealth.

Childrens' Special Service Mission.

FOREIGN TRACT WORK.

FROM all parts of the world letters come telling us of the joyful welcome our tracts receive, and in many cases begging us to send larger supplies.

Most of your readers know that our object is to become a kind of auxiliary to all the Missionary Societies in the world, and to supply them free of charge with good, sound Gospel Tracts for Children.

All our tracts are illustrated, and they contain earnest Gospel articles calculated, with God's blessing, to impress the hearts of the young, while we are constantly told that they are found just as suitable for adults as children.

With the Russian, Lettish, Esthonian, Slovenian, Roumanian, and Ruthenian, now almost ready, we shall have these sweet Messengers of Salvation in forty-two languages, and about seven millions will have been issued. 120,000 of a new series of Hindis and 80,000 Bengali are now being printed, and we are in immediate need of fresh editions in Italian, Breton, Dutch, Danish, Chinese (Wun-li and Mandarin), Cinghalese, Marathi, Gujerati, Modern Greek, Arabic, Malagasy, &c.—Faithfully yours,

JOSIAH SPIERS.

Evangelistic Mission.

THE special winter operations of this Mission have been continued throughout the past week, in visiting cases of distress, and in two gatherings of a seasonable kind. First came the meeting on Tuesday, January 11, of the large number of mothers in connection with Kilburn Hall. After tea, Mrs. Wallis, Miss Cossey (of the Deaconess Institute, Tottenham), Miss Martin, and Mr. Joseph D. Samme, spoke words of cheer and counsel, and there was some solo singing by Misses Gertrude and Lily Hurditch, and Misses Sennett.

The second free tea was given next day at Malden Hall, Kentish Town, to over 500 men out of work, and some of their wives. Gospel addresses were given, and solos were sung. Thus opportunities for spiritual influence are fully utilised, so far as the gifts of contributors allow.

TOTTENHAM.—For some months an evangelistic mission has been carried on in the Westerfield Hall, which has been greatly blessed of God. In order to further increase its usefulness, the workers have decided to form it into a mission church. Mr. W. Howard Hooper (40, Grove-park-road) has been appointed honorary secretary.

REQUESTS FOR PRAISE.—For twelve more workers going forth to North Africa this spring, and for news of other souls saved in Morocco.——For prayer answered and blessing given at Water-street Hall, Glasgow.——For much blessing at Christ Church, Westminster; sixty members received into fellowship at the beginning of the year.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For special services by Mr. Opie Rodway, at Watchet, Somerset shire, on Jan. 22 to 31.——For the restoration to health of a devoted evangelical clergyman, the father of a large family, now seriously ill, and for a deepened blessing upon his work, when he is permitted to resume duty.——For blessing on special services at Wareham, being conducted by Mr. John Elliott.——For a blessing on a mission to young women. to be held at Ryde, from February 1 to 7.——For blessing on a mission to be held at Pembroke-street Wesleyan Chapel, Portsmouth, to January 26, by Capt. Warner Dennis.——For blessing on a mission at Swaffham, Norfolk, from January 23 to 30, by Mr. Harmer; also on the visit of Rev. F. B. Meyer, on Februry 8 and 9.——For a series of special Children's Services, to be held in various parts of London during the next few months, by Mr. Josiah Spiers, commencing on Monday next at Fetter-lane Chapel, E.C ——For Dr. Ziemann, evangelising in Germany and Bavaria; Dr. Baedeker in Canada; Mr. Bennett Anderson at the Edinburgh Castle; Mr. Charles Inglis at Great Assembly Hall; Mr. Charles Cook in Glasgow; Mr. J. B. Wookey in Manchester; Mr. T. Shuldham Henry at Y.M.C.A., Plymouth; Nineteenth Anniversary, Malden Hall, on Thursday, 20th inst.; Mr. Spencer Walton,, Y.M.C.A., Ramsgate.

EVANGELISTIC MOVEMENTS.

DR. L. W. MUNHALL began a mission in Dr. Talmage's Brooklyn Tabernacle on "watch night," to be continued for at least two months, or as much longer as the interest may warrant.

LAYER BRETON, ESSEX.—Gospel meetings were held in this small village by Mr. John Harris, of the Evangelisation Society, from January 2 to 9. Notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather the meetings were well attended, and there was a solemn feeling over all; the addresses were very earnest and powerful.

MR. JOHN B. BAIN.—Our readers are acquainted with the name of this evangelist who, formerly in Spain, and since in England, has been much blessed in preaching the Gospel. His health is now re-established, and he is prepared to take charge of a church or an unsectarian mission. For either position we believe him entirely suitable. His address is 24, Carisbrooke-road, St. Leonard's-on-Sea.

WORK AMONGST GIPSIES.—Mr. Stanley Alder writes concerning his work amongst the gipsies in the neighbourhood of Chobham. Fourteen tents are under visitation in the immediate locality. Considerable suffering is experienced from cold and hunger. There is much gratitude for any kindness. As recently stated, it is in contemplation to build a gipsy church. Mr. Alder's address is Rose Cottage, Lucas-green, Chobham.

MR. SANKEY IN NEW YORK.—The large hall of the Cooper Institute, New York, was thronged on Sunday evening, January 2, by an audience who came to hear the singing of Mr. Ira D. Sankey and listen to his Gospel services. Several original hymns were sung by Mr. Sankey, and short addresses were delivered by him and the clergymen on the platform. The services have been carried on at the same place every Sunday evening, and will be continued during the winter.—The Star.

BANFFSHIRE GOSPEL MISSION.—The past year has been the most fruitful since the Mission was established. Meetings in halls and schools, and tent services, have been greatly blessed, and the Gospel preached amid markets and scenes of revelry has been the means of pointing several to Jesus. During a mission more than a hundred young men and women were brought to a knowledge of the truth, and found peace in believing, and besides a consequent large increase to the Y.M.C.A, a Y.W.C.A. was formed. At Aboyne, Auchterless, and other places missions were also held, and abundant testimony was given to the great blessing received. Mr. J. A. Smith is the evangelist.

A GOSPEL VAN.—"A deeper interest among the people, a more ready desire to hear the preaching than before, and, above all, more eagerness to procure the Scriptures"— such is the statement made in the fifth annual report of the Manchester Bible and Gospel Van. A large number of towns and villages was visited during the past season, and much interest was manifested, especially in the Potteries, where, night after night, hundreds of working men and women eagerly drank in the word. The van, with its plainly printed texts, is a sermon to all as it passes through the streets and along the highways. It is worked by Leonard Weaver and James Wharton, 21, Crellen-street, Barrow-in-Furness.

MORRISTOWN, N.J.—During two recent weeks the people of Morristown, New Jersey, witnessed an evangelistic movement and a revival of religious interest beyond anything of the kind they have experienced there for many years. There were two regular preaching services, besides prayer-meetings for women and business men, held each week day in one or the other of the three largest churches. Over three thousand persons attended the meetings on the second Sabbath, and hundreds who came dejected and sorrowing went away comforted and rejoicing. The second Wednesday was made a day of special prayer for God's blessing upon the work. Many stores were closed during the hours of service, and the streets were almost as silent as upon a Sunday. At one of the services on this day the preacher invited all who felt so disposed to come forward and take him or their pastor by the hand, and speak such words of confession, love, or service as might be in the heart asking for expression. To this invitation hundreds responded, and there were many evidences of heartfelt emotion which showed itself in the face and mien of each one, as he or she returned to their seat."—New York Observer.

CHURCH ARMY.—Canon Jacobs has commenced a prolonged mission at Portsea, which is being conducted by Mr. Garner, formerly a clown. His efforts have recently been the means of restoring some of the worst characters in Liverpool, Sunderland, and Lowestoft. Church Army work will shortly be commenced in Rochdale, Birkenhead, Headingham, Barnet, Bedford, Skelton, and other places. Some of the evangelists are preparing to go to India, China, and Africa later on in the year. Active young men are still needed to be trained as evangelists in the Working Men's College, at 130, Edgware-road, London, W.

CHURCH PAROCHIAL MISSION.—During the latter part of this month and the beginning of February, the following missioners are at work:—Rev. W. H. Aitken at St. Mark's, Barrow-in-Furness; Revs. H. L. Cook and A. G. Rawstone at St. Philips, Blackburn; Rev. E. Gill at Pencoys, near Redruth; Rev. J. Lancaster at Gotham, near Nottingham; Rev. R. D. Monro at Ridware-Mavesyn, Rugeley; Rev. Dr. Morris at Ullenhall, Henley-in-Arden; Rev. T. Simpson at Ramsey; Rev. J. Simpson at Monkton Combe.

OBITUARY.

REV. ROBERT ROBINSON.

THIS honoured minister, for twenty years Home Secretary of the London Missionary Society, died on the 10th inst., aged seventy-three years. He was for twelve years minister of Union Chapel, Luton, Beds., and afterwards of York-road Chapel, Lambeth. At both these places his memory is still held in high esteem. In 1865, at the urgent request of the Directors of the London Missionary Society, he accepted the important office of Home Secretary, the duties of which he filled with the utmost ardour. To him was due the New Year's Offering Scheme, by which no less than £58,300 had been realised up to his retirement in 1884.

CANON H. C. CORY, D.D.

A loss has been sustained by the Irish Episcopal Church in the decease of this standard bearer and unsparing labourer among Roman Catholics in Ireland. In earlier years he came under the notice of the Founder of the Irish Church Missions, Alexander Dallas. He laboured in the cause most diligently and unceasingly, the principal scene of their labours being Connemara. On the death of the revered Hyacinth d'Arcy, Rector of Clifden, Mr. Cory was appointed his successor, and at this centre of the work his great qualities found their almost natural sphere of development. Here for many years his life and work gained a strong hold on the respect and affection of all classes of the community, Romanist and Protestant alike, and he found much to encourage his work of faith and labour of love.

THE VICTORIA INSTITUTE.—The first meeting for the year of this Society was held on Monday, Jan. 3, when Dr. Wright read a paper describing the Hittite monuments which he had examined in the East, and giving an account of the present position of the question as to the age and extent of the country of the Hittites. Many afterwards joined in the discussion. Thirty members and associates were elected, and it was announced that 100 had joined during the past year, making 1200 members the Institute's strength.

PRAYER FOR THE POLICE.—The readers of THE CHRISTIAN are earnestly requested to remember in prayer the Police Forces of the United Kingdom. It is often noticed by the Police Force, that although they are constantly debarred by their duties from attending the means of grace, they are seldom remembered in prayer, either in public worship or devotional meetings. Surely this should not be so. I hope the day may come when we shall see a special petition for our soldiers, sailors, police, and other public servants inserted in our Liturgy. Meanwhile there is no reason why these, who so much need our prayers, should not be specially mentioned in the services of our Nonconformist brethren, and in devotional meetings connected with the Church of England, and also at family prayers. Any Christian friends knowing of young men from the country who are joining the Police Forces are invited to communicate with me, and I will see that they are introduced to those who will befriend them in their new sphere of life.—Yours faithfully,

(Miss) C. GURNEY, Hon. Sec.

Speak Lord! Thy Servants Hear.

HYMN FOR THE BIBLE READING.

1 Sam. iii. 9.

Around thy Word, O God, we bow,
  A feeble flock, and few,
To seek thy holy counsel now,
  And learn thy will to do.
Here in some glories of that name
  "The Word of Life" appear;
To prove it ever still the same—
  Speak, Lord! thy servants hear.

While backward to Creation's birth
  Thy matchless work we trace;
Or, borne above the mists of earth,
  Survey the realms of Grace:
Thy Word be sacred on each tongue,
  And hallowed in each ear,
On every chord thy praises sung;
  Speak, Lord! thy servants hear.

By opened purpose of thy mind,
  By quickened dread of sin,
By accents of a voice behind,
  Or still small voice within;
By rapture of thy mighty love,
  Or chastening of thy fear,
To haste our languid steps above,
  Speak, Lord! thy servants hear.

To prune the vineyard of our heart
  Thy faithful Word make keen,
To sanctify each inward part,
  And keep thy vessels clean;
To guide when on the devious track,
  Or 'mid the conflict cheer,
Or swift to turn the wanderer back,
  Speak, Lord! thy servants hear.

To speed us by some path untrod,
  Or bid us stand and wait;
Or lead us where the Lamb of God
  Was led, outside the gate;
Thy service in yon halls of light
  Shall crown thy service here,
To keep us watchful all the night,
  Speak, Lord! thy servants hear.

D. J. Rowan.

THE COLOUR CASTE.—The New York Independent states that the authorities of Chattanooga Methodist University, one of the institutions under the control of the Freedmen's Aid Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, have rejected the application of two young men to be received as students on the ground that they are men of colour. We can scarcely believe that any Methodist institution could have been guilty of conduct so outrageous.—Methodist Times.

A JOINT CONFERENCE of the Boards of London ministers of the Baptist and Congregational bodies was held on Tuesday week at the Baptist Mission-house. A paper was read on the occasion by Dr. Redford, on "Denominationalism in the Past and the Future," which gave rise to an interesting and profitable discussion. It was a very significant demonstration of Christian unity, which will, no doubt, be followed by practical measures for drawing closer together for common purposes two of the foremost religious bodies of the United Kingdom.—Nonconformist.

Y.W.C.A., MELBOURNE.—The fourth anniversary of this Association was held on Tuesday, November 30, in the Melbourne Town-hall. The spacious hall was crowded. The chair was taken by Dean Macartney, who dwelt with force and power upon woman's place and influence in works of Christian charity and effort. The Rev. A. R. Edgar (Wesleyan) showed how indissolubly true happiness was connected with the knowledge of Christ and obedience to his precepts. Rev. J. G. Paton, the well-known missionary of the New Hebrides and Moderator of the Victorian General Assembly, spoke very forcibly on the elevating power of the Gospel, illustrating his theme by many interesting facts drawn from his experience as a labourer amongst the South Sea Islanders. Rev. Dr. Llewellyn Bevan, lately arrived in Melbourne, dwelt, in felicitous terms, on the influence of woman in promoting and aiding the social and philanthropic movements of modern times. He also expatiated on the power of woman in modelling and giving tone to home life, and how powerful her influence became when she was imbued with the spirit of Christ.

UNITED PRAYER FOR MISSIONS.

Of happy augury for the cause of missions was the remarkable gathering held on Friday afternoon last at the invitation of the British and Foreign Bible Society, and at their premises in Queen Victoria-streeet. As Lord Harrowby, who presided, in the course of a brief preface to the proceedings, said it was most encouraging, in sending out the invitations, to find that in London there were between forty and fifty societies engaged in missionary work. And the response received was equally encouraging. The earnest, anxious desire for union of which this meeting was but the expression, was one of the most striking features of the present day. The moment is one which calls loudly for prayer. The gravity of the time no one can exaggerate. The restlessness everywhere visible, the shaking of faiths, the spirit of inquiry, and, not least, the fact that the English tongue has become the one great medium of communication throughout the world, all point to a period of extraordinary gravity and responsibility. The question is, Shall we as a nation rise to the responsibility? One means by which we may prepare for this was by such meetings as the present—by greater union among the churches. He was not talking of uniformity, but of that union of spirit, that warmth of feeling towards each other which would at last lead people to say, See how these Christians love one another.

Rev. Joshua Harrison read and commented on John xv. 4, "Abide in Me, and I in you," &c. After prayer had been offered, the representatives of several societies stated their special needs. Rev. C. C. Fenn, Church Missionary Society, mentioned the brethren in Uganda and Central Africa. Two hundred converts had been baptized, and three hundred more received Christian instruction, and these for the most part were hiding in various places because of the persecution. Metlahkatlah was also mentioned, and the fact that there are seventeen vacancies in various parts of the world, for which there are no men ready; clergymen and medical missionaries are both needed. There is also a great lack of candidates for preparation for future work. Rev. E. H. Jones, of the London Missionary Society, asked prayer for Madagascar—that, notwithstanding any future political complications, the Christians there might be kept "steadfast, immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord;" also on behalf of New Guinea, and the work in some of the adjoining islands of the sea. Rev. J. B. Myers, Association Secretary of the Baptist Missionary Society, pleaded on behalf of the Congo Mission, in connection with which many who had gone out had laid down their lives, and that those now labouring there might be preserved.

Rev. J. Sharp, of the Bible Society, read a request on behalf of the McAll Mission, Paris, and then mentioned that the Bible Society is itself in need of men for two or three important posts. He added that one who had already sent large contributions for the spread of the Gospel in China had sent another large donation. It was his earnest desire that this gift might lead to others, for China is a place where great results might be looked for. Rev. G. W. Olver, Secretary of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, said they were sorely in want of means. His prayer was that the Lord would pour out the riches of his grace on the churches at home, leading them to manifest this by liberality towards missionary work abroad. Rev. E. Green, of the Religious Tract Society, also offered prayer, and the Benediction was pronounced by Bishop Perry.

POOR IN CAMBERWELL.—On Thursday last between 600 and 700 poor people had a free tea at the Mansion House Mission Chapel, Camberwell. The building was filled from floor to roof with pinched, hungry-looking men and women, presenting a scene not easily forgotten. All, however, were abundantly satisfied with the good things provided, and the kindness displayed by the attendant friends was an additional solatium. Some enjoyable singing completed the happiness of the evening.

THE CHRISTIAN EVIDENCE SOCIETY, Hyde Park Branch, have arranged for the delivery of a course of free lectures in the lecture hall connected with Dr. Donald Fraser's church, Marylebone. The first of the series was delivered by Dr. Gladstone, on January 6, and the second by Mr. Lant Carpenter, on January 13. Professor Stokes will lecture this (Thursday) evening on, "Is the Demand for Demonstrative Evidence in Religion reasonable?" On January 27, Mr. Carruthers will deal with the topic, "What the Plant World has to say to Evolution."

THE CHILDREN FED.—At the Working Men's Mission, Collingwood-street, New-cut, Lambeth, 600 poor children were last week entertained at tea, and the evening was thoroughly enjoyed. They, indeed, said they would like another soon, Mr. Young expressing the hope in reply that their kind friends would help to give it them. This work of feeding the hungry is regularly carried on here. One day in each week 150 females have soup and bread, 150 men soup dinners, and 150 children stew dinners. On Tuesday evenings there are classes attended by some 500 or 600 children, and the Sunday school has an attendance of 180.

THE STREET BOYS OF GLASGOW.—On Wednesday week Mr. and Mrs. Quarrier, of the Orphan Homes Mission, received 1300 street children of Glasgow as their guests for the evening. There were as many more outside as would have filled the hall again. Mr. Quarrier has a good hold of the children. Many of those whom he used to see were, he feared, in prison. His idea was that the magistrates should look after all those who were obliged to seek their living on the streets, and appoint to each a station, and see that they attended school. Then there would be a chance of their getting into right situations. The notion was greatly applauded by the youngsters, and Mr. Quarrier said he would again bring the matter before the magistrates. Recitations by children from the Bridge of Weir Homes, and a magic lantern entertainment, representing a trip to Canada, gave them some refreshing thoughts, and when on leaving there were added for each two sausage rolls, an orange, a story book and Christmas card, their satisfaction was complete.

DISTRESS IN ARKLOW.—I have been visiting numbers of families here, and their poverty and wretchedness exceed any I have ever witnessed. I lived for some years in Achill, where the poverty was exceeding great, but as nothing compared with the distress here; for there they have plenty of fuel, but here, in numbers of homes, there is neither fire, food, nor bed-covering. In one home I visited to-day, I found the mother (who has been confined to bed for four years) sitting with her knees drawn up to her chin, trying to get a little warmth in that way. No fire, no food, no hope, her bed covering, a few filthy rags, her husband and son out of work, and her daughter begging. In the next house I found the poor mother crouching over the remains of a fire nursing a dying baby from her empty breast, her face wan with sorrow and want, no food, no furniture, except two empty boxes, her bed for a family of eight, an old mattress on the floor, and for bed-covering a few old rags. Everything that would bring a meal of food parted with to the pawnbroker. These two homes are just samples of scores of others. (Miss) E. Rae.

Ferry Bank, Arklow, Ireland.

NEW GUINEA.—At a meeting of the members of the Colonial Institute, held last week at Princes' Hall, Piccadilly, Rev. James Chalmers (of Port Moresby), read a paper on "New Guinea—Past, Present, and Future." Mr. Chalmers, in his paper, stated that the only real attempt at Christianising or civilising the natives had been made by the London Missionary Society, at a great outlay of money and loss of life, and nowhere, except at mission stations, was there any appearance of civilisation. One of the chief difficulties he and his friends of the London Missionary Society met with in New Guinea was the want of real chiefs, men or women, with real authority. He looked upon the inhabitants as semi-civilised, very impulsive, easily won, who could do terribly cruel things, and who could be as tender and sympathetic as the most civilised refined lady or gentleman. The future of New Guinea presented problems of great difficulty, and if annexation would be a benefit to the natives and a necessity to Australia he would support the proposal to annex the country; but New Guinea was never likely to become a land fit for colonising. Its position and climate were both against it. Annexation would, he feared, render just treatment almost impossible.

The Book World.

SCRIPTURE SPOIL IN SACRED SONG. By ADELINE BRAITHWAITE. 1s. Nisbet & Co. Much light is thrown upon Bible themes by means of songs and sonnets in this little volume, which displays poetic talent as well as spiritual insight.

GREAT THOUGHTS FROM MASTER MINDS. Vol. vi. Hall, Fleet-street. This entertaining volume is rendered more interesting than its predecessors by short and pithy biographical sketches, with portraits of prominent men of thought—past and present. The "Thoughts" maintain their high standard of excellence.

ON THE ROAD. 1d. Humphreys & Co. The current number of this monthly organ of the commercial travellers begins a new series. It contains, among other excellent material, a portrait and interesting sketch of Mr. John Wells Thatcher, the late editor, and founder of the United Kingdom Commercial Travellers' Association.

DIVINE HEALING BY FAITH: A Review of "Faith-healing, Truth and Extravagance," by J. F. B. Tinling, B.A., &c. By GEO. WEBSTER. (J. Snow & Co). This book of a hundred pages is an extreme example of the extravagance referred to in the title of the tract which is the object of the author's animadversions.

LOVING COUNSELS, SERMONS, AND ADDRESSES. By Rev. CHARLES GARRETT. 5s. T. Woolmer. It has been truly said that the great want of to-day is not more head but more heart. These sermons and addresses are full of both. It is impossible to read them—just as it was impossible to hear them—without deriving spiritual benefit. The author's name is a household word in Great Britain; his book deserves a wide circulation, and will doubtless secure it. A most excellent steel engraving portrait of Mr. Garrett forms a frontispiece.

BIBLE WARNINGS: ADDRESSES TO CHILDREN. By Rev. RICHARD NEWTON, D.D. Nisbet & Co. Dr. Newton's addresses to children are already so well known on both sides of the Atlantic that words of commendation are scarcely necessary in introducing this fresh volume to the notice of parents and Sabbath-school teachers. These are as simple, solidly interesting, and full of Bible truth as any that have preceded them. Crowded with anecdote, they will be as useful to teachers in suggesting subjects and method as for the reading of children themselves.

BIBLE WORK AT HOME AND ABROAD' Cassell & Co. This publication, which well continues the work once carried on in the "Missing Link Magazine," makes one of the best serial volumes we have seen. It contains each month a delightful sketch of work in some Bible-woman's district; as we pass in these pages from one part of London to another, in company with the charming guide who supplies the sketches, we see only something of London's present needs and the rays of light to be found here and there in humble homes. The book is one of really absorbing interest.

W. LINDSAY ALEXANDER, D.D., LL.D.: His Life and Work. 7s. 6d. James Nisbet & Co. The first and larger part of this volume consists of a memoir by Rev. James Ross, Glasgow, supplemented by reminiscences of Dr. Alexander from the pens of those who knew him well. The second part gives specimens of the literary work done by the departed divine. Dr. Alexander was a brilliant and useful minister for many years. He set a high ideal before himself, and concentrated his energies on attaining it. This story of what he did, and how he did it, cannot fail to be useful to preachers who are wise enough to know the value of "footsteps on the sands of time." We can cordially recommend the biography: we hope shortly to give a portrait, and detailed sketch of Dr. Alexander's life.

GRANNIE TRESAWNA'S STORY, 2s.; and DADDY LONGLEGS. 8d. By NELLIE CORNWALL. T. Woolmer. Two capital tales of Cornish life. The former is historical, as well as romantic, the chief incident being one often related concerning the expected invasion of the French in the days of terror of the first Napoleon. The enemy was kept at bay, and finally frightened off, by what appeared to be a large body of soldiers awaiting them on a prominent side of the Cornish coast, but who were really only the countrywomen in their scarlet cloaks, drawn up into a squadron for the purpose. This incident is ably woven into the present narrative, and the disappearance of the dreaded foe ascribed as much to the prayers of these poor folk as to this novel method of scaring the foe.

RUTH; THE SOUL BROUGHT INTO ONENESS WITH CHRIST. By Rev. G. W. HILLS. Elliot Stock. A gracious little book, with a Puritanic flavour about it, manifesting a phase of Gospel truth too often overlooked in these stirring days of practical religion. It will delight Christians of a meditative class. Its large clear type makes it especially suitable for the aged, and for invalids.

PURITY AND POWER. By C. R. PARSONS. 2s. 6d. T. Woolmer. Without being new or striking in its presentation of truth, this useful volume is full of devout and Scriptural thoughts on holiness of heart and life. The reader will find numerous extracts from other writers, both in poetry and prose, all combining with the author's own reflections to form a book that many will doubtless welcome as a help heavenward.

THE MOLOCH OF PARAFFIN. By CHARLES MARVIN. 1s. Anderson & Co., Cockspur-street. Scarcely a week passes without some painful accident or death in London alone traceable to paraffin. This pamphlet will render signal service if it opens people's eyes to the extreme dangers of paraffin lamps. The author describes the false principles on which nearly all such lamps are constructed, especially cheap ones used by the poorer classes. Certainly there seems a wide field open to inventors in this direction, and we hope the pamphlet will receive the attention it deserves.

THE DRAGON, IMAGE, AND DEMON; or, The Three Religions of China: Confucianism, Buddhism, and Taoism. By Rev. H. C. DUBOSE. Partridge & Co. A piece of good, honest work. Mr. DuBose has been a hard-working missionary, in much and close contact with the Chinese; so that, looking through his eyes, we are enabled to see Confucianism, Buddhism, and Taoism, not as they appear to the mere theorist, but embodied in the actual thoughts and actions of the millions of China. And the sight is one to awaken deep interest and pity in every Christly heart. There are a large number of illustrations, all of which are evidently from a Chinese pencil, and in thoroughly Chinese style. Altogether this book is likely to prove good fuel for the fire of missionary interest and devotion.

We would draw the special attention of any of our readers who are acquainted with phonography to the edition of the NEW TESTAMENT, printed in the easy reporting style, recently issued by Messrs. Isaac Pitman & Sons, 1, Amen-corner, E.C. (4s. cloth; 5s. morocco). For beauty and accuracy of outline it could not possibly be excelled. Its possession will give a new zest to the study of the sacred volume. As a book for reading practice, of course, it stands unequalled; but no phonographer, whatever be his attainment in the art, should rest satisfied without a copy. The same publishers issue PHONOGRAPHY IN THE OFFICE, by Alfred Kingston (1s. 6d., cloth). It is, in truth, "a complete shorthand clerk's guide," as well as "a text-book of preparatory training," and will prove invaluable in its special sphere.

REAL RELIGION AND REAL LIFE. By Rev. S. MACNAUGHTON, M.A. Gemmell, Edinburgh. A strong, healthy book, admirably adapted to present times. The author is widely known by other works which have come from his pen; this, indeed, is a supplementary volume to one recently issued, entitled, "Doctrine and Doubt," the favourable reception accorded to which has induced the writer to publish the work before us. It is stated in the preface that every chapter of the book has, as originally preached, brought help and comfort to some soul. We can readily believe this, and we are sure help and comfort will be brought to many more by its publication. Many striking thoughts will be found in its pages; spiritual fervour abounds, and practical truths we continually need to bear in mind are enforced.

The annual volume of The Christian Irishman shows that it is a truly valuable aid to the progress of Christianity in Ireland. There is a charming freshness in the tone of its articles, and while the position and prospects of that country, in view of the crisis through which it is passing, are discussed with freedom, and from a perfectly well-defined standpoint, there is an entire absence of the bitterness that so often disfigures such discussions. The papers by "Comar," on various subjects of religious controversy that are continually cropping up, are admirable, and, with another series, "Through County Cork," these latter being exceedingly picturesque, make us wish that the monthly were better known on this side of the Channel. During the present year it is intended to give a series of carefully-prepared articles on Irish industries. Best of all, there is no uncertain sound as to Gospel truths. (Humphrey & Armour, Crow-street, Dublin.)

MILDMAY CONFERENCE ON FOREIGN MISSIONS. Shaw & Co. The official report for the recent Conference at Mildmay will be valued by many as a permanent record of addresses, which were not only an evidence of awakened interest in missionary labours, but have had a powerful effect in intensifying missionary interest and zeal. The book forms a standard of reference concerning missionary progress on the Continent, in India, China, Africa, and almost all parts of the world, and has, therefore, a special value.

WHAT MAKES MY BROTHER TO OFFEND? By H. R. FRANCIS. Bible and Book Depôt, Leigh, Tunbridge. This envelope booklet well puts before Christians their responsibility on the subject of strong drink.

FROM MORN TILL EVE. 1s. Dean & Son, Fleet-street. This very tastefully got up text-book (for a month) has, facing each illuminated text, a short poem by Miss Cecilia Havergal. The combination is always appropriate.

AN OASIS IN THE DESERT. 1d. Morgan & Scott. In this pamphlet the chief incidents in a life full of public interest, that of Mr. Frederick N. Charrington, are given for the first time in such a form. May God raise up many more such men!

THE CHRISTIAN TREASURY (6d. Marshall Bros.) begins its new volume well, with a story entitled "Standard Bearers; or, Heroes of the Scottish Faith," by Elizabeth Stirling. "An Episode in the History of the Huguenots" is interesting, and Lady Hope is also a contributor.

ISABEL'S CROSS. By ELIZA GREEN. W. H. Bees & Co. A religious love tale; improbable, and as unlike real life or real people as such tales frequently are. It is such a story as might be evolved out of the brain of one who had no real experience of the situations delineated.

FRIENDLY HINTS (½d. Strain & Sons, Great Victoria-street, Belfast) is a valuable reminder of the importance of preparation on the part of Sunday-school teachers—above all, that preparation which is of the heart, enabling the teacher to speak out of its fulness, and so, insensibly perhaps, but none the less surely, to influence others.

The January number of SUNSHINE (Stoneman) has a delightful little story of the Queen during her first visit to Brighton, nearly fifty years ago, which we do not remember to have seen before. LITTLE STAR (same publishers), for the tiny ones of the nursery, is just the thing for them, with its life-like illustrations and large type.

THE YOKE OF CHRIST TO BE BORNE IN YOUTH (Edinburgh: Macniven & Wallace) is by the Bishop of St. Andrews, and was to have been delivered to the Y.M.C.A. of St. Cuthbert's, but was not. The Bishop of Edinburgh advised his brother of St. Andrew's not to appear in the pulpit of St. Cuthbert's. So the address was printed instead of read. It contains much valuable counsel to young men.

GOLDEN WORDS. 2d. Nisbet & Co. These "words," addressed to owners and occupiers of land, by the late Mr. Gordon, of Pitlurg contain much homely advice, mixed with many searching questions. God as a first cause in giving and withholding fruitful seasons, and man's own conduct leading to results that make or mar his own happiness, are faithfully insisted on, and that He is speaking to all at the present time is made quite clear.

PLAIN QUESTIONS. In packets of 150, 6d.; 2s. 6d. per 1000. Morgan & Scott. These Plain Questions, including such as "What think ye of Christ?" "What shall I do with Jesus?" and a dozen others are printed in distinct, yet taking style, with text and verse, and are admirably adapted for general distribution. They will be found very effective either in the mission hall or the open air, and from their attractive appearance will be acceptable to all.

THE POOR AND UNEMPLOYED.—Inasmuch as "Mansion House Funds" and all other philanthropic schemes have failed to solve the problem of the poor and unemployed, the Christian Socialist Society is arranging for a public meeting, to which all, but especially Christians who are not Socialists, are invited. The Society's object is to submit a clear and definite solution of the problem, and to explain its views, in the hope that a common Christianity may lead them to a common understanding and the shaping of a common course of action on social questions. The meeting will be held at Essex Hall, Essex-street, Strand, on the 25th inst., at 7.30 p.m.

A CALL FOR SUNDAY-SCHOOL TEACHERS.—The Mantle-road Sunday-school, Brockley, was until Michaelmas connected with All Saints' Church, Hatcham Park, when the Church, quite unexpectedly, gave notice to the School Board to terminate tenancy. The school would have been closed and the children scattered if I had not decided to become the tenant myself, and acept the responsibility. It is not now connected with any church or chapel in the neighbourhood, and it is a sad thing that, after an existence of four years, and an average attendance of seventy children, it should be allowed to collapse. If any of your readers reside in this neighbourhood, I should be so glad of their services as teachers.—Yours sincerely,

JOHN T. PARKER.

Letters to the Editor.

CIRCULATION OF "THE CHRISTIAN."

I take the liberty (writes a correspondent) of sending you an extract from a letter which I received the other day, and which will confirm the testimony you so frequently receive as to the use made of your paper. I had no idea, myself, that so much good could be done at so cheap a rate, and it is my intention to continue the supply of the paper as before:—

"I cannot find language to express my gratitude for your generosity and great kindness in sending me The Christian so long. I never knew a paper so much appreciated and read. My stepson reads the paper, and then it is lent to a paralysed man who cannot leave his house. He reads it through, and then it is sent to a Mr. ——, who reads it through, and often has visits from the parson for the purpose of looking over the paper. His sermons have been very interesting and profitable by the quotations from The Christian. Then the paper is lent to others who appreciate it."

PRAYER FOR JERUSALEM.

Sir,—Permit me to ask for very special and fervent prayer on Friday, 21st instant, on behalf of the Jerusalem Bishopric, our venerable Society, and all Christian missions in Syria. Being the anniversary of the first Bishop's arrival in Jerusalem, our annual prayer meeting will be held in this committee-room at 3 o'clock p.m.; but the interest manifested in this bishopric at the present time calls for widespread and universal intercession.

The origin of this Day of Prayer is thus recorded in Smith's "Protestant Bishopric in Jerusalem," compiled in 1847 from official documents—

> At the close of the year 1842 his Majesty (William IV. of Prussia) directed a circular letter to be addressed to the superintendents of the provinces, making known to all clergy and congregations his desire that they should dedicate the 21st of January to prayer for Jerusalem. It is, therefore, peculiarly gratifying to know that the permission of the king was willingly and heartily accepted, and acted upon by the Prussian people. More than 9000 Protestant parishes observed a day as a Church holiday, and spent that day in prayer for the peace of Jerusalem. Only sixteen clergymen declined taking part in the devotions of their friends and countrymen. Owing to the delay of the post, in consequence of the overflowing of rivers, &c., the circular did not everywhere arrive in time, so that all could not observe the 21st day of January, 1843, the anniversary of the Bishop's arrival in Jerusalem. In such cases, another day was appointed, either the 22nd or 29th of January, or the 5th of February.

HELP FOR ANXIOUS SOULS.

Dear Sir,—I recently attended a mission service at the close of which all those who desired to "take their stand under the shadow of the cross" were invited to stand up. 140 were reported to have thus publicly testified their desire to live a new life of faith in the Son of God. After these anxious ones had taken their seats, they were told by the missioner that the Lord no longer looked upon them and their sins, but only upon Christ and what He had done for them, when in his body on the tree, He suffered the just for the unjust that He might bring sinners to God. It seemed to me a most unsatisfactory and dangerous thing even to imply that the fact of publicly standing up in a mixed audience on such an occasion was any true evidence of passing from death unto life.

There are many spiritually minded men and women, in all stations of life, who shrink from taking part in what is felt to be a somewhat mechanical method of seeking souls, but who would for Christ's sake, and out of the fulness of their love to Him, thankfully be the means in the Lord's hand of helping anxious souls to find the Christ. Many such would thankfully welcome anxious souls to their homes, or visit them, in the hope of helping them, with the blessing of God, Zionward.

Why should there not be in every town, city, or even country village, a list publicly kept of those thus willing to help others? It would be a blessed work for Christ. Men and women in trouble about their souls need heartfelt and sincere sympathy, and loving hearts to whom they can in the fullest confidence pour out their troubles. Could not a list or register of such sincere Christians who are thus willing to help sin-sick souls be kept at Y.M.C.A.'s, or in so-called "Houses of God"? We leave these duties far too much to officials, when we ourselves ought to stretch out the helping hand. Will any of your readers who may be interested in this subject let us know their views through your columns? Sympathy.

AFRICAN LAKES COMPANY.

Sir,—I beg the privilege of making a brief statement on behalf of a Scotch enterprise in Africa which is not so well known as it should be. Though not nominally missionary in its character, this undertaking is entirely so in reality, and has all along been so intimately connected with our Central African missions that they could scarcely have been sustained without it.

All who have studied the problem of missions among absolutely uncivilised peoples are aware that progress can be best made when missionary work goes hand in hand with some form of industrial development. With people of that class a purely spiritual work is impossible; the principles of the New Testament must be taught practically—by men at work, by building and planting, by buying and selling, as well as through preaching and healing. Now, to open up and develop a hitherto unknown region in Central Africa, and especially the district around Livingstonia, to make employments for the people, to trade with them honestly, and to co-operate with and strengthen the hands of the missionaries, the "African Lakes Company" was formed in 1878. It has already established twelve trading depôts manned by a staff of twenty-five Europeans and many native agents. The classic Ilala on Lake Nyassa belongs to it, and it has just placed a new steamer, to supersede the Lady Nyassa, on the river Shire—the highway to Livingstonia and Tanganyika. It has succeeded in starting a most flourishing coffee plantation in the interior; and new sources of wealth, such as cinchona, indigo, cacao, tea, and fibre plants, are being gradually introduced. For the first time on the large scale it has taught the natives the meaning and the blessings of work.

It has acted as a check on the slave-trade. Some of its agents—who are selected first of all for their Christian character—carry on religious work at their respective stations, and are there, indeed, frequently the sole missionaries. Finally, and above all, it acts as deacon to the mission stations themselves, caring for them in secular things, giving them transit to and fro, and keeping them in stores. So interesting a programme is sufficient to commend the operation of this unique commercial undertaking to all who delight in the more practical side of religion; but if any further guarantee is needed, it is sufficient to add that the chairman of the Company is Mr. James Stevenson, while the managers in Africa are two such well-known men as Mr. John and Mr. Fred Moir, the sons of Dr. Moir, of Edinburgh.

At the present moment, in order to extend these very important operations, the Company is issuing additional share capital. I do not, of course, propose to close this note by appending a "form of application;" but as this model Company has blown no trumpets during all the years it has been quietly rendering us so many and so varied services, I think it right to bring its wish for extension before the notice of the Church. The managers are sanguine of paying a dividend presently; but, lest any possible investor should hesitate to steal a profit from so good a cause, I may add that this undesirable contingency might be avoided by his making over the shares to the Livingstonia Mission, which I am sure has no such scruples. The total sum wanted is not large; but even the taking of a single share—they are somewhere about £50 each—would be a real encouragement to one of the most original and useful pieces of philanthropy ever attempted.—Yours, &c.

Henry Drummond.

EPISCOPAL ORDERS.

Dear Sir,—In The Christian of last week, in a column of "Notes and Comments," I read with regret that an Irish Church paper has recently said that the admission of non-episcopally ordained ministers to Anglican ecclesiastical functions would, in point of principle, involve "the downfall of Episcopacy."

I have no intention of troubling your readers with a long discussion on points of history and principle as difficult as they are important—things certainly not to be dismissed with an abrupt "Yes" or "No." But it may be worth while to remind those who may need the reminder that for a hundred years after the English Reformation, a period distinguished in the Church of England by depth of learning and strength of ecclesiastical principle, it was possible, both in theory and practice, for non-episcopally ordained ministers—e.g., men ordained in Scotland, or France, or Switzerland—to hold Anglican preferment on the one condition of signing the doctrinal portion of our Articles.

When, in 1662, the last unhappy Act of Uniformity was passed—not the less unhappy in that it was edged by a spirit of retaliation for the terribly strict suppression of the Liturgy in the preceding period—it was indeed made necessary for all Anglican ministers to have received, or to receive, Episcopal ordination.

But our documents have never failed to recognise the validity of other orders in themselves. This by the way, however. The example of the post-Reformation century is altogether against the assertion you have quoted.—I am, your faithful servant,

Handley C. G. Moule, M.A,
Principal of Ridley Hall.

Cambridge, Jan. 12.

FINSBURY PARK.—Mr. George Hucklesby recently gave a series of three lectures at Blackstock-hall, Finsbury-park, on the "Tabernacle in the Wilderness." The lectures were listened to throughout with rapt attention. Those who had never before heard the spiritual interpretation of the various parts of the Tabernacle were struck by their glorious foreshadowing of things to come, and might well exclaim, "Every whit uttereth his glory."

BRIGHTON.—Three special addresses were delivered at Brighton Town Hall, by Mr. H. L. Hastings (of Boston, U.S.), on Monday, January 10, "The World without the Bible;" on Tuesday, January 11, "The Inspiration of the Bible;" and, on Wednesday, January 12, "The Mistakes of Moses." Those who had the privilege of hearing these addresses (says The Hastings News) will not soon forget the treat provided. Mr. Hastings is a very superior lecturer. In manner and matter he was equally good. Atheists were convinced, and contributed to the collection.

MRS. HILTON'S STEPNEY CRECHE.—There are few sights more charming than the smiling faces of happy children, and no music more enchanting than their peals of merry laughter. Anyone having the good fortune to be in the midst of Mrs. Hilton's multitudinous family of infants during the recent festive season might have enjoyed these luxuries to their heart's content. Could the contributors of toys have witnessed the joy of these happy infants, their own hearts would have overflowed with joy. The inmates of the Feltham branch were generously provided with everything necessary for a Christmas treat by ladies in their locality, so that brightness and joy filled all departments of Mrs. Hilton's institutions.

Y.M.C.A., LEICESTER.—During the past week a very successful mission has been conducted by a number of young members from Cambridge University in the Temperance Hall. Although the attendance was not so large as anticipated, yet much blessing has been received; there is reason to believe many young men have found the Saviour. The members of the Association have been also stirred up, and many have consecrated themselves to the Master's service. A noon-day prayer-meeting was held daily in the Presbyterian Lecture Hall. On Thursday evening the mission was brought to a close by a foreign missionary meeting in the Walker Memorial Hall. There was a very large attendance, Mr. R. Radcliffe presiding. Messrs. MacGregor, Nash, and A. Battersby, members of the Cambridge deputation (two of whom have already been appointed to mission stations), delivered addresses, exhorting their hearers to do what they could for the salvation of the heathen.

SUNDAY, JAN. 23.—JOB XXIX.

A pathetic description of Job's former happiness as contrasted with his present misery. The vein of what seems like self-righteousness, which may be traced throughout the chapter, arises not so much from a spirit of boasting as from a truthful representation of that which constituted his chief pleasure—living for others. The honour which he received from others was not the mere homage paid to wealth or rank, but was the thankful expression of gratitude and respect for favours received and virtues exhibited.

2.—In the days when God preserved me.—Job never omits to refer all to God. He thus re-echoes his first expression of submission to God's dealings on hearing of his children's death: "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away" (i. 21).

4.—When the secret of God was upon my tabernacle.—The word "secret" rather means intimacy, "familiarity, confiding unreserved intercourse." — Delitzsch. R.V. gives in margin "counsel or friendship."

9.—Princes refrained from speaking.—According to Delitzsch, "princes" means magnates of the city. Canon Cook remarks that the state of society described is strikingly like that described in the Homeric poems. The rank and influence of the chief depend upon his personal character.

24.—If I laughed on them, they believed it not.—A rendering in margin of R.V. is to be preferred, "If I smiled on them, they were not confident," i.e., did not abuse his condescension.

MONDAY, JAN. 24.—JOB XXX.

3.—For want and famine they were solitary.—In this and the few following verses there is "a remarkable description of the outcast hordes of the desert. There is reason to suppose that in Idumæa and Bashan, Troglodytes, a weak, nerveless race, survived their ruin for some considerable time, lingering near their old abodes in hopeless degradation."—S.C.

9.—And now I am their song.—"In all this description, Job must not be supposed to allude to the men of station who came to visit him in his affliction, but to the vagabonds who insulted him when he was abandoned by his friends."—S.C.

24.—Howbeit he will not stretch out his hand in the grave.—This is a difficult verse, and critics are much divided as to its construction. On the whole, the reading in margin of R V., which is that of Ewald, Delitzsch, and others, seems the best: "Howbeit doth not one stretch out his hand in his fall? or in his calamity therefore cry for help?" The following verse confirms this view, for "Job means to say that the manifestation of feeling which he himself felt at the misfortune of others will be still permitted to him in his own misfortunes; he who felt sympathy with the sufferings of others will in his own affliction stretch out his hand for help in the face of certain ruin, and pour forth his pain in lamentation."—Delitzsch.

29.—I am a brother to dragons, &c.—"Here, as elsewhere, the word so rendered means 'jackals.' Job compares his mournings to the long melancholy cries of the jackal and of the owl (or rather 'ostrich'), described by travellers in the East as inexpressibly mournful and piercing." —S.C.

TUESDAY, JAN. 25.—JOB XXXI.

"Job concludes the whole series of discourses with a solemn protestation of his integrity in all relative duties. The points which he selects belong altogether to natural religion, as it was understood and practised by the Patriarchs, without a single reference or allusion to the specific institutions of Israel. He dwells in succession upon inward purity and integrity (1—11); equity in dealing with dependants (13—15); compassion to the poor and destitute (16—23); freedom from covetousness, from the pride of wealth (24, 25); from the earliest form of false religion (26—28); upon superiority to envious and malignant feelings (29, 30); upon liberality to neighbours and to strangers (31, 32); upon honesty in confession of transgressions; and winds up with a solemn call upon the Almighty to hear his protestation, and to judge his cause, confident of a complete and triumphant vindication. Exceeding interest attaches to this chapter, as containing a complete code of patriarchal morality."—S.C.

24.—If I have made gold my hope, &c.—The connection between covetousness and idolatry in its earliest form (the worship of the sun, moon, and stars) as described in vers. 26, 27, is striking, and recalls Eph. v. 5, "covetous man who is an idolater." See the same juxtaposition of these two sins in 1 Cor. v. 11.

33.—If I covered my transgressions as Adam.—"The allusion to Adam has been questioned, and the phrase may be rendered as in the margin: 'after the manner of men.' But there is no reason why Job should not refer to the first great fact which shows the nature and effect of sin upon the conscience; it cannot be supposed that the history of Adam was unknown to the descendants of Abraham."—S.C.

35.—That mine adversary had written a book.—The meaning of this is better expressed in R.V.: "That I had the indictment which mine adversary hath written." S.C. thus paraphrases it: "As for the writing which my adversary would be bound to produce in court, my one wish is that I had it; far from fearing shame, from dreading conviction, I would take it and lay it on my shoulders as a badge of honour (see Isa. ix. 6, xxii. 22), or bear it as a crown upon my head."

WEDNESDAY, JAN. 26.—JOB XXXII.

"This, and the following five chapters, contain the discourse of Elihu, a new interlocutor. Job had not only maintained his piety and integrity, but had imputed to God unrighteousness in his dealings; his opponents had first insinuated, and then openly declared that his calamities were a necessary and just punishment for wickedness, which they assumed, but were unable to prove. At this crisis Elihu comes in: he has a different theory to propose. The Divine chastisements have a loving purpose. They are intended to awaken a man's conscience, and to save him from destruction; they make him feel the want of a mediator. As to the imputations Job had advanced against the justice of God, they involved very serious guilt; instead of humility, his afflictions had taught him pride, hence the silence of God. Job's only right course is to listen to God's teaching, and to magnify his work."—S.C.

2.—Because he justified himself rather than God.—Compare the question which (xl. 8) God Himself asks Job: "Wilt thou condemn Me that thou mayest be righteous?"

19.—It is ready to burst like new bottles.—Compare Matt. ix. 17, to which this passage forms an apt illustration. "The inward struggle of spiritual emotions has a striking analogy to the process of fermentation. See also Acts ii. 13." —S. C.

20.—I will speak that I may be refreshed.—Rather, as in margin, "That I may breathe," or, as we would say, "give vent to my feelings."

THURSDAY, JAN. 27.—JOB XXXIII.

6.—I am according to thy wish in God's stead. —This (says Canon Cook) may be more accurately rendered: "Behold, I, like thee, am God's creature," or, as R.V. renders it, "Behold, I am toward God even as thou art."

17.—That he may withdraw man from his purpose.—"The real object is one of love, not of wrath, as Job and his opponents had throughout assumed."—S.C.

23.—If there be a messenger with him, an interpreter.—Delitzsch renders this: "If there is an angel as mediator for him." "The word 'messenger' is nearly always rendered 'angel,' and even when (as in Mal. iii. 1) our version has 'messenger,' it is in the sense of a Divine Being, 'the messenger of the covenant.' There is no reason to suppose that it has another sense in this passage."—S.C. The word "interpreter" is the same as that so rendered Gen. xlii. 23. It occurs also 2 Chron. xxxii. 31, in the sense of "ambassador." Gesenius explains the word here thus: "A messenger, an interpreter—the interceding angel, i.e., interceding with God for men." Canon Cook points out that "Jewish prayers show that the Interpreter was always identified in their minds with the expected Redeemer of Israel. Thus in a prayer offered still in many countries of Europe on the eve of the Day of Atonement, 'Raise up for us the righteous Interpreter, say, I have found a ransom.'" To show unto man his uprightness.—Better rendered in R.V., "what is right for him." Delitzsch translates, "to declare to man what is for his profit."

24.—I have found a ransom.—Compare Heb. ix. 12 (which may literally be translated), "Having found an eternal ransom."

25.—His flesh shall be fresher than a child's.—"Elihu speaks, of course, of the restoration to perfect health; but his words are singularly suggestive of the higher truths made known to us by the true Mediator."—S.C. Vers. 25—28 are a striking picture of regeneration consequent on redemption.

27.—He looketh upon men, and saith, &c.—Critics are now generally agreed that "looketh upon" should be translated "singeth unto or before." This Psalm of the quickened soul is contained in vers. 27, 28. Delitzsch, S.C. and R.V. (margin) thus translate: "I had sinned and perverted what was right, and it was not requited to me. He redeemed my soul from going down into the pit, and my life rejoiceth in the light." A beautiful confession of faith for a Christian, to be sung continually before men.

FRIDAY, JAN. 28.—JOB XXXIV.

11.—For the work of a man shall He render unto him, &c.—One of the earliest statements of a great principle of God's judicial dealings with man, which is again and again asserted both in the Old and in the New Testament. It does not contradict salvation by grace, for those who are "found in Christ" are dealt with "as He is" (1 John iv. 17).

14.—If He set his heart upon man.—There is no "man" in the Hebrew; it is "on him." The best critics take this to mean, "on Himself." "The most probable meaning is, If God set his heart upon Himself (i.e., regarded Himself only)." — S.C. Delitzsch renders the verse: "If He only set his heart upon Himself, if He took back his breath and his inspiration to Himself; all flesh would expire together, and man would return to dust."

31.—Surely it is meet to be said unto God, &c.—"Elihu draws the conclusion that Job has no course open but to bear his chastisement, promise amendment, ask for instruction, and do no more iniquity. He then claims the honour of having convicted Job, and winds up this set of arguments with a wish that the trial may continue until the issue is complete. Harsh as his words are, they are not without some justification. Elihu's own conviction that all chastisements proceed from love necessarily involved the condemnation of one who could see in them nothing but indications of enmity."—S.C.

SATURDAY, JAN. 29.—JOB XXXV.

"Elihu proceeds to deal with the assertion that a life of righteousness had brought to Job no corresponding blessings. He argues that man's righteousness constitutes no claim upon God (1—8), and that when God disregards appeals to his justice it is because they are urged without humility and faith (9—13); hence the duty of submitting to Him with full trust in his justice."—S.C.

3.—What profit shall I have, if I be cleansed from my sin?—The words "if I be cleansed" are not in the Hebrew. Canon Cook says: "This clause is rightly given in the margin, 'What do I gain (from righteousness) more than from sinning?'"

6.—If thou sinnest, &c.—The drift of this is that there is no such relation between God and man as to make happiness a reward due to righteousness. When granted, it is a matter of favour and grace; when withdrawn, complaints imply a wrong conception of our position before God.

10.—Who giveth songs in the night.—Comp. Acts xvi. 25.

15.—He hath visited in his anger.—R.V. renders this verse better: "But now, because he hath not visited in his anger, neither doth he greatly regard arrogance; therefore doth Job," &c.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

The Excise returns for the past six months show a decrease of £180,000.

An Inter-Collegiate Prohibition Convention was held, January 3, 4, at Cleveland, Ohio.

A law has been passed in Holland by which 12,000 of the lowest drink-shops have been removed.

The new constitution of Florida, which provides for local Prohibition, has been ratified by 10,000 majority.

The National Christian Total Abstinence Society, at Amsterdam, more than doubled its numbers last year.

At York Sessions, the Deputy Recorder said female drunkenness had almost trebled during the past quarter.

At Boston (U.S.), last year, the majority in favour of saloons was 9000; this year it is reduced to about 4000.

John Moffat, one of the best known temperance workers in America, lately died in St. Louis. He was a nephew of the famous missionary, Robert Moffat.

The Dutch Government has ordered 2000 copies of a translation of Dr. Richardson's "Temperance Text Book" for circulation in the prisons of Holland.

Since the opening of the voluntary Home for Inebriate Women, at Stanley, near Liverpool, 160 patients have been received, one-third of whom are believed to have been fully reclaimed.

Mr. George Sturge offers three prizes for the best essays in favour of total abstinence—the competitors to be persons of either sex receiving weekly or monthly wages. The adjudicators to be three working men. Apply The Philanthropist, 123, Fulham-road, S.W.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Sioux City have formed an incorporation for the purpose of building a Memorial Building to the memory of Rev. George C. Haddock, who was assassinated on August 3 for his prominence in temperance reform.

Distress in Blaenavon.—Owing to the bad trade, recent reductions, and more recently the severity of the weather, many families of our poor ironworkers and miners on these hills are in great distress. As we search out the sufferers from day to day we feel unable to grapple with it, and, there being no persons of means, we are compelled to appeal to the kind sympathy and aid of the Lord's people. All kinds of left-off clothing (especially for the children), bedding, &c., will be gratefully welcomed, and Gospel tracts and books.

Duke-st., Blaenavon, Mon. Pastor O. Tidman.

THE THEATRICAL MISSION.

Commenced 1873.

SPECIAL APPEAL.

THE Presidents and Council (named below) desire to call the earnest and immediate attention of a wider circle of the Christian Public than has hitherto been interested in the Theatrical Mission, to the successful efforts which, by the blessing of God, have been made, especially during the past 10 years, to reach the Employés, Male and Female, of all ages, at the various places of Entertainment throughout the United Kingdom.

Ever since October, 1880, the doors of their Institute have been open daily to Actresses, Chorus Singers, Ballet Dancers, "the Children of the Stage," and "Pantomime Waifs." In Macready House, here represented, there are Three Large Assembly Rooms for Youths, Little Children, and Young Women, in which the aggregate weekly attendance is now about 2,000 persons. These gladly avail themselves of the comfortable and homely resort, where they can obtain good food at cost price, are freed from temptation to partake of Intoxicants, and are brought under direct and personal Christian influence.

Employés in Theatres, Music Halls, and Circuses rarely come under the ordinary means of grace, and it is a cause for thankfulness that Mr. and Mrs. COURTHOPE TODD and their coworkers are labouring with such constant tokens of Divine approval. Here is Rescue and Preventive Work carried on amongst those who would be accessible in no other way: and to teach the little ones, who, as the family bread-winners, toil amid such scenes of unreality, about Jesus, is work bearing its own commendation.

This new Institute has been open for fourteen months, and the evangelistic work each day has been furthered by such philanthropic agencies as a Provident Club, Sewing Classes, Medical Mission, Blue Ribbon Band, &c., &c., necessitating heavy expenditure for the constant Relief of the Sick, the Poor, and Distressed in the Theatrical Profession; many of whom, being non-church-goers, are in "no one's Parish," and do not receive Clerical aid. The Building cost £4,500, a reasonable amount when its size is remembered, for about 300 can be seated on each Floor, if occasion so require. Of this Purchase Money £3,000 yet remains to be raised, and if each Reader of this Special Appeal would give something, the Council and Director would soon be freed from financial anxiety, which often cripples the spiritual work. In answer to prayer, over £150 was received lately in a few days, and it is felt, if the Lord's Stewards only knew and understood this unique and soul-saving work, needful and liberal contributions would be quickly obtained. In the Fiftieth Year of our Queen's Reign, which is the Decade of Mr. Courthope Todd's work, the Presidents and Council earnestly call upon Christians of all Denominations to "come to the help of the Lord against the mighty." The smallest Donations—for His sake—as well as the largest Amounts, will be alike gratefully acknowledged by the DIRECTOR,

COURTHOPE TODD,
Macready House,
Henrietta Street,
Covent Garden

THE BENEVOLENT OR STRANGERS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

Treasurer, Ald. Sir R. N. Fowler, Bart., M.P.
J. H. Anderson, Esq., Chairman.
Clarence Smith, Esq., J.P., Hon. Secretary.

For 101 years this Institution has visited and relieved the destitute sick, by an entirely unpaid agency, consisting of over 240 Christian men and women.

Funds are urgently needed.

The Committee will be thankful for the Society being remembered in the testamentary arrangements of the benevolent.—Office of the Society, 52, Finsbury-pavement, E.C.

REV. J. W. ATKINSON, 308, Old Ford-road, London, E., urgently appeals for Help to meet the present distress of East London. Hundreds of families on the point of starvation. Gifts of money, food, fuel, or clothing will be promptly acknowledged.

THE COMMITTEE of the Ladies' Samaritan Society, National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic, Queen's-square, Bloomsbury, earnestly plead for help in aid of the poorer patients and their families. Gifts in money, warm clothing, coal, or bread tickets, will be thankfully acknowledged by the Committee.

DOCK LABOURERS' MISSION, 32, Chamber-street, E.—On Wednesday last at our free tea, we were unable to hold our usual Gospel service after tea, in consequence of a crowd of starving labourers gathered round the door. When the hall was packed, arrangements were then made to feed the crowd, and the Mission Hall was emptied and filled three times during the evening. Will God's children remember the labourer of love in their prayers.—E. H. COLEMAN.

CHILDREN OF GOD, you are blessed in the Seed of Abraham. Hundreds of the sons of Abraham at this present cold weather are starving, and have nowhere to pass the night. We have helped them as long as we could, but we are exhausted. Do come and help us. The Gospel is preached to them three times in the week, in the Hall, 394, Hackney-road, London, E., Tuesday, Friday, and Sunday, at 7 p.m. Come and see. Yours in Christ, D. C. JOSEPH.

THE
A COLLECTION OF
New Part Songs, Choruses, and Anthems,
Written and Arranged expressly for Male Voices
BY JAMES McGRANAHAN.

Tinted Covers, 1s. 6d.; Cloth Limp, 2s.; Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

The GOSPEL MALE CHOIR was, during the last five months of the London Mission, a special feature of the meetings of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. There are, doubtless, many more who would wish to dedicate their voices to the service of the Master; and with the present volume (which is arranged for 1st and 2nd Tenor and 1st and 2nd Bass) in their hands, and the hearty co-operation of a few brethren like-minded, this wish can be easily gratified.

Says Mr. McGranahan:—"Organize a quartet, a double quartet, or better still, a chorus of male voices; and prove the power for good in the harmony of male voices when consecrated to the glory and service of our divine Master."

"In both Notations. Is specially prepared for Male Voices only. We can testify from personal hearing that these choruses are well harmonized and excellently adapted for the rich effect of men's concerted voices."
Literary World.

"An excellent combination of some of our best Christian hymns; with suitable music, and vocal and instrumental arrangements. Seems to us a surpassingly good collection of Hymns and Tunes, in beautiful type and binding."—Irish Baptist Magazine.

"The Gospel Male Chorus Book indicates a new departure; and one which has proved largely successful. The music in this book is arranged for Male Voices alone. It is too often supposed that there can be no good singing without female voices. This is a mistake. It is possible to have very effective singing with a choir composed only of Male Voices."
New Zealand Christian Record.

"We may say first of the songs—they are full of the Gospel; and of the musical compositions—they are many of them very taking. The idea of A Male Choir is to some extent a novelty, and will commend itself to many circles."—Baptist Messenger.

"We are sure the publishers are rendering a good service to the cause of Christ by the issue, in so remarkably cheap a form, of this book."—King's Highway.

"Mr. Sankey has taught all the churches how much may be done for Christ by the consecration of the voice to His service. Strange that we should have been so long in laying this to heart! The Male Chorus Book is intended for Male Voices. Why should not Christian young men offer themselves willingly for this service? Why should there not be an earnest attempt in all our churches to make the public services more attractive by the singing of these and similar Pieces?"
Irish Congregational Magazine.

"Mr. McGranahan believes largely in the power for good in the harmony of Male Voices when consecrated to the service of our Lord and Master; and he has issued this volume of bright and living sacred song, as a means alike of illustrating and giving effect to this impression. Far more, we are sure, could be done in this way than has yet been done: Christian men have not recognized, in anything like due measure, the noble gift of song which God has bestowed upon them for His service. We wish that this book may have good success."
British Messenger.

"We doubt not that a cordial welcome will be given to the volume of Christian song issued by Messrs. Morgan & Scott, and entitled, 'The Gospel Male Chorus Book.'"—The Rock.

"The hymns are many of them beautiful in the words, as well as in the music."—Friends' Quarterly Examiner.

London: MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster Buildings; and may be ordered of any Bookseller.

CONTENTS.

All the Way Home the Good Word will Lead You.
As we Gather at the Harvest Home.
Beloved, now are we the Sons of God.
Come, O my Soul, with Singing!
Come to the Life-Giving Fountain!
Come unto Me!
Following Jesus.
Hearts are Sad and Weary.
I am the Way.
I could not do without Him.
I have Nothing to do with To-morrow.
I Hear a Voice at Dawn of Day.
If we Grow Weary in the Way.
In Thee I trust; on Thee I rest.
Let the Dear Saviour come in!
Let us Work for Jesus.
Like Stars that Fade Away.
Like the Bird with Weary Wing.
Like Wandering Sheep, We Roamed Afar.
Oh that I had Wings!
On Joyful Wings our Spirits Rise.
Only just to-day, dear Pilgrim.
Oppressed with Noonday's Scorching Heat.
Our Fatherland.
Our Hearts are Filled with Joy To-day.
Our Hearts are Thrilled with Joy to-day.
Praise, oh Praise Jehovah!
Rest in Heaven.
Sons of God, Beloved in Jesus.
The Saviour is Waiting at each Sinner's Heart.
The Shadow of the Cross.
Thou art Home at Last!
Waiting to be Gracious.
We have Come in all our Sadness.
We've Sighted the Golden Gate.
When Life's Springtime has Faded.
When we get Home.
Why will You do Without Him?

"The various Male Choirs and others who have adopted the Gospel Male Chorus Book will no doubt be glad to welcome these Additional Pieces, many of which are entirely new. "James McGranahan."

HEART DISEASE.

Weakness of the heart in various forms is met with in a great number of people, and many, if not most, hold the belief that it is beyond remedy. Heart affections are only incurable when actual organic disease exists, but in the greater number of instances this is absent; the affection supposed to be incurable being little more than a weakness, resulting from general constitutional debility.

When constitutional debility is spoken of, it is implied that the various organs are in some way hindered from performing their functions in the quiet methodical manner so characteristic of health. When this is the case, the heart, the most important functionary of all, is one of the organs most readily affected, although, perhaps, the appreciable evil effects are not so quickly manifested or realised as those in other organs; nevertheless, the weakness induced remains unremedied, although other organs are apparently restored to full vigour.

Palpitation or throbbing, especially after meals, and upon the least exertion, also imperfect circulation resulting in cold hands and feet, with heated head and face, or vice versâ, are prevalent forms of heart weakness, and as the result of debility and not actual disease, there is a substantial prospect of restoration, or at least very great alleviation, following the application of a remedy which has the power to brace up the constitution as a whole.

That for this purpose Magnetism is superior to medicinal remedies is a fact confirmed by a widely extended experience; and any who have need of help in this direction, or who wish to know the success that has attended our efforts in treating this phase of suffering, should read our report, which may be had post-free on application.

The following is an interesting case:—

Mr. W. T. MARK,
76, Partridge Road, Roath, Cardiff.

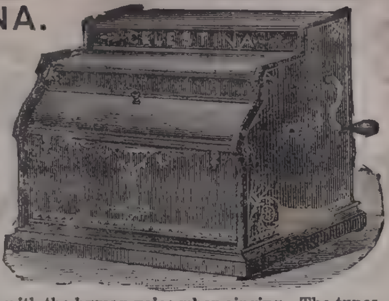
December 20, 1883.—"I have now been under your treatment seven months for functional derangement and palpitation of the heart, especially after meals, and violent throbbing by night. I am very thankful to say that it has had the desired effect in regulating the heart's action. The good work has been going on slowly but surely, so that now, while I am writing, I hardly know I have a heart, the action is so normal. The nocturnal throbbing is vanishing almost like darkness before the day-dawn.

"Supposed incurable heart disease is so prevalent that I think sufferers should know that there is a 'balm in Gilead,' and I am glad to give my name with this statement of experience, and the more so because it has been in no way solicited."

May 26, 1885:—"Your wonderful treatment did me a world of good, I can assure you. I only get that heart-throbbing under very exciting circumstances. I discontinued the use of the appliances long ago, perhaps sooner than I ought to have done, but I wanted to present them to a suffering friend."

Mr. Garratt will always be happy to reply to inquiries from sufferers, or to explain the principles of his treatment to any scientific or medical gentleman, and to confer with them upon any case where his advice may be sought. Consultations, whether personally or by letter, are free.—Mr. B. Copson Garratt, Medical

A REAL MUSICAL TREASURE.
THE CELESTINA.



Very suitable for Mission Halls, or Small Churches, or for Musical Drill.

This Charming Instrument performs every description of Music for Psalm, Song, March, or Dance, rivalling the most skilled musician. It plays thousands of tunes—there is no limit to the number.

It requires no knowledge of music on the part of the player, but can be played by anyone, even a child. The tone is rich, round, mellow, and very pleasing, blending beautifully with the human voice when singing. The tunes can be repeated as often as required; and the music is very cheap.

The Celestina is adapted to enliven the Home, and will be found extremely useful in conducting religious services, or for instructing Psalmody classes.

PRICE, packed in strong deal box, including One Roll of Tunes, £6 6s. 0d.
May be had on Easy Terms, or Discount for Cash. Smaller Instruments from £1 1s. 0d.

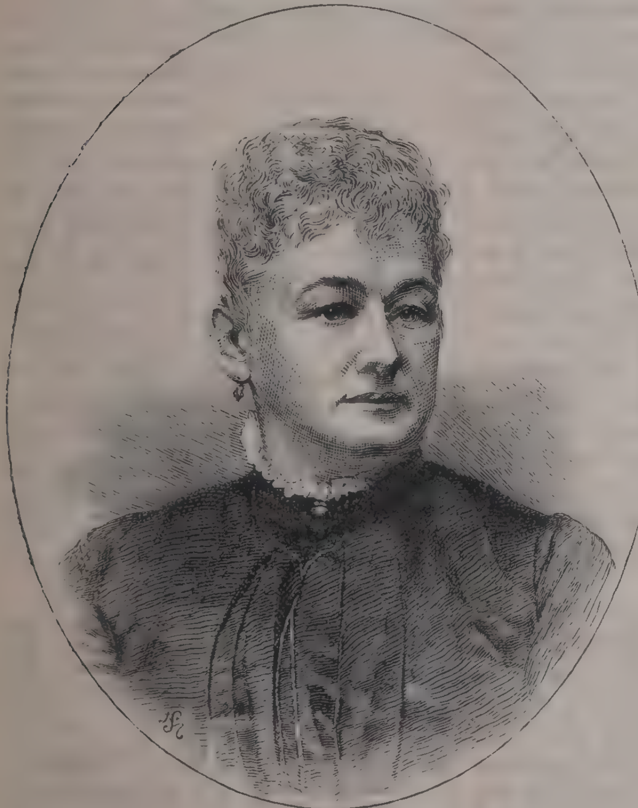
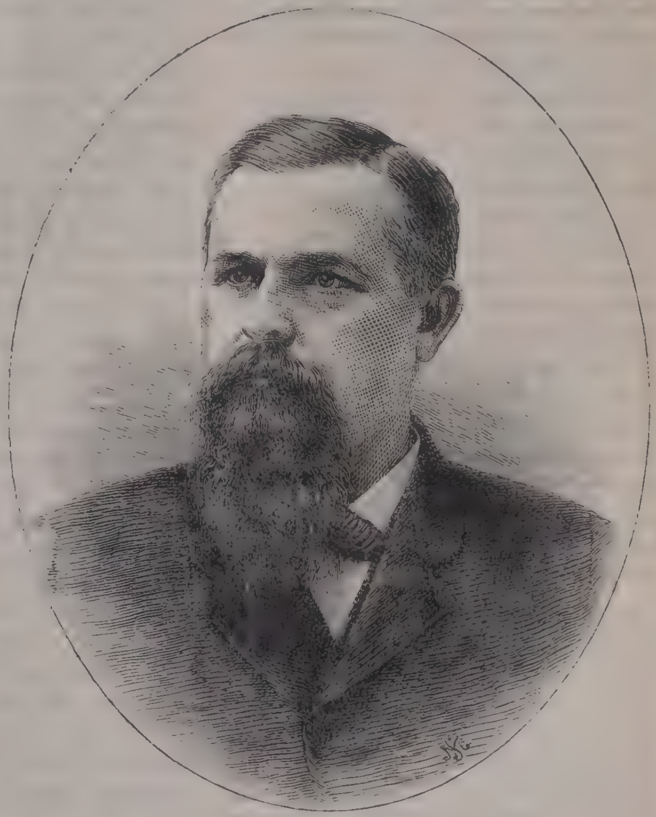
MR. AND MRS. JAMES McGRANAHAN.

NEXT to Mr. Sankey, this estimable couple are the most widely known exponents, in this country, of "the Gospel in song." Among the many American friends who have visited us in recent years, and engaged in evangelistic work, none are more highly and universally beloved, both for their personal qualities and for their Christian devotion, than the two whose portraits appear on this page. Though later in the field than some of his fellow-evangelists, Mr. McGranahan is no imitator of his predecessors. He has exercised his special and peculiar gifts; and in the department of original composition has earned a very high place among the Christian musicians of his generation.





It is much too late in the day to enter on a defence of "singing the Gospel." No doubt there is Gospel singing and Gospel singing; and unless the singer is fully imbued with the true evangelistic spirit, and has consecrated his talent to the glory of his Master, there is a subtle danger attached to its exercise. The field that our American brethren have done so much to open up, in the direction of preaching through song, is so wide that it is a wonder it has not been more extensively occupied. If God would thoroughly convert or consecrate to this service some of our famous singers of both sexes, how much they might do as proclaimers of the everlasting Gospel. The following remarks by a recent writer in an American contemporary will, we believe, heartily commend themselves to our readers:—

> God send us singing preachers, like James McGranahan, whom we believe to be as much a minister of Jesus Christ as any clergyman, and whose simple-hearted preaching, we believe, has touched more hearts with a sense of Divine love than many sermons of vast ingenuity and learning. And we do not make this assertion in any disparagement of preaching, for that is God's chosen agency; but we simply enlarge the mission of the preacher, and say, if you can't reach your people by talking about the Gospel, try singing it. The only difference is in rhyme and tune, and what does that signify? If Paul were to preach to-day, he would take a Gospel singer with him, beyond the possibility of a doubt.

The State of Pennsylvania has been singularly favoured in producing sweet singers. Besides Mr. McGranahan it claims among its honoured sons, Mr. Sankey, the late Mr. P. P. Bliss, and, we believe, Mr. D. B. Towner. Mr. McGranahan began his active musical career as an alto singer, and player on the bass viol, in that American institution, the "Singing School." At the age of nineteen he was already a teacher of the science of music. In order better to qualify himself for his chosen profession, he managed to attend the Normal School, at Geneseo, N.Y., during the sessions of 1861 and 1862. It was there that he met Miss Addie Vickery, of Oswego, who afterwards became his wife. She has been to him a true helpmate in life's pilgrimage; giving him also most valued assistance in his musical functions during fourteen years of institute and convention work, and in his Gospel labours of more recent times. It was the great Ashtabula calamity, in December, 1876, which suddenly cut short the promising career of Mr. and Mrs. P. P. Bliss, that brought Mr. McGranahan and his wife into direct evangelistic effort. It came about in a somewhat remarkable way, showing clearly the hand of God, who, it has often been remarked, "takes away his workers, but carries on his work." Mr. Bliss and Mr. McGranahan had been fast friends; and the former had often tried to convince his gifted brother that he ought to be singing the Gospel instead of teaching music. On one occasion, when walking together, they passed a meadow where the mowers were busy at work. Mr. Bliss said to his companion, "Mac, you are just like a man who stands all his time sharpening his scythe. Now, leave the teaching to others; swing in your scythe, and see the grass fall before you." Mr. McGranahan, however, was immovable. He had a strong conviction that no one should enter the Gospel field without preparation of a more specific kind than he had had, nor without a clear call from the Lord of the harvest. This call came to him sooner than he had anticipated, and with a sanction that he could not withstand.

The sad news of Mr. Bliss's fate reached Mr. McGranahan when returning from a musical convention at Delaware, Ohio, and he at once proceeded to the scene of the disaster at Ashtabula. On the same sorrowful errand came Major Whittle, who had been evangelizing with Mr. Bliss; and there the two friends of the deceased became personally acquainted for the first time. As to this critical juncture in Mr. McGranahan's life we may reproduce a few sentences that appeared in our columns in November, 1880, in a report of some reminiscences of Mr. Bliss given by the Major at Glasgow:—

> A week before Mr. Bliss left me he was writing at the table one day, and he read to me a letter he had written. He said it was to a man he very much wanted to see in Gospel work; he could write music and sing, and he wanted him to sing for the Lord. He asked me if I knew any evangelist who would go with his friend McGranahan. I said I did not know of anybody; but if he would consecrate himself to God some one would be raised up to accompany him. At Ashtabula a man came up to me and said, "Mr. Bliss was one of my dearest friends; my name is McGranahan." There stood before me the very man whom Mr. Bliss had chosen. We went to Chicago; and there it pleased God to give my brother a great blessing in his own soul. Among Mr. Bliss's papers that came by luggage train there were many manuscripts, and amongst others the words of the song, "My Redeemer." Mr. McGranahan prayed that he might be able to wed it to music. One day while sitting in my room I heard singing; and I went to listen. Then I heard for the first time the song that may be said to be Mr. Bliss's dying testimony of what Christ was to him.

It was when still engaged in arranging Mr. Bliss's manuscripts, some months after his lamented death, that Mr. McGranahan finally resolved to relinquish a purely musical career and take up the serious business of singing the Gospel. While he continued to halt between two opinions, Major Whittle suggested one day that they should together pray to God for definite guidance about the matter. He readily agreed. Both prayed; and when they rose from their knees, to Mr. McGranahan's surprise, the burden of doubt that had been pressing upon him was gone. A chain of events in connection with his former occupation came as an equal surprise, and confirmed him in the decision to step out on the new path. One by one, letters came from various points where musical engagements had been made, asking, for some reason or another, that these should be deferred; until every such engagement had been indefinitely postponed. All the seeming hindrances were removed; and the hand of God clearly pointed out the way. Attendance at some meetings then going on in Chicago brought to the mind both of himself and his wife a more vivid realisation of the truths of the Gospel. Thus equipped and manifestly called, they entered into that happy partnership of Christian service with Major Whittle, which has since been continued to this day; and which, we trust, may be prolonged for many and many a year to come.

Messrs. Whittle and McGranahan first visited this country in the summer of 1880. They held meetings in different parts of London, and afterwards spent some time in Perth, Glasgow, Edinburgh, Aberdeen, Dundee, Belfast, &c. In all the places where they laboured God gave them much favour with the people; and many were the seals gained to their earnest ministry, both by speech and by song. Their second visit to Ireland and England in 1883-4 will be fresh in the recollection of many readers. The best proof that their labours were acceptable is to be found in the fact that wherever they have been their presence is again earnestly longed for. They have received pressing invitations to return to Great Britain, and specially to Ireland. We believe it is solely due to the disturbed political and social state of the sister isle that these invitations have not ere now been accepted. Early last year, Mr. McGranahan was for some time laid aside through an attack of throat complaint, but a sojourn in the south-west, under the loving care of his wife, brought complete restoration. The latest reports state that he and Major Whittle are busily evangelising in different parts of his native state of Pennsylvania.

As a singer, Mr. McGranahan is distinguished by an earnest, winning simplicity, coupled with artistic accuracy; though the deeper element of pathos is by no means wanting. His forte, as we have said, is strong, vigorous composition. His book, Songs of the Gospel, published during his first visit to England, contains, perhaps, more real gems of sacred song than any collection of similar size. There is a rhythmic swing about many of the melodies that makes them especially suited for popular audiences. Such songs as "My Redeemer," "I shall be satisfied," "The Crowning Day is coming," "Behold, what manner of love," and others equally good, will undoubtedly take a permanent place in the evangelistic hymnology of the churches. It is an open secret that the words of many of his best-known songs have been written by Major Whittle, under the nom de plume of "El Nathan." Among Mr. McGranahan's more elaborate pieces it would be difficult to surpass, for grandeur of treatment and cumulative effect, the anthem, "I am the Resurrection and the Life." Latterly he has given much attention to the composition of pieces in which the unadorned words of Scripture are wedded to striking airs and harmonies. A number of these are to be found in The Christian Choir; and they have greatly helped consecrated Christian singers in conveying vital truths at once to the ears and hearts of the multitude.

In fostering the growth of the "Male Choir," and furnishing many pieces arranged for their special use, Mr. McGranahan has also done splendid service to the cause of the Gospel. Perhaps no one song is more sung in Mr. Moody's meetings, where a male choir assists, than that which proclaims to the anxious soul, "By grace are ye saved through faith;" it contains the Gospel message in a nutshell. This being a time of great missionary interest, we have given on another page a hymn and tune by Mr. McGranahan, dedicated to the party of missionaries that left for China about two years ago.

SAVED FROM SUICIDE.

ONE day, in October, 1886 (writes a correspondent), whilst feeling depressed by the apparent fruitlessness of efforts made to win souls, I received a letter, of which the following is an extract. You may imagine the warmth of praise it kindled in my heart, and of thankfulness to the loving Father who showed me his marvellous works so directly. The incident happened two or three years ago, and the writer's letters, of which many have been since received by me, show that, whilst God had snatched him from the jaws of death, He had also healed his soul. The man is a most joyous and consistent Christian, although in very depressed circumstances. At the time he wrote he was crippled by agonising rheumatic fever, through which he had lost his living, and had a mother, sister, and two little boys depending upon him:—

> EXTRACT.
> ...What I never told you before, I will now honestly tell you. The very first time you came to our house and saw me I was very sick and in great agony, and very much depressed in spirits, and would not believe that God would save me. So I thought over this all day, and towards eve I made up my mind to kill myself. So I wrote a letter to my mother, saying that I could not bear up the pain and long-suffering, and placed the letter under my pillow. Some laudanum I had I secured about me, and fully made up my mind to drink this when all retired to bed.
> But God would not permit it. He sent you that very day, and an hour after I had made all preparations. As soon as I saw and heard you, I felt a hope rise in my breast, and when you knelt and prayed for me, I felt the words go deep into my heart, and from that day I am a changed man. After your departure I tore up the letter, threw the laudanum out of the window, and prayed fervently, and read my Bible, and I found a great relief. You have been the blessed means of preventing me putting an end to myself. God bless and prosper you!

BRIXTON.—The eight days' mission conducted by Rev. Hugh Price Hughes has been attended by most encouraging results.

FUTURE OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

How to arouse the Church of Christ to a deeper sense of her responsibility in obeying her Lord's parting words, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature," was the subject considered on the evening of the 19th inst., at a meeting of the Secretaries of all the Evangelical Foreign Missionary Societies in London; and the following notes, expressing the mind of those present, are given by one of their number:—

There is a strong impression that the tide of missionary interest and effort, which has been rising continuously since the beginning of this century, is destined to reach a much higher level, and that great blessings for the world are in store in the immediate future if the Church is aroused to consecrate herself for the work. Even now there are great openings abroad, and great searchings of heart at home.

It is most important that the bulk of our people should be trained out of the idea that missions to the heathen are only an ornamental addition to the Church, instead of being an integral part of its work, and essential to its vitality. We are on the wrong line, when we provide bountifully and even luxuriously for ourselves, and then give of our leavings for Foreign Mission work. The Scriptural view is to give of our firstfruits for the Lord's service, putting the claims of Christ before everything else. The Church is destroyed by selfishness.

The minister of the congregation is in a position of immense influence for developing this missionary spirit. Not in having to raise money—this he should be spared—but in having his own soul inflamed with love to the Master, and with a yearning desire to do his will in this matter. By acquiring familiarity with missionary intelligence, not confining his knowledge to that of his own denomination, and then endeavouring by every means in his power to imbue his people and their children with the missionary spirit, as being absolutely essential to the vigorous life of his congregation, he will find a rich blessing to his own soul in the efforts thus put forth. Facts are the fuel to feed missionary zeal. Periodical information imparted in an interesting way: earnest, pointed prayer, instead of the routine sentence or two in the weekly intercessory prayer, with the one aim to obey Christ's command, and to be in sympathy with Him in compassion for the multitudes: these cannot fail to tell on the people. Hearts will thus be made to glow, prayer to ascend, free-will offerings to be made, and systematic giving to be practised as a spiritual privilege, while every other relative duty at home will be the more thoroughly done.

It is sometimes said that missionary meetings are not so popular as they used to be. This, however, is not due to declining interest, but to the diffusion of information from many smaller centres instead of, as formerly, from a few important centres. They have been tried in church on Sunday evenings with marked success. The plan of simultaneous meetings throughout the Church, as initiated with success by the Church Missionary Society, is worthy of adoption.

It is thought by some that we frighten our people with the idea that while they are doing their best, they are yet required to look forward to indefinite extension in foreign lands. But if we consider that it is the Lord's work, and He has the ways and means in his own hands, such fears are at once dissipated. For instance, extension by native agency is yet only in its infancy.

Let us believe in the Holy Ghost, and in a present Saviour, who has said, "Lo, I am with you alway;" and then let us act upon his word, "Call unto Me, and I will answer thee, and shew thee great and mighty things, which thou knowest not" (Jer. xxxiii. 3).

BUNYAN'S FIRST AWAKENING.

By Rev. ALEX. WHYTE, D.D., Edinburgh.*

Laud hated the Puritans with all the intensity of his cold and narrow heart, and sought to root them out of the land. Of all the expedients he attempted to accomplish his end, the most astute was the demoralising of the Sabbath Day from the parish pulpit. He got a Royal edict issued, enjoining every clergyman, on peril of losing his benefice, to send his people from the altar to sports on the green from which we should shrink on a week day. We can imagine what a shock this was to Christian people. The Long Parliament, which was composed of Christian gentlemen, and which was on the side of the people and of religion as no succeeding Parliament has been, burned the infamous Book of Sports at the stake.

John Bunyan played noisy games on the green at Elstow on Sabbath afternoons. His parson — historical experts dispute whether this parson was at that time a Presbyterian or an Episcopalian—preached one day a sermon which awakened him to some sense of his guilt. A man may be used to awaken who cannot guide or feed. This preacher could do neither, so Bunyan ultimately went to a conventicle.

Bunyan could not have been ignorant of the claims of the Sabbath, but he did not feel the sanctity and joy of the day. One of the best chapters in one of his wife's books, which he read carefully, treated of the Sabbath Day.

It was a memorable day—if we knew it, we should mark it in the Evangelical Almanac—when he first felt guilt in the conscience. That experience was the first pangs of the new birth, the first step in effectual calling. He staggered home from church miserable; but before dinner was over he shook the sermon completely out of his mind, and went out to the green, to think his own thoughts and do his own pleasure on the Lord's Day.

Learn from this sad fact two lessons:—

(1) Dr. John Newman, who was never a Puritan, and is still further from being a Scotch Sabbatarian, says: "Satan's first step in ruining a soul is to make him desecrate the Sabbath." The last man hanged in Edinburgh declared, before going to the scaffold, that he began his downward career by breaking the Sabbath. There is no surer sign of the fall of a nation, or of an individual, than openly desecrating the Lord's Day. History and experience amply corroborate this truth. Reverence for the Sabbath is one of the foundations on which is laid the corner-stone of civilised and sanctified society. Old Dr. Johnson kept up his friendship with God by spending the Sabbath in repairing the breaches of the week. We would do well if we followed his example. He made the following resolutions:—(1) To rise early on Sabbath, and so go early to bed on Saturday; (2) To use extraordinary devotions on Sabbath morning; (3) To examine last week on Sabbath morning; and (4) To read a good book, go twice to church, and wear off worldly stains by spiritual meditation. Such a man was fit to be Archbishop of Canterbury!

(2) Call to mind the first word which created a sense of guilt in your bosom. Paul felt guilty when he wakened to know that his heart was a cage of unclean desires. We owe Paul and his Epistles, humanly speaking, to the Tenth Commandment—"Thou shalt not covet;" we owe Bunyan, "The Pilgrim's Progress," and "Grace Abounding," to the Fourth Commandment. Which commandment first brought guilt into your conscience? Augustine was slain by the seventh, and was kept a dead man all his days. Are you slain? Some of you, who have broken a mother's heart are convicted by the fifth; some of you who have betrayed a woman's trusting love and sent her to lie under a grassy mound, find the sixth sitting on your door-steps, and howling like a blood-hound on your track.

Be not too much cast down, my alarmed hearers; before supper is over to-night, you will have shaken the prayer-meeting and the thought of the dead out of your mind. Think how many sermons were drowned in Edinburgh last Sabbath afternoon! Think how many who were sore in church were quite well next morning!

Jeroboam was a shrewd king. He said (see 1 Kings xiii. 7) to the angry prophet, "Come home and dine with me." If he had gone, he would have been made a royal chaplain, and would never have hurt any man's conscience. Our congregations will not care one straw what we say in the pulpit, if we go home and dine with them. Augustine wrote: "Love your people, and say what you like to them." Another canon is: "Love their table, and help them to shake off the sermon." A good dinner repeated often enough will emasculate a preacher, and make him as glib-tongued and toothless a minister as ever flattered a congregation to destruction.

Divinity student! when you are ordained, make up your mind never to dine with a member of your congregation after the sermon. If you must, go in the strength of the Spirit you sought in the morning to face your people. Read 1 Kings xiii.

"WILLARD TRACT REPOSITORY."—We understand that Dr. Cullis, of Boston, has appointed Messrs. Marshall Bros., 3, Amen-corner, Paternoster-row, the agents in England for the sale of all the "Willard" publications.

EAST LONDON SEWING-CLASS FUND.—The sewing classes originated by the late Lady Hobart, and which are now carried on under the guidance of her daughter (Lady Albinia Hobart-Hampden), the Marchioness of Ripon, Hon. Elizabeth Waldegrave, and Miss Butler, have been a comfort, Mr. George Holland states, to hundreds of poor women at the East End. The classes are open on three afternoons in the week, and the women receive 6d. for the three hours' work each day. Very grateful are they for this help, for which often their family at home is waiting that they may have a little bread and firing; and for the warmth of the comfortable room in which they work. But more than this is the Christian sympathy they here receive; and the sweet words of the Gospel of Christ spoken every afternoon minister consolation and inspire trust in many a sad heart. Much delightful fruit has resulted from these meetings, and many have thus been brought to the habit of regular attendance at the Mission-hall service on Sunday evening. The number of classes that can be opened depends, of course, upon the amount of subscriptions received, and it is well, therefore, to state that every £15 provides for a class of fifty women for a month. Lady Albinia Hobart-Hampden's address is 1, Carlton-gardens, S.W.

THE STORY OF JACOB RE-TOLD.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

XIII.—GLIMPSES OF THE ISRAEL-NATURE.

Genesis XLVII.

As a brook runs it clears itself. It was so with Jacob's life. The discipline of life, like a refining fire, did not fail in its purpose. The dross of his nature was at last well-nigh worked out, and the nobler Israel-nature became more and more apparent. This change is marked by the change in the name by which he is designated on the inspired page. The old term, Jacob, is used but sparingly, and for the most part Israel is the title of his nobility.

Before we can study the traces of his increasing princeliness of character, we should do well to notice that the name Jacob, though used sparingly, is not wholly dropped. We can never forget what we were. We can never forget what we might be, were it not for the restraining grace of God. I cannot agree with those who think that the Jacob-nature may be expunged, wiped out from our being. In my judgment, both Scripture and experience are dead against them. The flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and will lust, though with ever-decreasing force, unto the end. But it is my joyful belief, also, that the Spirit lusteth against the flesh, and represses it with such growing power that it is reduced to the last extremity, and we are kept from doing the things that we otherwise would. Indeed, the self-life can scarcely be said to live, since it makes but the faintest response to temptation. If only we walk in the Spirit, and live in the Spirit, and are led by the Spirit, we shall not fulfil the lusts of the flesh, we shall hardly be aware of their presence in our being, we shall be as good as dead to them; but, in the moment that we cease to abide in living union with the Blessed Spirit, we shall find that the old nature will revive again, in horrid resurrection, and will sweep us down to a sin like that which blackened and saddened all David's later years.

Germs of disease may be constantly breeding in an infected house; but, so long as the disinfecting fluid is well sprinkled on the floors and pendent sheets, they are killed off as soon as they are formed. So sin, though present in the heart, may be choked off, so as to be almost unperceived, because the Holy Ghost is ever at work acting as a disinfectant; but, so soon as his grace is withdrawn, sin regains its old deadly sway, and breathes forth its pestilential poison. It is of the utmost importance, then, to keep in with the Holy Ghost.

One more illustration, though some may deem it far fetched, will clench and illustrate my meaning. A mesmerist may weave a spell, by passing hands, over a man of weaker mind, so as to cast him into all the appearances of death. But he is not dead, and, when the charm is broken, the processes of life resume their course. So, beneath the spell of the grace of God's Holy Spirit, our evil self-life may lie as dead, only giving faint signs of life, and yet, if that spell be broken, it will spring up with robust and deadly vigour. It becomes us then to watch and pray, lest we enter into temptation.

There is a beautiful experiment, which the readers of these lines may try for themselves, and which will give them a vivid idea of how the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus can make them free from the law of sin and death. If you take a heavy book and hold it at arm's length, the pull of the law of gravitation will soon draw it downwards; but if some friend will pour down that arm a constant stream of electricity, the flow of the electric current will set you free from the effect of the downward pull. It will still be there, though you will have become almost unconscious of it. Thus it will be when we are filled by the Spirit of God; the downward tendency may be in us yet, but it will be more than counteracted by the habit of that new life, in which the power of the living Saviour is ever at work, through the grace of the Holy Ghost.

In the earlier stages of the Christian life the habit of abiding ever in communion with the Spirit of God is difficult to form and maintain. Some seem to acquire it more habitually and unbrokenly than others. Where this is the case, the Jacob-nature begins to disappear with a suddenness, that reminds us of a rapid thaw, which, in a single night, may rid the streets of tons of snow. In the case of those who learn the sweet lesson of unbroken fellowship more slowly, the Jacob-nature keeps breaking in upon the Israel-life, as the underlying rock-strata will break up through the green sward of a highland valley. Yet as the years pass on, and the habit of fellowship becomes a permanent possession, these irruptions become less and less frequent, so that at last the Israel-nature has the almost undisputed sway in the life.

We have to notice some manifestations of this Israel-nature in Jacob, like the out-shinings of the sun, which, in the early morning, has fought with heavy mists for his supremacy, but at last shines out in a cloudless sky, and sets in radiant glory.

For more than thirty years Jacob mourned for Joseph as dead. The monotony of those years was only broken by new misfortunes, which came upon each other's heels, as the messengers of calamity to Job. We only catch some few sobs from that stricken heart, like the cries of the Crucified from amid the dense gloom of the cross. On first seeing the bloodstained coat, "I will go down into the grave mourning;" on learning the first tidings about the rough governor, the lord of the land, "Me have ye bereaved of my children;" on the appeal of his sons to spare Benjamin, "My son shall not go down with you, lest ye bring down my grey hairs with sorrow to the grave;" on their renewed appeal, "Wherefore dealt ye so ill with me as to tell the man ye had a brother?" on giving his final consent, in addition to his direction that they should take some few delicacies from their almost emptied stores, he said sadly and almost despairingly, "God Almighty give you mercy before the man, that he may send away your other brother, and Benjamin. If I be bereaved of my children, I am bereaved."

But the night of weeping was followed by the morning of joy. Joy looked in at the old man's window, and sorrow and sighing fled away. What a confusion of emotion must have filled his heart when the completed band of his sons stood once again before him with such amazing tidings. Benjamin was there and Simeon. Love had welded them together in the furnace of sorrow, like a twelve-linked chain, no link of which would ever again be missing. The God of their fathers had met with them, and henceforward would supply their needs so fully, that they could have no further lack, though the famine should last thrice seven years. And, above all, Joseph was yet alive, and he was governor over all the land of Egypt. What wonder that the aged heart stood still, and its machinery almost threatened to break down, beneath the pressure of sudden rapture. At first he could not believe it all. But the sight of the waggons convinced him. Then there came forth a gleam of the royal spirit of faith—the spirit of Jacob revived, and Israel said, "It is enough; Joseph my son is yet alive, I will go and see him before I die."

Before he left Canaan, he had one final interview with his Almighty Friend. It happened at Beer-sheba, the last halting-place amid the green pasture lands of the Land of Promise, and before they struck into the sand-waste that lay between them and Egypt. Everything there reminded him of his own early life which was spent there. He could find the ruins of his father's altar, and the well which his father had sunk, and "he offered sacrifices unto the God of his father Isaac." At that time his mind was engaged in eager debate as to the path of duty. On the one hand love to Joseph and his necessities drew him to Egypt; on the other, the memory of how much evil had befallen his ancestors whenever they went down to Egypt made him eagerly question whether he was justified in going. It was at that time that God made his path clear, by saying, "Fear not to go down into Egypt; for I will there make of thee a great nation: I will go down with thee into Egypt; and Joseph shall put his hand upon thine eyes." How comfortably our God speaks to us when we are sore perplexed. If we will only wait, we shall hear a voice behind us saying, "This is the way, walk ye in it." But, since the voice speaks from behind, we must not run on too far or fast in front.

(1) There is a glimpse of the Israel-nature in his meeting with Joseph. How feverishly the old man anticipated it, and when, on the confines of Egypt, he learnt that the second chariot in the land was bringing his long-lost son to his embrace, he roused himself to meet him, not as the Jacob of olden days, but as Israel the Prince. "And Israel said unto Joseph, now let me die, since I have seen thy face, because thou art yet alive."

(2) There is yet another glimpse of the Israel-nature in his blessing of Pharaoh. Joseph might almost have been ashamed of his aged father, and left him in the background. He was old, and decrepit, and lame. He had spent all his life in tents and sheep-farms, and was totally ignorant of the manners of a court. He was an exile, an emigrant, a man who had failed. His very presence there was due to his ruinous losses. What a contrast between him and the glorious Pharaoh, whose court teemed with science and wit, with soldiers and priests, with wealth and splendour. And yet, when he stood before Pharaoh, there was so much moral grandeur about him that the greatest monarch in the world bent eagerly beneath his blessing. "How old art thou?" was the kind inquiry of the mighty monarch, to commemorate whom a massive pyramid, destined to outlast his race, was in course of erection. The question was perhaps suggested by his bent form and withered look. The reply was sad enough, and it was the Jacob-nature that uttered it. It seemed like an anticipation of the cry of Ecclesiastes, "Vanity of vanities, all is vanity." It was lit up by no single ray of thankfulness, or faith, or hope: "My life has been a pilgrimage; its days have been few and evil." Few, in comparison with those of Terah, Abraham, and Isaac. Evil, in comparison with that of Esau, who stood at the head of a great kingdom, the progenitor of a line of kings. And yet, with this confession ringing in his ears, Pharaoh was blessed by those outstretched trembling hands, and by that quavering voice. Esau never could have done that.

"Without all contradiction the less is blessed of the better." Jacob must have had something about him that rendered him superior to the greatest monarch of his time. There were two kings in that royal chamber decorated by weird hieroglyphs and long lines of fantastic figures, the one, royal with the adventitious distinction of birth and rank, the other, a way-worn pilgrim, royal with the divine patent of royalty, a noble character. And, as they stood together, it was shown to all the world that the spiritual is greater than the material, and that God can endow a human spirit with such moral splendour as to compel the world's conquerors to confess themselves conquered before its power. You may be crafty, mean, and bargain-loving, yet if you will but yield yourself to God, and submit to his loving discipline, He will make you truly royal, and give you the moral power, which masters all other power beside.

(3) There is yet another glimpse of the Israel-nature in his solemn injunctions to Joseph about his burial. "The time drew nigh that Israel must die: and he called his son Joseph, and said unto him… (xlvii. 29). And Israel bowed himself upon the bed's head." It is the death-scene which shows the true nature of a man; and its darkness set Jacob's better nature in full relief.

He was evidently a man of faith. He knew the ancient promise made by God, of which Abraham may have often spoken to him in his early life, that their seed should inherit Canaan. He was sure, therefore, that his people would not always abide in Egypt, however fertile its Goshens, or friendly its peoples. The trumpet would sound the summons for their departure. If, then, he were buried in Egypt, he would be left behind, a stranger among strangers, and this could not be. He must be where his people were. To him, therefore, burial in the most splendid mausoleum that was ever constructed in that land of silent tombs was not for one moment to be compared with burial in Machpelah's solitary and humble cave, which at that time was a mere outpost in a distant and hostile land. And he desired it, not only because the mortal remains of Abraham and Sarah, of Isaac and Rebekah, and of Leah lay there, but because he foresaw the time when it would be surrounded by the teeming myriads of his children.

He could only see this by faith. He "had not received the promises, but, by faith, he had seen them afar off, and was persuaded of them, and embraced them." It was by faith that he was able to say, "Behold I die: but God shall be with you, and shall bring you again unto the land of your fathers. Bury me not in Egypt…but I will lie with my fathers, and thou shalt carry me out of Egypt, and bury me in their burying-place." Was it not Israel that spake thus? Faith made him royal, as it will ennoble the coarsest and commonest nature, lifting the beggar from the dunghill, and making him sit among princes. And these noble utterances prove how truly God had done his work of ennoblement, and how royal was the spirit of the dying patriarch.

(4) There is yet another glimpse of the Israel-nature in his dealings with Joseph's sons. In the chapter that records that solemn scene it is almost entirely on Israel that our attention is fixed. Israel strengthened himself on his bed. Israel beheld Joseph's sons. Israel stretched out his right hand. Israel said unto Joseph.

The sands of time had nearly run out in that aged and battered body, and when Joseph arrived at his dwelling, the gift of his own munificence, the dying man seems to have been lying in the extreme of physical exhaustion. But the sound of that beloved name rallied him, and, propped by pillows, he sat up upon his bed.

Then, with that wonderful accuracy of memory which is so remarkable in the dying, he reviewed the past. The vision of the wondrous ladder, with its troops of angels; the precious words of promise, which one hundred years could not obliterate from the tablets of memory; the scene on the hilly road to Bethlehem, where he buried Rachel; the successive instances of the guardian care of the angel who had tended him, as a shepherd does his flock, all his life long until that day—all passed before his eye, dim with age, but bright with memory and hope.

Amid this reverie, the old man became aware of the presence of Joseph's two sons, and inquired who they were, and when he knew, he asked that they might be brought near enough for him to give them an old man's blessing. He did this with great affection and solemnity. He kissed and embraced them, and asked that his good angel might bless the lads. He ranked them among his own sons; and was led by prophetic insight to distinguish between them, crossing his hands, and laying his right on the head of the younger, whom Joseph had placed before his left, and his left on the head of the elder, whom the father had placed before his right. When Joseph remonstrated with him, thinking it was a mistake due to his age and blindness, the old man still held to his choice, as one conscious of a prerogative in which not even Joseph must interfere.

This touching interview ended by the gift to Joseph of the parcel of ground which he had wrested from the Amorites in Shechem. It had long ago returned to its original owners, but he saw, down the vista of the future, that there would be a reversion of the whole to him and his, and it was of that future that he spoke in faith.

The whole of this scene is replete with a dignity, born of moral greatness, and worthy of Israel, the Prince.

Time fails to bring out the traits of royalty in the closing scene of all, which must yield us material for our next. It is enough to remind you of them, ere we close. They are evident enough. Twelve strong, bearded men stand around him. He is in the last extreme of physical decrepitude, but he does not cower or shrink before them, as in other days. His face may be shadowed with death, but his eye gleams with the light of prophecy. He calls out their names one by one. He arraigns them at the bar of judgment. He reviews their past. He apportions them their praise or blame. He allots their future. "These are the twelve tribes of Israel, and this is it that their father spake unto them."

We need not go into further particulars, because enough has been said to convince the most careless reader of the royalty that shone forth from this aged man, as the gleaming torch-lights flashed from the breaking pitchers of Gideon's host. And there is enkindled in our hearts the hope that God will do as much for us, through Him who loveth us, and by his death hath made us kings unto God, with whom we shall one day reign on the earth.

GODET ON FIRST CORINTHIANS.*

Those who value Godet's commentaries will rejoice to see another from his pen, now presented to the English reader by Messrs. T. & T. Clark. As yet only the first volume of this translation has been issued, which reaches to the end of the eighth chapter, but it contains much that is extremely interesting, and makes one long for the issue of the second part which will complete the First Epistle.

The very important summary in chap. i. 30 of three aspects in which Christ has been "made unto us wisdom from God" (R.V.) to wit, "righteousness, sanctification, and redemption," is fully endorsed by Godet as right in construction, and the correct interpretation of the passage. "It must be held (he says) that the Apostle's intention was clearly to separate the first substantive (wisdom) from the other three. Christ has become our 'wisdom,' and that inasmuch as He has brought us…'righteousness, sanctification, and redemption.'" The last of these three, "redemption," he rightly explains as referring to the redemption of the body (Rom. viii. 23), "our complete and final deliverance."

In iii. 9, R.V. has changed the "labourers together with God" of A.V. into "God's fellow-workers," leaving it doubtful whether the fellowship in work is with God or with one another. Godet boldly insists on the idea of fellowship with God being the right one. "It is grammatically inexact to apply the preposition (with) to the community of labour existing among the workers themselves. The meaning is, 'We are at work with God Himself.'"

It cannot be said that Godet is satisfactory in his exposition of, "Else were your children unclean, but now are they holy" (vii. 14). He mentions the thought which would naturally occur to a Jewish mind that the holiness spoken of relates to association, and that the uncleanness is that referred to in Ezra x., but sets it aside on the very insufficient ground that "the word 'holy' cannot designate here a simply Levitical purity, for we are no longer under the Old Testament." But he forgets that the Jewish synagogue was the birthplace of the Corinthian church, and that Crispus, "the ruler of the synagogue," was apparently the first convert (Acts xviii. 8). The house, too, to which Paul removed when he left the synagogue was that of Justus, a proselyte; so that to ignore Jewish conceptions as prevailing largely at Corinth is to shut one's eyes to facts recorded in the Scripture. His own idea of the meaning of the holiness of the children is conveyed in these words:—

> There is something so firm and precise about it (the assertion "are holy") that one involuntarily seeks a positive fact on which to support it. This fact can only be, as it seems to me, the baptism of the Corinthian children in regard to whom the Apostle expresses himself so categorically.

Yet immediately afterwards he seems frightened at his own position, and says: "He means not that they are holy because of their baptism, but that the baptism was the sign and proof of the fact of their state of holiness." To do him justice, he fairly states the strong argument against the notion that infant baptism is here alluded to, though it does not avail with him.

> No doubt the gravest German commentators find in this very saying an indisputable proof against the practice of infant baptism in the churches founded by Paul, "if (it is said) Christian children had been already introduced into the Church by baptism, their position would no longer have any analogy to that of the heathen spouses of whom Paul speaks in the first part of the verse, and he could not logically conclude from the former to the latter."

It would be difficult to refute this argument, and it is to Godet's credit that he affords his readers so convincing a refutation of his own view, little as he may intend them to adopt it.

In that celebrated bone of contention amongst commentators (1 Cor. vii. 21), "if thou mayest be made free, use it rather," Godet takes the view that considers freedom, not slavery, as the thing to be used, and his reasons for so doing have considerable weight.

On the whole, this commentary, judging from this its first part, is one that does credit to its author, and, though not perhaps as interesting as that on the Romans, or his two commentaries on Luke and John, yet has features of interest of its own, and is especially to be valued as being an exposition of an Epistle on which, till very lately, we have had little help from commentators. The two valuable English works on this Epistle which have lately appeared (Beet and Edwards) are both honourably mentioned by Godet. Of the former, he says: "He seems to me to possess in a high degree the gift of expounding the course of the Apostle's ideas in a simple, clear, and judicious way;" and of Edwards, he writes, "He possesses high philological culture." We may certainly say that Godet combines both these qualifications, and that in a high degree.

A Unique Evening Service.

The Union Church, Boston, U.S., has persuaded its pastor, Dr. R. R. Meredith, to change the evening service into a model of the Tremont Temple Bible-class held on Saturday afternoon, hoping that it will help to solve the confessedly difficult problem of how to induce people to attend church on Sunday evenings. As the lesson taught is the one for the following week, Sabbath-school teachers, especially those who are hindered from going regularly on Saturday afternoons, hail with real satisfaction this opportunity of getting a good start on the study of the lesson early in the week.

The attendance, for the two evenings that the experiment has been tried, has been most encouraging. Naturally there is less briskness in asking questions than at Tremont Temple, where the audience is composed almost entirely of teachers on the alert to gain all the light possible for the morrow's teaching, but the attention given, especially by young men, is more marked than at an ordinary preaching service. Doubtless the secret of this lies not in the catechetical form of presenting the truth, which has the charm of novelty, but because the truths themselves have a downright bearing upon practical life. Fundamental truths were set forth far more impressively than in sermon form. A prayer-meeting of half an hour follows the exercises, and choice music by a male quartette adds to the enjoyment of the evening.—Congregationalist.

THE ANTI-SUNDAY TRAVELLING UNION aims at putting down, as far as possible, especially among Christians, the traffic in public conveyances on the Lord's Day, and will gladly send copies of their pamphlets to all friends willing to join in this enterprise. It is estimated that 200,000 men in great Britain are deprived of Sunday. A little self-denial in the choice of a place of worship, a little forethought in arranging for special preachers to stay from Saturday till Monday in neighbourhoods where they are to preach, and a firm refusal on the part of ministers and others to undertake engagement involving travelling on the Lord's Day, would doubtless set many Sunday toilers at rest, and thus remove a great stumbling-block from their path. The address of the Union is [illegible], Christchurch-road, Brondesbury, London, N.W.

EVANGELISATION and the CHURCHES

By Rev. GEO. F. PENTECOST, D.D.

(Concluded.)

THE METHODS OF EVANGELISATION.

(7) Limit the size of our city churches.

Any church is too large when the aggregate of souls represented in the families of its membership is in excess of its seating capacity. When a church grows large it usually grows torpid and unwieldy. The old members begin to lay off responsibility because there are new ones to take it up, and new ones refuse to take it up because there are so many older ones to do the work. No church ought to be so large that it can spare a single member from its active working force—always excepting those wives and mothers who have a house full of little ones to take care of and train for God. There is scarcely a church in our cities in which there are not scores, if not hundreds of men, who are little better than parasites, and add not an ounce to the spiritual and working force of a church. It is not always their fault. If the church were smaller they would find work, or it would be thrust upon them, and they would be made to feel the necessity of personal service.

There are scores of Christians who walk or ride to church, distances greater than would take them to the most distant mission chapel in their city. Why should not Christians consider their possible usefulness in selecting the church which they are to attend, as well as their convenience and pleasure.

(8) Popularise the order and manner of our church service. I speak especially with reference to that service which is intended to be evangelistic in its character.

The atmosphere generated by an ordinary church service is too cold; the freedom of the Spirit is hindered by fear and regard for what we call propriety. The preaching should be extemporaneous in delivery, though not in thought; warm, direct, and simple, level to the comprehension of the common people. The singing should be congregational, hearty, abundant, and set to easy and popular melodies. An after-meeting of some kind ought to be held always, and the unconverted urged to remain to it and make decision for Christ.

(9) The lay element of the church ought to be instructed and encouraged in the work of saving souls. Every Christian ought to be made to feel that he has individual responsibility in the great work of soul-winning. I presume that, as it is, there is not one Christian out of every hundred who has set himself systematically to the work of soul-winning. It is very rarely that we see our regular pew-holders and church-goers of purpose bringing any of their unconverted neighbours or friends with them to the house of God. Even the habit of inviting people to church is almost an unknown one. There are probably not a dozen men in any one of our churches who are on the lookout for anxious souls, or who set themselves to the task of speaking to the unconverted concerning their spiritual and eternal interests. They have not been taught and trained to do so. The church is not organised with that in view. The conversion of souls is incidental to the work of the church, and not the chief end. And yet we know that in all the great evangelistic meetings of modern times it has been the personal work of private Christians which has led to the largest results.

IV. We must Revive and Recognise and Use the Evangelistic Gift as a distinct Order in the Ministry. There have always been evangelists, but for many generations they have not been encouraged and but by few churches recognised. I can scarcely recall the name of a single evangelist who has not been opposed in his work by the regular pastoral ministry of the churches. Even that burning and shining light, E. N. Kirk, had to fight his way into and so have all the evangelists, so far as I know from the Wesleys till now. The systematic and persistent way in which evangelists have been ignored and "sat upon" has largely prevented men of education, ability, and consecration from entering this work.

Young men entering upon the work of the ministry ought to be trained from the beginning with this end in view; that is, such of them as seem best fitted and gifted for this work. If the Head of the Church has not ceased to give "to some evangelists," He will still be bestowing this gift upon men. To this end a Chair or a department for the teaching of evangelistic theology and methods ought to be provided for in our Seminaries, and young men with evangelistic gifts specially instructed and trained for that work.

Such of our pastors as have developed special evangelistic gifts ought to be encouraged to do the work of an evangelist, as was Timothy. No doubt there are men to-day occupying pastorates who ought to be evangelists, and who would have been if that order in the ministry had been recognised at the time of their preparation for service, or at some subsequent period.

As to the field and work of the evangelist I can only suggest an outline. There ought to be evangelists at large who should be at the call of the churches in any part of the country. If pastors cannot do the full work of the evangelist in their own churches, as they cannot, there ought to be men, wise and well-trained, in whom they may repose perfect confidence, and whom they might call to their assistance from time to time to hold evangelistic meetings. If there were a number of such wise and God-appointed men in the field all the churches might enjoy the help and refreshment they would bring.

In the selection of evangelists special attention should be given to (a) the man himself. If he is successful and much blessed in his labours he is apt to be petted and flattered; and unless he is strong and full of grace he will become wilful and arbitrary, to the great damage of his own work and scandal to the work of Christ, and will do mischief when he ought only to do good. (b) His message. The evangelistic message is the simple one of the Gospel. He has nothing to do with philosophic theology, or with speculative questions as to the state of the heathen, nor with meddling with questions concerning things not revealed. I do not say that he has nothing to do with apologetics or ethics; he ought indeed to be an approved workman ready and able, if needs be, to defend the faith against assaults of infidelity, and as fearless and faithful as John the Baptist in reproving sin; but his main work is to preach the Gospel, simply and boldly. (c) His methods. The evangelist ought to be a man whose manner is at once dignified, yet accessible; and while he is never to forget that he is God's messenger he must also remember that he is but a sinful man saved by grace. His methods should be popular without being sensational, in the bad and common sense of that term. He should so organise his work as to fall easily into the position of helper to the pastors, and servant to the churches with whom he works.

Evangelists should be under authority. It would be better for them, and better for the churches. Where that authority may be located is not for me to discuss in this paper. Perhaps he might be subject to admonition and certification of the association of which he is a member. I have often thought that a society for the promotion of evangelistic work among the churches might be formed just as the Home and Foreign Missionary Societies are, or that the Home Missionary Society might be so enlarged as to include the work.

V. The Effect of the Introduction of a thorough System of Evangelistic work among our Churches would put our churches in touch with the great unevangelised masses. It would compel us to look abroad, and would awaken compassion for the unsaved, and indignation for God at the sight of the works of the devil, as it did when Paul had his spirit stirred within him at the sight of the Athenians who were wholly given up to idolatry.

It would develop enthusiasm in our churches. Evangelistic work cannot be carried forward forward it awakens it. There is nothing we need more in our churches to-day than a genuine enthusiasm in the work of God. If I were asked to describe in one word what the baptism of the Holy Ghost consisted in, I would say enthusiasm.

It would break up the dead formalism that is chilling all our church life.

It would break up stereotyped methods and take us out of ruts. For evangelistic work can only be carried forward by adapting itself to all the changing moods of the people and the conditions existing in the midst of the people among whom it is being carried forward.

It will preserve sound doctrine in and to the churches. An emasculated theology can never produce a revival. The three R's only cannot get hold of the human conscience and awaken to a sense of a lost condition and of the need of Christ. Ruin, Redemption and Regeneration, must be constantly preached. There is no room between such topics for the evangelist to get away into new and speculative drifts; for, if he should drop one of them out, his hold on the sinner's conscience is lost. It is only when a church becomes cold and loses its evangelistic spirit that heresy comes in.

It will develop workers among the lay people of the Church. This has been so abundantly proved that I need only mention it; for all such work cannot but throw responsibility upon the individual Christian participating in it, and quicken others who were before indifferent.

May the great Head of the Church direct us into and make us perfect unto every good work, and lead us out into larger activity and on to truer lines of evangelistic work.

DEACON ABRAHAM.

A letter has lately been received from the Nestorian Deacon, Abraham, at Ooroomiah, which shows that he is still labouring usefully for his people; although at times straitened for want of means, he is maintaining his school for orphans, which contains twenty-five boys and twenty girls, in separate premises. He has had many applications to receive more orphans, but cannot at present undertake a heavier charge.

Sometimes, however, it is almost impossible for him to refuse at any hazard. Recently the following incident happened to him: A boy of twelve years old one day brought to him a younger brother and sister. They had travelled alone a journey of four or five days on foot over the mountains. They were very weary. Their father had died two years ago, and their mother had run away from them. A blind relative supported them by begging, and when he could no longer do so he sent them to Abraham. But, on their arrival, the latter gravely hesitated to incur so heavy an additional responsibility. Their young guide, the brother twelve years old, exclaimed, "But, master, how can I take them back? There is no one at all to keep them." Then he wept and cried out, "Mercy! Mercy!" Deacon Abraham could not resist the appeals and tears of these young suppliants. He replied at length, "Do not cry. I will take you in, and ask our heavenly Father to support you."

Four of his former pupils are now admitted as students in the American Mission College at Ooroomiah.

The Deacon on his return from England to Persia, a year ago, took with him a memorial of the damp, cold climate of Great Britain in the shape of severe rheumatism which has become chronic. Subsequently his crop of wheat and grapes has greatly suffered from adverse weather. He writes to his friend, Mrs. Sarah Francis, of Port Vale House, Hertford, Herts (through whom his other friends can communicate with him), "I am a man of many troubles."

Another thing which troubles him, and other Nestorians, is the arrival, at Ooroomiah, of two English clergymen of very Ritualistic proclivities, who are urging the people to call the blessed Virgin "the Mother of God," and in various ways pushing extreme points of doctrine and ceremonial rather than the Gospel of faith in the Lord Jesus Christ and love to man in the simple, gracious manner inculcated in the Holy

THE CHRISTIAN SABBATH.

BY J. DENHAM SMITH.

NOTES OF AN ADDRESS AT CLAPTON HALL.

THE first mention of the Sabbath we find in Genesis ii. 3: "And God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it: because that in it He had rested from all his work which God created and made." Beautiful idea, that our God should rest; and we, having a knowledge of Him, have what He had. What is spoken of is God's rest in this world. When man was in a state of innocency there was no sin, therefore God could have rest; but when sin came in there was no rest, and this explains what the Lord said to the Jews, "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work."

The Sabbath in Genesis is a type of what he will yet enjoy when a better Eden than the one lost will have come. It was not man's rest, it was God's; but the first day after man was created he enjoyed the Sabbath! They who are newly created believe (as the Scripture says), "and enter into rest." When God rested, everything around was in accord with his mind, therefore He could rest. On account of sin, the rest in the Garden was broken; and Canaan's rest was broken; but there is a rest which will never be broken. He says, speaking of his redeemed, "This is my rest."

In Exod. xx. 8, we read, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." Until this command, the world for upwards of two thousand years was not under law to keep a day. In the five books of Moses, the Father is not mentioned, and yet in this word Sabbath the name of Father is written. He has lodged his name in that blessed rest. Not any of the prophets knew God as we know Him in his character of Father. Take away the "S" and the "th" from Sabbath, and you have "Abba" left, i.e., Father. Abba lying in that word, the beautiful symbol of rest. Sabbath is the Hebrew word, and Sunday the heathen word.

God intended us to work six days, but on the seventh day not to work. "Six days shalt thou labour, and do all thy work: but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou. nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy manservant, nor thy maidservant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates." All were to have rest.

There is no one connected with us who ought not to have one day in seven for rest. As regards cattle it is beautiful to notice that they were to be thought of. It is said of Mr. Spurgeon he was accused of breaking the Sabbath because he used his horse on the Lord's day. When so charged, he said that "his horse was a Jew; he gave him no work to do on the Saturday—he rested him so that his faithful animal might carry his master to proclaim the glad tidings of peace on the Lord's Day." He (Mr. Smith) noticed that in all directions, such as opening places of recreation, man was being robbed of that rest God intended him to have. See Exod. xxxi. 13, 14: "Verily my Sabbaths ye shall keep, ..for it is holy unto you: every one that defileth it shall surely be put to death." In this solemn sense God appointed the seventh time that man and beast should rest (ver. 17). "It is a sign between Me and the children of Israel for ever: for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and on the seventh day He rested." The Sabbath was a sign; both in the wilderness and in the land; it was a sign to any foreigners that those who so kept the seventh day were the people belonging to the God of heaven! And were the first day of the week what it ought to be, it would be a sign to the world that Christians belonged to Christ. But, having crucified the Lord of the Sabbath, it is no sign to the Jews now between them and the world. In Pentecostal days we find the Church keeping the first day of the week, and it was for a time a sign that they were disciples of the Lord Jesus.

Next read Jer. xvii. 21—27. "Take heed to yourselves, and bear no burden on the Sabbath day...neither carry forth a burden out of your houses, but hallow ye the Sabbath day." God would have no burden carried on that day. We who have believed have entered into rest; we must carry no burden of sin, and have no weight on the conscience. We have our Sabbatism. We are saved by grace. We have no righteousness of our own, and there is no sin that has not been atoned for on the cross. Before Christ, the law was a burden; but now law has no dominion over us. The Sabbath was a lovely shadow of our own rest; when we cease from our labour as God ceased from his, we are like unto Himself.

But, note: Should the children of Israel disobey God, and bear burdens, &c., as He told them not to do, hear what the consequences would be: "I will kindle a fire in the gates thereof, and it shall devour the palaces of Jerusalem, and it shall not be quenched." That has happened. Because Israel kept not the Sabbath, God has utterly scattered them, that his land might enjoy its Sabbaths. And for near two thousand years his land has had its rest. A man who broke the Sabbath was stoned to death. This awful penalty was under the law. It is God's determination that he shall have a seventh of time—one day in seven. Fifty years ago this was seen more than now. As children we were taught the little couplet:

> We must neither work nor play,
> Because it is the Sabbath day.

I would rather see it a little "Jewish," than the way in which it is observed now.

But now "the Lord's day." Remember, the Lord came down from heaven that He might save. He died for us. The curse and all our sins He put away on the shameful tree. On the first day he rose. This was the beginning of a new state of things. The Sabbath ceased with the old dispensation; but now the first day of the week is described by the Psalmist, "The day the Lord hath made." It is the Lord's day. He has put his own name into it. The Sabbath was under law—it had death attached to it—but the Lord's day is under grace. It shows Christ having died and risen, and brings not death but life. Far more incumbent is it that we should keep it, as we are a thousand times more obligated. Some, getting away from law, go to the other extreme; living, as they say, on grace and yet sinning, not realising the obligations of grace and infinite love. It is not now, "Thou shalt not do this, and thou shalt not go there." But Christ has done a work in which we have ineffable rest. He says, "Come unto Me and ye shall find rest to your souls."

How did this day tell upon the early disciples? First, they were in the Spirit. The aged John knew it to be the Lord's day, and in his prison-isle was "in the Spirit" on that day. This as to their state of mind. Next, corporately, they were found met together to "break bread" on the Lord's day. That seemed to have been the chief thing. The enjoyment of that feast was in remembering the Lord's death, pointing backward to the sufferings of Christ, and onward to the glory to follow. As to preaching it was at once most prominent. It was on the first day Mary went forth with "The Lord is risen!" It was on the evening of the first day that we have the first exposition of the blessed Word, as the Lord, beginning at Moses, and all the prophets in all the Scriptures, told the things concerning Himself. Peter's grand deliverance was on the Lord's day, as also Paul's discourse in the upper chamber at Troas, preaching down to midnight. Every day continually should the Gospel be preached, but especially when, as now, so many of the world are free to hear.

YORKSHIRE.—A series of successful meetings are being held in the Skinning Grove mining district by Mrs. Horton and Miss Parker. Not only are the night meetings largely attended, but the afternoon services draw large congregations, and many are deciding for Christ. The evangelists will be at Scunthorpe on Jan. 30 and Feb. 6, and Glossop on Feb. 20.

REV. W. HASLAM IN ROME.

REV. WILLIAM HASLAM has just concluded an eight-day mission from January 9 to 16, in Trinity Church, Rome, at the cordial invitation of the chaplain, Rev. Ernest Cowan. Much prayer preceded the mission, and there is hopeful reason to believe that Mr. Haslam's visit to Rome has been blessed to many. Besides the morning services held at Trinity Church, evening drawing-room meetings were held where God's children eagerly gathered to hear the message his servant had to deliver to them, of a more complete surrender of themselves to Him, the living Christ. Mr. Haslam's services were not so much Gospel addresses as an earnest endeavour to open the eyes of the children of God to their privileges as justified sinners, and their consequent duties. Mr. Haslam showed how many believers rested satisfied with knowing that their sins were forgiven, and how they lived ignorant of the truth that God had created them not only to be saved, but for his glory, and then led them on to see the crown prepared for faithful service. Many had their eyes opened to see the selfish lives they were living, and their hearts were stirred up to yield themselves more entirely to the Lord.

He impressed upon his hearers that the Saviour had by his death saved believers from the penalty of sin, by his resurrection from the power of sin now, and is coming again to receive them to Himself, and save them from the presence of sin.

Besides these mission services, Mr. Haslam held some drawing-room meetings, where a few friends met to hear from him precious words on the Coming of the Lord and on the subject of Prophecy, where they were stirred to search more diligently for themselves into the deep things contained in God's Word. All present felt these little gatherings to be very blessed. On the last Sunday morning he made a powerful Gospel appeal to the unsaved, taking for his text Acts xxvi. 28, 29, contrasting the three "almost persuaded," Felix, Festus, and Agrippa, with the wholly persuaded Philippian jailor.

Mr. Haslam's closing meeting on the Sunday evening was deeply impressive. From Hebrews ii. 1—3, he dwelt especially on the words, "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?" Earnestly he pleaded with all present—with the unsaved to come to Christ; with the saved to bring others to Him, concluding with loving words of encouragement to the labourers in this field of Rome, in which, although, he said, he felt the difficulties to be great, Christ was still greater, and his grace would overcome them all.

MADEIRA SAILORS' REST.—The very large number of ships visiting Madeira makes this Rest of great importance. During twelve months over eight hundred vessels entered the port. Many visited the Rest, which is a counter attraction to places that would lead them astray. Thousands of tracts and periodicals were given away on board the various vessels, and conversations by Mr. Smart on spiritual subjects are frequently held with passengers and sailors.

MALTA SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' REST.—On behalf of the fund for completing and adapting the premises acquired for this purpose a bazaar will be held at Malta on February 8 and 9. The "Rest" is a public-house without the drink, and a Home for soldiers and sailors out of barracks or away from their ship. It contains reading, recreation, refreshment, lecture, and bed rooms, and is free to all British soldiers and sailors, refreshments and beds only being charged. Such an effort on behalf of our soldiers and sailors at this important place cannot fail to secure the sympathy of the public.

ORPHAN APPRENTICE HOME, BATH.—Friends of this Home will be glad to know that the ten lads for whom accommodation is provided are getting on well in their various trades, and giving satisfaction to their masters, some of whom speak most highly of their conduct and work, and appreciate their being so well cared for in a Home where their words are closely watched over, and many little failings incidental to youth corrected. A sale of work will be held in the ensuing spring, and parcels of cast-off clothing, always acceptable, will be gratefully acknowledged by Mrs. Clarkson, Uplands, Bath.

For the Young.

STORY OF A SYRIAN CHILD.

"Dear Mariam Shamoon has gone home." So runs my letter to-day, and my heart is full of sadness that I shall never look on her guileless face on earth again. And yet

> Why should our tears run down,
> And our hearts be sorely riven,
> For another gem in the Saviour's crown
> And another star in heaven?

Mariam came to us in the Institution first as a day scholar, and soon became the pet of all, through her gentle lovable ways. Not having brothers or sisters at home, she missed her little playmates, and constantly entreated her parents to let her become a boarder. And how happy she was with us. No, she never wished to be married, she said, all her life, whatever others did, she would be a teacher and remain in the school. One year she fell ill in the holidays and her recovery was retarded by her anxiety lest she should be prevented from returning. Indeed, her love for the Institution was quite proverbial among her relatives.

It was at the beginning of 1886, that, one Saturday night, the girls were learning a new hymn, out of the books kindly given us by the Bishop of Exeter, the "Hymnal Companion." Hymn-learning was going on with much vigour just then, for we had received a beautiful new American organ from Mrs. Frederick Barker, in memory of her husband, the late lamented Bishop of Sydney, a great friend of the schools.

The hymn chosen was, "Why should I fear the darkest hour?" suggested, perhaps, by the trials through which the mission was just then passing. Verse by verse it was being translated into Arabic for the benefit of the younger ones. As we came to the last line, which runs, "Jesus is all, and He is mine," Mariam sprang from her seat, clasped her hands, and, as if quite forgetting that she was surrounded by some sixty companions, fervently exclaimed, "Ah, yes! Jesus is mine!" The others were almost electrified for the moment by this sudden ejaculation of one so timid and retiring, but we thought it wiser to take no further notice at the time.

However, a few weeks later, when we were visited by that gracious influence of the Holy Spirit which so encouraged our hearts, Mariam came, one morning to me, with a radiant face.

"Oh, I am so happy!"

"Indeed, Mariam, why?"

"Because I have given my heart to Christ!"

"But I thought you had done that long ago!"

"Yes; I had given a part, but now I have given it all!"

She had learned the secret that only an undivided heart can give true happiness. Of course, the next thing was to go home and tell her mother, and then she thought she would like to tell her father, so we went down to the American Printing Press, where he worked, that he might hear the good news from his child's own lips. Never shall I forget the lovely picture which those two made, standing among the cypresses and the brilliant geraniums of the little shrubbery between the Press and the church. Mariam's slight figure leaning against her father, her cheeks flushed, her wavy hair shading her face, her expressive eyes saying more even than her words, while he looked down upon her with tenderness and pride. And now—one has been taken, and the other left!

When the children went home a little society was formed among the more earnest ones—"The Shining for Jesus Society," each member of which was to shine in her home, always remembering it was to be for Him! Very many interesting letters used to come telling of their efforts among other children to spread the knowledge of their Saviour's love, and one wrote of Mariam, "It would make you so glad to see her, with the Moslem children of the next house all around her; she is so happy telling them of Jesus, and they are so happy to hear." And then the writer described the Moslem parents; how they used to say, "Your child is too good to live; she is an angel!"

We feared no danger, but thought of her as one who would be a great comfort to us for many years to come. The following spring, however, she had an attack of measles, followed by much prostration, causing great anxiety for some time. Then she seemed to rally, came to visit her old companions, and then went to the Lebanon for the summer. But again her strength failed, and her sorrowing parents brought her down to the plain—to die. In much weakness and suffering she lay for some time, and yet, while the outward man was perishing, the inward man was being renewed day by day. Her Bible was her constant companion, and often she seemed lost to those around, holding converse with invisible ones.

A day or two before she died, seeing her stricken mother weeping by her bed, she said: "Oh, mother, why are you weeping? Don't you see them waiting for me?"

Ah, no! The mother's eyes were blinded by tears. She only saw her dying child with the glory on her face.

"Oh, mother, I see them all around my bed. I hear them speaking a new language, but I understand it all. And I see Jesus! He is with me always. He talks with me and I with Him. I am so happy!"

And then she sent a message to her companions, that they knew how she had loved her dear school, and had never wished to leave it; but now she loved Jesus more than all, and was so happy to leave school, and friends, and all and go to be with Him. And soon she was not, for God took her.

Dear friends, at home, whose prayers and contributions support our dear British Syrian Schools, rejoice with us that one of our dear children is now among those thousands that stand around the throne of God in heaven. You must rejoice with us, for as their part is that go down to the battle, so shall theirs be that tarry by the stuff, they shall part alike. May we not say, rejoicing while sorrowing, with good old Rutherford:—

> And if one soul from Anworth
> Meet us at God's right hand,
> Our heaven shall be two heavens,
> In our Immanuel's land!

MY KINGDOM.

BY LOUISA M. ALCOTT.

A little kingdom I possess,
  Where thoughts and feelings dwell,
And very hard the task I find
  Of governing it well;
For passion tempts and troubles me,
  A wayward will misleads,
And selfishness its shadow casts
  On all my words and deeds

How can I learn to rule myself,
  To be the child I should,
Honest and brave, and never tire
  Of trying to be good?
How can I keep a sunny soul,
  To shine along life's way?
How can I tune my little heart
  To sweetly sing all day?

Dear Father, help me with the love
  That casteth out my fear;
Teach me to lean on Thee, and feel
  That Thou art very near;
That no temptation is unseen,
  No childish grief too small,
Since Thou, with patience infinite,
  Doth soothe and comfort all.

I do not ask for any crown,
  But that which all may win;
Nor try to conquer any world
  Except the one within.
Be Thou my Guide until I find,
  Led by a tender hand,
Thy happy kingdom in myself,
  And dare to take command.

—N. Y. Evangelist.

LEAVING THEM TO GOD.

In West Africa a society in England has started a school for native children. One day in that school a little girl struck her schoolmate. The teacher found it out, and asked the child who was struck "Did you strike her back again?"

"No, ma'am," said the child.

"What did you do?" asked the teacher.

"I left her to God," said she.

A beautiful and most efficient way to settle all difficulties, and prevent all fights among children and among men. We shall never be struck by others when they know that we shall not return the blow, but "leave them to God." Then, whatever our enemies do, or threaten to do to us, let us leave them to Him, praying that He would forgive them and make them our friends.

HOW TO DO GOD'S WILL.

A teacher was explaining to her class the words concerning God's angels, "Ministers of his who do his pleasure," and asked: "How do the angels carry out God's will?"

Many answers followed.

One said, "They do it directly."

Another, "They do it with all their heart."

A third, "They do it well."

And after a pause a quiet little girl added, "They do it without asking any questions."

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sunday, Jan. 30, Luke iii. 1—14; Monday, Jan. 31, Luke iii. 15—23; Tuesday, Feb. 1, Luke iv. 1—15; Wednesday, Feb. 2, Luke iv. 16—32; Thursday, Feb. 3, Luke iv. 33—44; Friday, Feb. 4, Luke v. 1—15; Saturday, Feb. 5, Luke v. 16—26.

Liverpool Bible Carriage.

At the Aldersgate-street prayer-meeting on Friday last Mr. Northcote Willy made an interesting statement with reference to work with this Bible carriage. With it he and another worker are continually going up and down the country trying to tell out the wonderful love of God; and during the six years it has been at work over 112,000 Bibles and Testaments have been sold, besides an innumerable quantity of tracts scattered freely amongst the people in all parts of the country.

Sometimes at fairs the carriage is surrounded by vast crowds, who thus hear the Gospel. In South Wales on one fair day 1500 Bibles and Testaments were sold. At Rothwell a number of young Christians assisted in the work, and the hymns were heard right through the fair. A day or two after this, when the carriage came to another fair, a man, on seeing Mr. Willy, said, "He's come! There'll be no luck now." Shortly after he visited Olney, when a man, apparently a showman, after cursing the evangelists, said, "You stuffed them brimful of religion at Rothwell the other day. They'll never forget it."

It is a grand work this, scattering the seed of the Word of God that is able to make men wise unto salvation in so many places.

During the past twelve months one hundred and sixty towns and villages have been visited, and the Gospel has been preached in villages and cities, in markets and fairs, hundreds of thousands of people having thus heard the glad tidings. Mr. Willy's address is No. 17, Severn-terrace, Worcester.

THE BLUE RIBBON MOVEMENT.—The ninth anniversary of the introduction of this movement to this country will be celebrated in Exeter Hall on Thursday, February 10. The President, Mr. W. I. Palmer, J.P., of Reading, will preside, and Miss Mary Davies has kindly consented to sing. Mr. William Noble will give his experiences in the Colonies and America. He is expected on the 29th inst. by ss. Umbria, and will conduct the first of a series of Jubilee Missions in Hoxton Hall, N., where further particulars may be had by addressing

VISIT OF THE WISE MEN.

THE PROGRESS OF FAITH.

Matt. II.

(1) "There came wise men from the East to Jerusalem." The birthplace of faith. How often it comes from the "far country." Samaria received the Gospel more readily that Jerusalem—the Gentiles than the Jews. The disciples were called Christians first at Antioch: not at Jerusalem. Of a Roman centurion the words were spoken: "I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel." The Scribes, Pharisees, rulers "rejected the counsel of God;" harlots, publicans, and sinners entered the kingdom. Of wide application were the words: "He came unto his own, and his own received Him not." So to-day the Church is not only enlarged by additions from its own surroundings, but converts come as well from the "far country" of the ungodly and the outcast. And of these are some of the brightest saints; while many who spend their lives under the shadow of the Cross never accept the Gospel at all.

(2) "We have seen his star." Telling us the origin of faith. For whence had they such exact knowledge of the star, inspiring a long journey, persistent search, and genuine worship, were it not, as in ver. 12, they had been "warned of God?" "Faith is the gift of God." "Which were born not of blood" (faith is not hereditary—dispositions, peculiarities, diseases, and even religious tendencies may be born in us, but not faith), "nor of the will of the flesh" (it cannot be self-produced—we can become wise and wealthy of ourselves, but not believers), "nor of the will of man" (it cannot be imparted by or to others—we can educate, influence, or control others; but to put faith in them is beyond us), "but of God." Let ours be a God-given faith.

"And are come." The readiness of faith. It does not argue or explain away. It has no "more convenient season," no "I pray thee have me excused;" but just an honest, ready response to the Divine message, "Let us now go even unto Bethlehem;" "See here is water;" "I will arise and go to my Father."

(3) "Herod was troubled and all Jerusalem." (a) The troublings of faith. "The men that have turned the world upside down have come here also." It is a great disquieter, and always signalises its first entrance into the class, the office, the shop, the pit, the mill, the everywhere. This is a note of its reality. (b) The contrast of faith. A few strangers from a foreign land come earnestly searching for the King. The King's people knew not of Him, and are troubled. Faith is often in sharp, unpleasant contrast with unbelief. And such contrast is hard to endure. Hence (c) the trial of faith. "Surely we are mistaken." The only result of a long journey is to find that the most clever, the most professedly godly know nothing about the King. Here is a severe test of its reality. (d) The cross-roads of faith. Shall we go or turn aside? Every trial of faith is a halting-place or cross-road, and how many Christians, alas, turn aside! "This is a hard saying, who can hear it? . . . And from that time many of his disciples went back and walked no more with Him." Oh, those cross-roads, when faith comes up in contrast with pleasure or something more desired, and brings us into collision with reproach or suffering.

(4) "He gathered all the chief priests," &c. The servants of faith. The scholars and divines, even the king himself, are made to minister to faith. "All things are yours, whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come, all are yours." "There was given to me . . . the messenger of Satan . . . lest I should be exalted above measure." "All things work together for good to them that love God."

(9) "They departed." The devotion of faith. In spite of disappointment—the strain of delay

Jerusalem as readily as they left the East. They had the gift of continuance.

But they go alone. The loneliness of faith. Faith has to go, do, and stand alone. Like its Master it has its solitary visits to the mountain, its Gethsemane, its Calvary.

"And lo, the star." Consolation and encouragement of faith. "Ye shall leave Me alone, and yet I am not alone." "When my father and mother forsake me, the Lord will take me up." The world's applause has its gratification, the Church's approval its satisfaction; but when in the path of duty these things are wanting, then the Divine consolation is clearest and brightest. May ours be ever a "star" joy.

(11) "They saw the young child with Mary his mother." The realisation of faith. Sooner or later, in spite of all difficulties and discouragements, faith attains its object. Even now we receive "the end of our faith, the salvation of our souls," but faith still yearns for the full realisation. "Thine eyes shall see the King in his beauty."

"And fell down and worshipped Him." The perception of faith. Who else had seen a King in that little Babe? Herod? Chief Priests? Scribes? The people? It was only possible to faith, to such as the Wise Men, Simeon and Anna. Faith still needs its perception. "Spiritual things can be only spiritually discerned." And many Christians seem uncertain as to what Christ is and where He can be found. "They presented unto Him gifts." The offerings of faith. Like nature with vacuum, faith abhors the empty hand. Gifts are never the cause, but are ever the outcome, of faith, and faith that does not offer is non-existent.

(12) "Being warned of God." The providence of faith. Faith's journey is individual and personal, employing judgment, human reason, and natural means; but supervising its every step is a Divine providence, in which it trusts, and which ever appears in the hour of necessity and danger.

"They departed into their own country another way." The satisfaction of faith. A toilsome, chequered journey, but eminently successful. "Blessed is the man whom Thou choosest, and causest to approach unto Thee; we shall be satisfied with the goodness of thy house." The world has its rewarded toils, its triumphant labours, but no satisfaction. "Who will show us any good?" is the piteous cry and confession of its most successful men. It is only a God-given, living faith that can bring satisfaction to the soul. May such a faith be ours!

ZENANA MEDICAL COLLEGE.

During the six years this college has been at work seventy ladies, whom it has qualified as medical practitioners, have gone forth into the mission field; so states the last report. The demand for its pupils is greater than can be met, showing how great is the need for such an auxiliary to missionary effort. The women of India are to be reached only by women. Mrs. Weitbrecht, the well-known Zenana missionary, states that "all Hindoo women are utterly neglected in the time of sickness; a female medical mission in every populous centre is one of the most crying needs of India."

Miss Sharp, one of the Society's pupils, is in charge of the hospital at Amritzar, where there is an average of 300 in-patients and many thousand out-patients. Others in China, Syria, and elsewhere, some engaged in village-to-village mission, are actively engaged in their Christ-like two-fold labours. It is hoped that by affiliation with a London general hospital, the work of preparing pupils may be expedited, and that by an increase of the special fund for free or partially free presentations, many suitable candidates may be enabled to take their place in the ranks of these preparing to go forth into the vast fields of labour already awaiting them. All communications should be addressed to the Hon.

GOOD NEWS from the FAR SOUTH.

Dear Sir,—Some time ago you published a note I wrote last year, in which I mentioned some Sunday and week-night meetings with the shearers, which I was permitted to hold. Perhaps your readers might be interested to hear of the blessing it has pleased God to give since, in this out-of-the-way corner of the world, to the Sunday-evening gathering, which is, indeed, an outcome of that held for the shearers, and which some few around were glad to have continued. Though for some months there was no sign of a deeper interest than that which the singing of Mr. Sankey's hymns seldom fails to awaken, prayer was offered, and a few verses or chapter of God's Word read and talked about, urging upon all the acceptance of Christ. This was always listened to with attention.

But a change came. A power in speaking was felt, and a consciousness that the message was being received. One appeared evidently anxious. God seemed very nigh in prayer for the meeting, and on a certain Monday morning, after such a gathering, one told me that she had "found the Lord." She rejoiced, and has been a consistent Christian since. The same week another found peace in believing. The glorious light shone into yet another heart in much distress of soul; then several others, one after another, sought and found Jesus, giving joy to the angels of God above. One of these was in deep distress for many days, but is now, and has been for months, calmly resting upon Jesus. Three others have since received Christ, one an aged woman.

Added to these are three lads, in whom I feel, perhaps the most deeply interested. One well known to be bad, the trouble of his home, accustomed to the worst language, &c., is now, as his father, an unbeliever, expresses it, "altogether different." When asked if Jesus could not keep him from swearing, "Yes, if I trust Him," he quickly said, and from that day (now long ago) he has been kept, having had, as he tells me, no desire to swear. It was a joy to hear this boy, soon after his conversion, when he came to tell me the happy news, to which his face bore testimony, say upon his knees, "Lord, I thank Thee that Thou hast brought me out of darkness into light." The other lad (16) obliged lately, while shearing, to be with men who, as he says, "swear till they go to sleep," has nevertheless been enabled, not without a struggle, to kneel down night after night in their midst to pray.

Every Saturday night now we meet for a little prayer-meeting, when these boys, with others, pray aloud in turn, asking among various requests that they may be "out and out on the Lord's side." May I ask for prayer that they all may be kept steadfast and rejoicing unto the coming of the Lord.—Very faithfully yours,

Janette S. Playfair.

THE BIBLE.—No fragment of an army ever survived so many battles as the Bible; no citadel ever withstood so many sieges; no rock was ever battered by so many hurricanes and so swept by storms. And yet it stands.

JOHN KNOX.—The life of this hero of the Reformation formed the subject of last week's popular free lecture at the City Temple, Rev. James Baillie, of Bloomsbury Chapel, being the lecturer. Having spoken of the doubts which for ten long years exercised Knox's mind, he showed how, having been convinced of the falsehood of the Papacy, he struck directly at its fruit and root. One incident, evidencing his quiet contempt of danger, may be mentioned. When on board ship, amongst a number of other Reformers who were to be sent off from England, they were commanded to kiss an image of the Virgin Mary that was being passed round. When presented to him, Knox quietly dropped it over the side of the vessel into the water, saying, "Our Lady is very light; let our Lady learn to swim." By the strong hand of Knox Protestantism was established; he became the bulwark of the Reformation, and was trusted

CHORUS (Matt. xxviii. 18, 20; Mark xvi. 15).
1. Look-ing to Je-sus, counting not the cost?
2. Send forth the gospel, break the chains of sin!
3. Life and sal va-tion therefore go proclaim.
4. Shout "Hal-le-lu-jah, for the Lord is King!"
"All power is giv-en un-to Me!
All power is giv-en un-to Me! Go ye in-to all the world and preach the gos-pel; and lo, I am with you al-way."

Work Amongst the Masses.

THREE years ago, Rev. F. Jewell, minister of Packington-street (Methodist New Connexion) Chapel, commenced open-air preaching, and the volunteer corps then started has carried on its work through winter and summer alike; 1200 Gospel addresses have been delivered to congregations varying from twenty to five hundred people.

One interesting feature has been the adhesion of a man who has served five terms of penal servitude, and who was converted through the influence of a sermon preached by the Bishop of Rochester whilst in Chatham Prison. He has done good work amongst the people, seeking continually to be a means of blessing to the roughs, by whom more than once he has been cruelly knocked about, so much so that on one occasion he was laid up for a week. Mr. Jewell's

"FOLLOW ME."

YEA, Lord, and yet the way is rough and steep,
The brier chokes it, and the spiny thorn;
So weary am I, and my feet all torn,
Along the rugged road I scarce can creep.
Here are no pastures green, in which thy sheep
May browse in safety, from the dawn of morn
Until day fades and twinkling stars are born,
And the Good Shepherd comes his watch to keep.
I find no meads besprent with cooling dew.
But Thou hast gone before, O Son of God,
Bearing thy cross the weary desert through!
And shall I sigh for shade and verdant sod,
When Thou, dear Lord, dost call me to pursue
The upward path the feet Divine have trod?

GOSPEL WORK IN COPENHAGEN.

DURING the past year we have held 338 meetings in the courts and yards of this city, and 61 meetings in the courts of the caserns. The soldiers have joyfully listened to the Gospel there preached to them; they also join heartily in the singing of hymns. Sixteen meetings were held on board the training-ships in the Royal Dockyard, and both officers and crews received us gladly. On the ramparts were held twenty large meetings, at which often more than a thousand of the very poor were present.

Rev. Lic. Fenger has preached with great power at these meetings, although he is much engaged in his large parish of Christianshavn. In this way he shows the other clergymen in Copenhagen a good example, which I hope they will follow, as they have hitherto been very reserved in joining us. We should like to have the help of all in turn, each one in his own parish.

We have in the cold season held about eighty indoor meetings, inviting people from the public-houses, and by house visiting, and many have been blessed through personal dealing.

The Midnight Mission, commenced a few years ago, is getting on well, with thirty-five workers, who alternately watch outside houses of ill-fame every night from ten till two, which prevents many men from entering. We have rooms in two of the worst streets, wherein we, since May, have held some three hundred and fifty meetings, which have been well attended. Mr. Clausen visits the hospitals, where he does good work amongst the men. Several meetings have been held in the woods during the summer months to make plain to people the importance of the Midnight Mission, and blessed results have followed. A meeting of this kind has lately been held in the Bethesda mission-hall, which was attended by more than 1400 men.

We are much indebted to Count Moltke for the good success of this Mission; he himself, although an elderly man, keeps watch outside the brothels one night every week, and has through his humbleness and true Christian life been a blessing to many.

We should be glad to meet with Christian friends who delight in mission work, and who are visiting Copenhagen. They could very well preach the Gospel to the people, and I should esteem it a favour to be allowed to translate for them.

Yours very sincerely,
WM. WRIGHT.

A CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE has recently been held at Sydney, N.S.W., at which various subjects connected with spiritual life were discussed. The Australian Christian World says the attendance was good, and many ministers and laymen of different denominations took part. "The immediate influences have undoubtedly been good. Christian men and women of different views on minor matters, and of divers attainments and temperaments have been brought together, and made to feel how incomparably more important are the essentials of faith and practice in which they agree, than the non-essentials in which they differ."

H.M. PRISON, MILLBANK, S.W.—SIR,—Will you allow me to plead the cause of some of the helpless but hopeful cases that are under my care in this gloomy prison? In addition to many hundreds of young women whom I have been able to place in Homes and penitentiaries, I have sent nearly two hundred promising cases to different parts of the world, with the very satisfactory result of all, save eleven, turning out well. Stopped on their downward course, rescued on their first appearance in prison, and taken by the helping hand afterwards, these emigrants are now happy in the possession of a good character, and in the experience of a respectable life. A poor fallen woman raised up from degradation, and saved for a creditable career, is a matter worth more than ten or twelve pounds to effect, which is the sum needed for the emigration of each; four such cases are now waiting to receive in emigration a chance of making a fresh start in the paths of usefulness and respectability.

Your faithful servant,

The Christian.

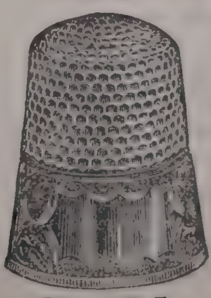
STERLING SILVER.



The Queen, May 8th, says:—"The 'Dorcas' Thimble is more durable than the generality of these indispensable work-table implements; it is made in three parts, the inner and the outer being Silver, and the intermediate Steel; forming a resisting power not obtained in silver only. What is more uncomfortable than sewing with a thimble that has seen service to such an extent that it has holes in its sides? With the 'Dorcas' Thimble this annoyance vanishes."

"The Hymns have abundant 'swing' and 'march' in them, and will be found largely suitable for evangelistic work. It is gratifying to learn from Mr. McGranahan's Preface that the 'Songs of the Gospel' have for the most part been written—words and music—by those engaged in evangelistic work. This is as it should be. The labourers in the harvest field best understand what is likely to be of service to them in their work."

"This is by far the BEST of all the CHEAP EDITIONS."
Christian Leader, Dec. 23, 1886.

"By far the best of all the cheap editions of 'The Pilgrim's Progress' that we have seen is one issued this week by Messrs. Morgan & Scott. Care has been bestowed upon the revision, the text having been early editions; a point all the more worthy of grateful recognition when we see so many conscienceless reprints, abounding in old and new blunders, tumbled into the market. The type is new, leaded, and very readable; and the book, printed on superior paper, and adorned with upwards of a dozen original illustrations, costs in its cheapest form only Sixpence. The portability of the volume is an additional feature worthy of note; it is so light that it may be held in the hand by the aged or invalids without exertion or causing fatigue."—The Christian Leader.

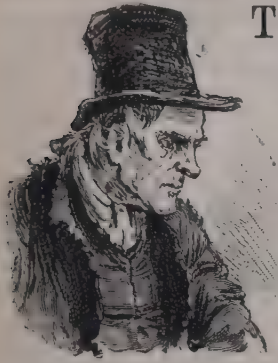
OLD AND FRIENDLESS.



THE remarkable series of meetings at the Edinburgh Castle was continued last Thursday evening by a gathering which for pathetic significance and revealing power was even more striking than the meals for Homeless Boys and Factory Girls already chronicled. The guests were 1200 in number, and the conditions of admission will be apparent from the following copy of the contents of the card of admission:—

> Admit one person, not younger than fifty-five years of age, to a Hot Dinner (roast beef, potatoes, pudding and a cup of tea), on Thursday evening, January 20, at half-past six o'clock, in the Edinburgh Castle Large Hall. No person will be admitted who appears less than fifty-five years old.

These tickets had been circulated widely among the London lodging-houses for many a night previously, and no one could doubt, on glancing down the long lines of white heads and bowed shoulders in the hall, that it was from those "unsunned caverns of destitution" that most of the guests had come. There was a quiet, saddening languor in the aspect of the assembly, as they waited for the appearance of the dinner, that was infinitely more impressive than the boisterous behaviour of the boys and girls in a similar position the weeks before. The majority of these people had failed in life—failed badly: there was no doubt about it. The future had nothing to bring them, and their past was a waste of regrets and dissipated illusions. Their hoary hairs carried no honour with them. Some of them had been drawn with the strong cord of their passions, and gone down the moral slope, yielding to the tempting solicitations of circumstance; and there they were, stranded in hopeless poverty, amid all the wealth of London.

They were a motley assemblage. Comparatively few women appeared to have availed themselves of the invitation. The men were of the most varied types, and it was obvious that it was through almost infinitely diversified roads that they had come to this level of poverty. Perhaps, however, 50 per cent. had reached their position through the door of the public-house. Their raiment was, in general, old and ragged; boots were, in nearly every case, broken and patched; collars were conspicuous by their absence, a coarse muffler being the rule; and there was a personal filthiness and frowsiness in many cases that showed self-respect to be on its last legs, and the bottom of the social scale to be within measurable distance. Of course, respectable poverty was well represented with its threadbare, but cleanly, garments, and its tidy personal arrangements. Side by side with an old Sussex ploughman sat a broken down University man, who attributed his life defeat to his "peculiar idiosyncrasies." A negro faced a Glasgow mechanic, who, after tramping vainly in search of work, had sunk to that last refuge of distress—sale of oddments in the streets of London. A clever pot-house debater, shaking, alas! from alcoholism, had a companion in the shape of a decrepit cat's-meat man, who "couldn't make ends meet no how."

The hall looked cheerful and brilliant, with its long lines of bright tablecloths, under the electric glow. Little time was lost in marshalling the crowd, and that was well occupied by Dr. Barnardo's little handbell ringers, and by the organist, the efforts of both of these being most appreciatively listened to. The promise of the dinner card was sumptuously fulfilled. Twenty carvers had their hands full till the first edge of appetite was taken off. The waiters consisted of lads from the Youths' Labour House. who appeared to the manner born, so deftly did roast beef, and tea succeeded, till all the guests were satisfied.

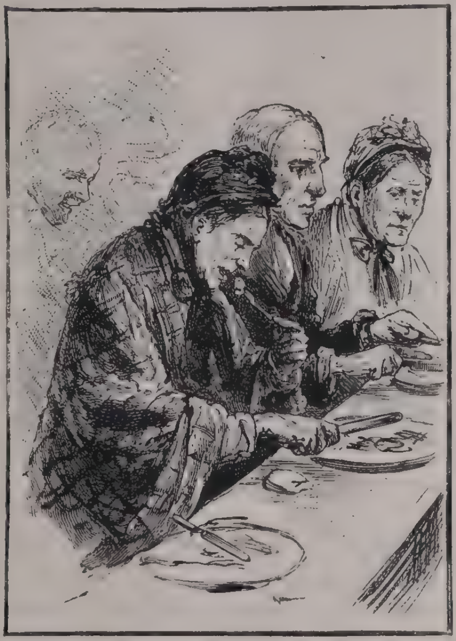
Then Dr. Barnardo explained that it was through the kindness of a friend, himself laid aside upon a bed of sickness, that he had been able to offer that meal to elderly people in straitened circumstances. That friend, the Hon. Thomas Holt, he would like to tell, on their behalf, that they were much obliged for the invitation. Thanks were accorded with surprising vigour, and when Dr. Barnardo proceeded to announce that to each of those present the gift of a sixpence would be superadded to defray the expense of the night's lodgings and the morrow's breakfast, a renewed burst of applause told how the kindness had gone home. "But," continued he, "we don't want you to go away, and spend that sixpence at the Swan with Two Necks, or the Blue Boar, or the Pig and Whistle; so Miss Holt, who is here to night, joins with me in the wish that you should all be asked to promise that none of this money shall go to the public-house." Hands went up all round, with a loud "hear, hear," and the way was cleared for a little talk.

A solo, "Ye must be born again," sung by Mr. White, was attentively listened to, the sweet chorus, "Verily, verily, I say unto you," being joined in by all; and Mr. J. Bennett Anderson then addressed the guests in a few tender words of Gospel invitation and hope. The address was followed with intelligent interest, the "points" being quickly caught up and applauded in the free manner of a lecture-room debate. After a solo from The Christian Choir, by Mr. W. R. Nicoll, a further address, or rather talk, was given by Captain Brenton, introduced as "an old salt," a commander in the Royal Navy. Every sentence smacked of the manly directness of a sailor, and an obvious impression was made upon these homeless ones as the captain talked to them in a wonderfully sympathetic and loving manner of Rest and Home—"words in season to them that are weary." Each sentence was toned with a touch of personal experience, which went straight to the heart, and it was to an audience with softened sympathies that Dr. Barnardo addressed the closing words of the evening. He was most happy, both in matter and manner, and his earnest words met with an attentive reception that gave an assurance of the most hopeful results. Then, in a few solemn words of prayer, a noteworthy meeting was brought to an end.



Not quite to an end, for the pleasant ceremony of distributing the sixpences by Miss Holt was proceeded with. There was many a hearty "Thank you, Miss!" and "God bless you," as the poor folk left the bright and cheery scene of persed at a late hour, and was instantly scattered to the far winds. Some of the guests walked back as far as Pye-street, Westminster, and even to the Potteries, Notting-hill, to their particular lodging-house. It is to be hoped that this sunny little effort of Christian love,—

> Still with some gift Divine, some succour new > Encompassing the weary world's girth,

may leave a spot of permanent brightness in many a heart, and sow its seeds of life in curious wayside places, where eternity will find a glorious harvest.

MISSION TO DEEP-SEA FISHERMEN.

THERE are twelve thousand men and boys engaged in the deep-sea fisheries around our coast, eighteen hundred of these being employed in the fleets that let down their nets in the North Sea. Some account of the life these men live, the hardships they endure, and the blessing that the Mission-ships have been to them, was given in the course of an interesting lecture at the Conference Hall, Mildmay, on Tuesday evening last week. In his description Mr. E. J. Mather, Secretary of the Mission, was able to speak from experience, having more than once spent a week with the fleet. Many, he said, seem to forget that this work is carried on in winter as well as in summer, and in all weathers.

Putting the question, "Have you paid your fish bill?" he gently hinted that those had not, who thought nothing of the terrible dangers to which these hardy fishermen are exposed. The work of hauling in the net usually begins about three o'clock in the morning, and from that time till the work of cleaning and packing the fish for the market is finished, sometimes not till five o'clock in the evening, the men do not stop even to eat. "When we begin we goes it," replied a sailor to a question from the speaker as to how they could go on so long without food. In cold weather—and sometimes it is necessary to use boiling water in order to thaw the running tackle—the suffering is very great. "God bless the kind ladies who think of us, and make these comforters and warm things for us," is a frequent exclamation. Very necessary are the mits, for they prevent the blisters on the wrists from which, without them, the men often suffer through the friction of the stiff oilskins and the action of the salt water.

The baneful influence of the "coper" has been well nigh destroyed by the advent of the Mission ships. But these "devil's ships" have been at work thirty-five years, whereas the Gospel ships have not long begun. A most important feature of this Mission work is the medical help given. Great has been the gratitude of patients (numbering last year no less than 3000) whose sufferings have been thus relieved. The Gospel has wrought wonders amongst these hardy men, winning from the ways of sin some of the most hardened.

Two skippers from the fleet testified at this meeting to the wonderful way in which God had blessed the Deep Sea Fishermen by sending the Mission ships amongst them. But here, as elsewhere, the field is large, and the labourers comparatively few.

TEA TO SHOWMEN.—The British Women's Temperance Association on Sunday week entertained to tea in the Cross-street Chapel schoolroom, Islington, 500 travelling showmen and women. A large number of these are engaged in the World's Fair at the Agricultural Hall, and others were from different shows and circuses now in London. This is the first gathering of the kind that has been held in London, but in the provinces the B.W.T.A. entertain these poor people whenever they arrive in a town. For some time now a noble work has been conducted amongst this neglected class by Miss Millington, who is known and beloved by hundreds of them. After tea some time was spent in singing, the company joining with great heartiness. Addresses were also given by Mrs. Stewart and others, and at the close fifty persons joined the Travellers' National Total Ab-

HOME OF INDUSTRY.

In former years it was our privilege to cheer about one thousand of the poor around us at the opening of a New Year. But now it has been our joy to minister to the comfort of some two thousand of our poorer neighbours, and we are very grateful to the Lord, as a band of workers, and grateful to all who have so liberally assisted us with money or warm garments for the aged and the young.

We commenced with the Jews, and in all our subsequent gatherings none were more grateful, nor apparently more needy. Our two young converted Russian Jews spoke to their brethren with tenderness and power, while Pastor Meyer read and expounded to them the Scriptures in Hebrew, and the whole party sang several of the Songs and Solos in that language.

The following evening a deeply-interesting Gospel meeting was held for the poor lost sisters, preceded by a supper at midnight, which was conducted by one of the rescue societies. All who received an invitation came; but we regret to say that few availed themselves of the opportunity offered them of a new mode of life. We learned afresh that night that prevention, by caring for the very young, is the greatest and most hopeful work. But we have our Lord's blessed example to watch for souls, even among such as these, and we were not without encouragement.

On Boxing Day a kind friend gave our seventy little ones of the Junior Band of Hope a treat. Many of them are match-box makers, and very poor. One little fellow had to be entirely "rigged out" before he could appear, but since then it has been a joy to see him comfortably clad, with smiling face, in his Sunday-evening class.

The sturdy little teetotalers sang their temperance songs, and joined in several merry games. It was a truly happy evening.

Our next party was for the Home of Industry Young Women's Christian Band, formed twelve years ago, of converted elder scholars in the Sunday-school, now numbering 170 members. Many of these young women are scattered over the country, some married, others in service (nine in Canada), eighty were present at the annual tea. Most interesting letters were read from absent members, and each received their motto card for the year from their devoted teacher Mr. Wilson. Their bright yet peaceful faces must have cheered his heart, and the happy gathering was a foretaste of the reunions above, when we shall be at home with Jesus.

A similar number of elder girls spent the next happy evening with us; the senior girls of our Sunday-school, those above thirteen years of age. Various games, after tea, occupied the first hour, making it seem a real Christmas treat to them. Opportunities were given for pleasant intercourse between teacher and scholar, and for a word in season to those who had not yet been won for the Master. The rest of the evening was spent in singing their favourite hymns, and listening to the sweet messages of his wondrous love from the lips of their devoted teachers, and thus another evening of blessed privilege passed away.

Then came, on a bitterly cold foggy evening, the last day of the old year, our host of three hundred and fifty younger Sunday-school children, all clean and bright, but very poor. Each received their paper bag of food, and few there were who did not reserve a slice of cake for the loved mother at home. The tenderness of the poor for each other, when thus reared under the teaching of the Gospel, is truly God-like. Our fellow-teachers looked radiantly happy, to be able to make the little ones so gladsome, were it only for one night. The children enjoyed an interesting and profitable story, which was illustrated by the magic lantern.

The first gathering in the new year consisted of our widows and members of our adult Bible-classes, followed on two successive evenings by the women belonging to our three mothers' meetings. The loving fellowship which existed between the teachers and their poorer friends shone of friendship which had been formed will remain unbroken in the glory. Upon this first evening in the week of prayer, the subject was "Praise;" an hour of sweet thanksgiving was spent, when the presence of the Lord was manifestly felt and all hearts were refreshed and rejoiced. It was a time long to be remembered.

After this we had a bright evening for the costermongers in our immediate neighbourhood, and the men of our Sunday Bible-class formed the choir.

Two short addresses were given by those whose faces were familiar to the men through our Sunday morning services in Bird Fair, and some from among the audience were able to testify of the Lord's faithfulness in times of straitened circumstances and of trial; and they pleaded with the others to take the same Lord for their God. Hearts seemed to be softened, and readily responded, when two of our helpers volunteered to visit them in their homes; we are, therefore, looking for still greater blessing as the result of that evening's gathering.

At no time since our work began in East London, twenty years ago, have we been more cheered than by the evening for the factory girls attending our sewing classes, 150 in number. They behaved wonderfully well, beyond all our expectations.

Again we had recourse to the magic lantern to teach and influence them by pictures. The story was that of Daniel, told by one of the lady workers. The quiet attention given and interest shown in the Bible story proved that the efforts of past years had not been in vain, and that the heedless and thoughtless can be reached by hearts filled with this all-powerful Gospel. We are watching and praying for great blessing among the hundreds of young factory girls visited week by week in their work-rooms.

An invitation has yet to be given to the men and women with whom we come in contact at our Sunday-evening services in the lodging-houses, and whom we are seeking to influence for good.

To meet the pressing need at this time, and give a little extra help to those struggling with large families, we are having a weekly sewing-class while the weather is cold and work scarce. With gratitude to God we record that there has been no lack; all our deserving poor have had the gift of a warm garment, and their thankfulness is very great.

S.

FACTORY GIRLS.

It is computed that there are one hundred thousand girls engaged in the day in the factories and hives of industry of London. The fact is appalling when it is considered how utterly inadequate are the efforts—praiseworthy though they are in themselves—to cope with this vast and important element in our midst, and to influence it for Christ and eternity. It is matter for rejoicing when any additional efforts are made to get hold of the girls, such as has been attempted at the Bow Common hall of the North-East London Gospel Mission. About a month ago the hall was opened as an Institute for the poor girls, many of whom were found to be greatly in need of clothing. They are mostly now supplied with two new garments at half cost price for material, which is made up on the premises. On Thursday night 150 of the girls came in to a free tea, the number being increased for the subsequent meeting.

Mr. Paynter, who presided, gave a hearty word of welcome. Mr. Chorley, the worthy Superintendent. read the story of the man with an unclean spirit, and offered earnest prayer for a blessing.

The girls listened attentively to a sisterly address from Miss M. Garrett, of Brixton, in which she pleaded with them to decide for Christ. Loving words followed from Mr. John Kirk, of the Ragged School Union, Mr. Metcalf, the self-denying local Superintendent of the Mission, and others, and it was felt that the power of the Spirit was present.

WOMEN'S PRAYER UNION FOR CHINA.—Mr. McCarthy referred in last week's Christian to this Union. The Secretary is Miss Elizabeth Boyd, Dean House, Willesden-green, London, N.W.

THE SOLITARY IN FAMILIES.

There are not many mothers with hearts like Miss Macpherson's and Mrs. Merry's, whose Christmas joy consists in spending and being spent in giving some bright Christmas gift, and sending happy Christmas cheer to each member of a family of about 4000 sons and daughters of Great Britain on this side of the Atlantic.

Christmas season at the Boys' Home, Stratford, Ontario, means something more than a piece of roast meat and plum pudding. The roll-books are turned up, and the names of boys and girls, some of whom have grown to be men and women, fathers and mothers, each with his or her character and history, are gone over. To each one a letter, dictated by warm, motherly interest, is sent, and a parcel of useful books, Christmas cards, and pictures, is despatched. Thus the family ties of the large Transatlantic family are kept up. Several boys and girls come to the Home for their Christmas, and many ministering sisters from far and wide have the joy of strengthening the feeble ones, bringing the wandering sheep to the seeking Shepherd, and restoring the backsliders.

Nor is this the only part of the work in connection with Miss Macpherson's Home. Through the children access is gained to many homes, and those who know the thoroughly practical character of the work at the Home of Industry, in Commercial-street, London, will be able to form some estimate of the wholesome influence of this work in a country like Canada, where many colonists are far remote from the privileges of settled Church communities. Very many of the children who were rescued from lives of misery and want are now growing up into manhood; some are already useful citizens of Canada; some have gone out as missionaries to heathen lands; others, again, are serving the Lord as ministers of churches. Thus this work proves itself to be the missing link between the over-populated cities of Europe and the broad acres of Canada, which are waiting for the plough to make them bring forth bread to feed the hungry.

I am persuaded that a much more general interest would be shown and more ready supplies would be offered by willing hands if the work were better known in all its bearings, both on this and the other side of the Atlantic. There is no waste in machinery. All the workers give willingly their time and labour, and esteem it a privilege to give what help they can.

There is room for thousands more in Canada; the far West is only opened up, and offers great advantages to industrious working families.

"There is yet much land to be possessed," and by sending some of the super-abundance of city populations in Great Britain to the extensive fields of this Greater Britain—Canada—a more healthful circulation may be secured for both countries.

Our watch-night service at the Stratford Home was a time of real blessing to many of the young people, and fruit will doubtless be seen after many days.

THE VICTORIA READING CIRCLE has been instituted to promote the systematic reading of useful literature by means of a four years' course of home study. Certificates and diplomas are to be issued to those who go through the course. Any above the age of fourteen years may join. Particulars of the scheme may be had on sending a stamped and addressed envelope to the secretary, V.R.C., Young England Office, 56, Old Bailey, London.

"THE BLOOD OF THE MARTYRS."—Our readers will recollect the murder of Rev. G. Haddock, Methodist pastor at Sioux City, Iowa, because of his strong advocacy of Prohibition. An American paper says:—"Ten men are now under indictment for murder and conspiracy, two or three having confessed participation in the crime. The murder has of itself been a death-blow to the rum traffic in Sioux City. Of the one hundred and seventeen saloons open at the time of the murder, two-thirds have been closed, and the remainder are doomed. The whisky power made a fatal mistake when it counselled the death of George C. Haddock."

THE FIRST TWENTY-FIVE

OF A HUNDRED MISSIONARIES FOR CHINA.

OUR friends of the China Inland Mission have made us so accustomed to impressive farewells, that it is not easy for them to surpass themselves in this respect. But the meeting at Exeter Hall on Tuesday week was scarcely a whit behind any of the large number we have attended in years gone by. Mr. GEORGE WILLIAMS, who presided, got so warmed up that he proposed we should all get into a ship and go out to China together!

One thing that gave a peculiar interest to the occasion was the recent letter in The Times, describing the scope of the Chinese official proclamation, that instructs the people to welcome and live at peace with the Christian missionaries and converts. This remarkable statement has been reprinted by the Inland Mission, and was distributed among those present. Any who have not seen it in The Times should secure a copy from the office, 2, Pyrland-road, London, N.

Another notable thing was referred to in Mr. Stevenson's letter we published last week—the fact that Mr. Hudson Taylor and his fellow-workers have agreed to pray that God would this year send forth a hundred new missionaries into this vast and open field of labour. In his very interesting statement at Exeter Hall the other evening, Mr. BROOMHALL, the Secretary, said that those present who had already been chosen, and others in the meeting who were likely to devote themselves, would probably compose the first twenty-five of the hundred. Then, as he remarked, who could tell what might grow out of this meeting? The memorable gathering held about two years ago when the Cambridge seven bade good-bye to their native shores had been most fruitful in blessing; it might be that God would also set his seal on this gathering. Certainly, from the human standpoint, no result is more likely to follow. The proceedings throughout were such as to impress all present with the importance of the work and the marvellous opportunity that is now given to the Churches to enter in and possess the Empire of China for Christ.

Mr. Broomhall said the passage and outfit alone of a hundred new workers would be between £5000 and £6000, and the income of the Mission would require to be increased altogether by £10,000. If all the friends of missions were like the London dressmaker who has lately given £16 10s. of her hard-won earnings, and the aged widow who has sent gifts again and again out of her deep poverty towards this cause, there would be no difficulty about the money part of the glorious enterprise. There are now, said Mr. Broomhall, one hundred and ninety English workers in the field, including missionaries wives; for these he asked continual prayer, and also that the right men and women might be selected to go out as reinforcements.

Mr. Williams and Mr. Theodore Howard having given seasonable words of cheer and exhortation, it fell to the outgoing missionaries to testify. Of these there were on the platform fifteen—ten ladies and five gentlemen. We may here append their names; some of the ladies, however, will not leave England for a month or two:—

Messrs. J. Brock, Greenock; John Darroch, Motherwell; Wm. Russell, Coatbridge; F. J. Dymond, Exeter; and S. Pollard, London.

Misses Florence and Clara Ellis, Rhyl; Miss Ellis and Miss Knight, Chichester; Miss Burroughs, London; Miss Thompson, Manchester; Miss Gates, Tottenham; Miss McWalters, Glasgow; Miss Parker, Berks; and Miss Muir, Blackheath.

The testimonies were most touching in their earnestness and simple heartedness. The three first-named gentlemen spoke in a rich Scottish "brogue" that was welcome to some, though doubtless harsh to other ears. All were full of praise to God for the manner in which He had opened up the way for them to go to China, and they craved the prayers of stay-at-home Christians for the workers in the field, and also for the unsaved heathen there. The two Englishmen are going out in connection with the Bible the help and guidance of the Inland Mission; they were as fervent in speech and request as their northern brethren.

The ladies who gave brief words of testimony each spoke out of a full heart, and their remarks powerfully impressed the audience. Their key-note also was praise to the Lord in that He had removed hindrances in a very wonderful way, and given them the desire of their hearts. In some cases relatives and friends were at first unwilling to give consent, but this obstacle had in due time been moved out of the way, and probably these young friends are all the better qualified for the work before them, from the trials to faith and patience that they have endured. One of the ladies said she had offered herself several times to a Society, to be sent to India, but in each case the offer was declined. "The Society had no funds." We have not the least idea what Society it was, but it would appear they were deficient in faith as well as in funds. Perhaps if they exercised more of the one they would receive more of the other.

The last to speak was Mr. REGINALD RADCLIFFE, who pointed once again to the great opening of doors indicated by the official proclamation, and to the strong faith of the Mission in asking for 100 more workers. Why should it not be as in the olden time, when God did not save by units but in multitudes? Mr. Graham Brown had written to him from China saying they must put in, not the sickle but the scythe; but he would go further and say, Let us have the steam-propelled mowing machine. Our God is a God of mighty power and mighty love; let us ask and believe great things of Him. Mr. Radcliffe said there was in the meeting a Church of England clergyman who has lately given up his "living," and is going out as a missionary to India; another is about to go to North Africa.

We were dismissed from this warm atmosphere of missionary zeal by the welcome announcement that in a short time we should be called together again in the same place to welcome Mr. Hudson Taylor, who is now on the way home from China.

At the valedictory service held on Sunday evening last, at Green Lanes Wesleyan Chapel, the platform was occupied by the missionaries. Brief addresses were given by all these. As we listened to their simple recitals we could not help feeling that it would be well if such a departure from the usual mode of conducting Divine service were frequently adopted in all the churches. Nothing could be more calculated to stimulate missionary zeal or to lead to heart-consecration.

Other farewell meetings of this party were held as follows:—On Wednesday (the evening following that at Exeter Hall), Home of Industry, Spitalfields; Thurs., Vernon Baptist Chapel (Mr. Sawday's); Fri., Bible Christian Chapel, Lee; Mon., Metropolitan Tabernacle; Tues., Bible Christian Jubilee Chapel; Wed., Farewell Communion at Highgate-road Baptist Chapel. On Thursday (this day) the first party sails.

REV. DR. A. J. GORDON, of Boston, U.S., has begun a series of twenty-five Sunday evening lectures on the Book of Revelation. The first was on "The Door of Heaven Opened." They are attracting a wide interest and attention. The announced themes indicate that the course will be of great value. Dr. Gordon will bring to these lectures some of the choicest researches of his life.

THE MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT made a special effort on the 18th instant at Craven Hall, Regent-street, to gather in some of the foreign women who frequent that locality. A large number responded to the invitations distributed by the workers, French and German tracts and appeals being judiciously given away during the earlier hours in the streets and surrounding neighbourhood. Many German women attended, but very few French women came in. Of the English young women and girls who attended many were of very tender years—one young creature being only sixteen years of age, and the mother of a sickly infant. Many seemed impressed with the earnest pleadings which were made, and opportunity of escape from their life of sin was freely offered by Mr. Christien, in the simple and practical address which he delivered in closing the meeting. Already the meeting has proved to have been a blessing, through the mercy of God.

THE WANTS OF THE POOR.

"MAN wants but little here below," we are accustomed to say or sing. Very true; but, when that little is itself a-wanting, we are not much in the mood for philosophising over it. Something to eat and something to wear, and something to thaw the wintry atmosphere—where these elementary wants can scarcely be met, one does not wonder at the doleful plaint: "It is a hard matter to live." Such were the words used by a poor woman one evening last week when she came, with others, to share in the bounty of the London Samaritan Society, at their office, 98, High-street, Homerton, E. It was one of the occasions for distributing food. clothing, and coals to the deserving and destitute poor of that densely crowded East-end district.

There are, no doubt, many destitute who are not over-deserving; and, while these cannot be left to starve, it is only discreet to discriminate. This Mr. J. J. Jones is careful to do. He has the assistance of some who have known the neighbourhood long, and, where the need is genuine, it is at once supplied, as far as the resources of the Mission will allow. In doubtful cases, rigid inquiry is made as to whether the charity given will not go to bolster up habits of indolence and intemperance,

Some of the facts recited by the stream of applicants were most pathetic. No work to do, was the almost universal cry. "If I could get a little work, I should not come here and trouble you, I can tell you," said an old woman whose husband had been confined to his room "six months last Saturday." She would be thankful for anything, but "a bit of fire" was her chief request, as the invalid needed warmth night and day. "I have only earned 6s. 3d. since Christmas," quoth the father of five children; and one of them but five months old. Another said he had earned the magnificent sum of eighteen-pence in three weeks. A respectable-looking mother could not send her daughter to a situation for want of clothing. Her husband had only done a week's work out of five. A woman, whose husband had been unable to do any work for three months, had half-a-crown and five loaves a week from the parish—not too much certainly to keep seven stomachs going.

"If you had an old pair of trousers," was the timid remark of "a hard-working honest man" (as he was vouched to be), when asked what he needed most. He had been in the infirmary twelve weeks, and out of work since August. He tried to earn a few coppers by mending kettles, clocks, &c., and so, with a wife and child, got along the best way he could. "A little bread or something," he said, would be very welcome. A frequent question asked by Mr. Jones was, "How do you manage to live?" Said one woman in reply, "I have been pawning every thing I could. I have not got a chair left, or a sheet upon a bed. My boy went to school to-day without a bit of breakfast within his lips." In response to a similar question, an old man, who has lived at Hackney and Homerton seventy-one years, said he had sold or pledged all the fruit of his life's savings. Neither his wife nor himself was able to work. When it was suggested to some that they might go into "the House," it was touching to see how they clung to the family roof-tree, barren of comfort though it be. Who can blame them?

The cases we have mentioned are but samples. Of the many who applied, with one or two exceptions, where inquiries were to be made, none were sent empty away. Neither will any needy ones be sent away in the weeks to come, if those who have a heart to feel have also a mind to help in this true Samaritan work.

Another branch of the Mission is the furnishing of boots and clothing to children who attend Board Schools. Those who may have read the recent articles in The Globe, on the condition of these children, will not require to be convinced of the crying need that exists. The teachers are only too glad to be the medium of distributing these articles to the children who are in sorest

Notes and Comments.

OUR next portrait and sketch will be those of the veteran evangelist, Richard Weaver, who is this week conducting Gospel meetings at Mr. Hatton's church in Little Wild-street, Drury-lane.

We are thankful to report that, contrary to all human expectation, there has been during the past few days decided improvement in Earl Cavan's state, and his friends hope that God, in answer to prayer, will yet grant to his servant "a fresh lease of life."

The Apostle James wrote that we ought to say, "If the Lord will, we shall both live and do this or that." But is there any precept or example for saying, "If the Lord tarry, we will do this or that," which has become a usual form of expression with many estimable Christian workers?

In Monday's Daily News the startling headlines appeared: "Germany and France—War Impending;" "Uneasiness in Russia;" "Fighting strength of the rival Powers," &c. Our contemporary begins a leader by saying:—

> There is imminent risk of almost immediate war between France and Germany. This is not a statement to be lightly made, and we do not make it lightly.

We can but hope that such an unparalleled catastrophe will yet be averted, and all the friends of peace will not cease to cry to God on this behalf.

Parliament opens on the day of our issue. It seldom met with the clouds so dark on the whole horizon. Bitter partisanship would be wicked just now. Vast interests hang in the balance, and rash statesmanship would plunge nations into untold calamities. It is to be hoped that a hearing will be given to philanthropists who ought to be listened to in respect to poverty, certain social evils, and their remedies. The Nemesis of neglecting these matters is upon us.

We have received other letters to the same effect as the two following:—

> Dear Sir,—I see that you are inclined to attribute the Queen's Epiphany offerings at the Chapel Royal to the influence of the Empress Eugénie. It may be a satisfaction to you to know that gold, frankincense, and myrrh, have been offered on the Epiphany in the Chapel Royal from time immemorial, and that the custom is not an innovation due to Roman Catholic influence.
> Yours faithfully, X. Y. Z.
> Lyndhurst, Hants.

> Your note conveys to my mind, and may be to many who are not cognisant of the facts, that our Queen has imported a seemingly Romish office at the instigation of the ex-Empress, who is, I take it, more a sister in affliction than aught else.

The insertion of the note referred to was an oversight which we regret.

We trust that the story which comes to us from Manchester, of the appearance of a blind man in the police court charged with "indecent conduct" in the Wesleyan Chapel, Urmston, has been told with such brevity that the serious nature of the case has not been made evident; otherwise there would appear to have been but little grounds for so grave a course. If nothing more was urged against the blind man than that of impulsively protesting against the practice of reading out the hymns verse by verse having been discontinued—a practice which, it was stated, was helpful to him on account of his infirmity—surely a body of Christian people ought to have been able to cast oil upon the troubled waters, and to have kept themselves and the blind member of the congregation out of the police court.

The Hospitals Association has projected a scheme which is likely to be of great benefit to the sick poor, and materially to lessen the labours of those who are interested in them. The scheme has two objects—to bring every parish or congregation, and even the remotest villages and hamlets, into relationship with the hospital system of the United Kingdom; and to provide a fully equipped ambulance system for each large centre of population. A communication with the secretary of the Association will immediately secure information as to the hospitals most suitable for the patients. This will prevent the loss of much valuable time, as well as much suffering, and even loss of life. Further details may be had from the secretary of the Hospitals Association, Norfolk House, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

Familiarity with poverty would seem in some natures to breed cruelty as well as contempt. A specially heartless case has been made known through the daily Press, in which a London workhouse night porter superciliously refused to shelter a destitute woman and child, during the recent terrible weather. The Guardians, by a large majority, have censured the offending official. It is time that Bumbledom and beadledom were taught their true relations to the sons and daughters of sorrow.

Wide awake and practical as ever, Dr. Cuyler, in a recent issue of The New York Evangelist, has an article with "Tobogganning" for a text. Here is his "application:"—

> As I look at the merry groups starting off on the slippery slide, they suggest to me (as many another innocent thing did to the Great Teacher) some profitable truths which may bring forth fruit. This world is full of slippery places, and we all have need to be constantly crying, "O Lord, hold me up!" And when we venture wilfully to start our toboggan in the direction of loose doctrines in the pulpit, or loose practices in business, or in home life, or in our religious life, we start on a downward track, in which it is not easy to stop. At the end of the swift slide are broken characters and broken hearts.

The "Word Competition" craze, which can on no ground be commended, is breaking out into channels still more damaging to public morals. In brief, it is becoming a vast gambling agency; all the more hurtful because it is within the scope of slender purses. We wonder that the police have not taken action in bringing offenders to book; we wonder still more that respectable journals degrade their columns by inserting such lottery advertisements.

The "prize puzzle" system, in which the general consensus of opinion rules the destination of the prizes, and into which, therefore, the element of chance enters largely, appears to us also to be a demoralising one, to which no newspaper, with a reputation to lose, should stoop. It savours too much of the betting ring, and tends to discount the worth of the old-fashioned virtues of patient, plodding, honest industry.

An esteemed contemporary has a strong article on this subject, but in its own columns is advertised a Prize Competition for the benefit of an Orphan Home: 20s., 10s., 5s., for the twelve most beautiful Psalms in the Bible, decided by votes of competitors who pay 1s. each. It is simple profanity to put the word of inspiration to the vote after this fashion. The lady who advertises cannot have considered what she was doing; and we feel sure the esteemed and beloved sister whose Home is mentioned, would be far from sanctioning such trifling with holy things.

The Church Missionary Society has arranged for special meetings and services to be held simultaneously in all parts of London and its neighbourhood in the second week of February. They will be several hundred in number. At many churches the whole week will be occupied with a succession of meetings and services. Further particulars will be given next week.

Last week we announced that a series of meetings was arranged to be held at Cambridge University, partly with a view to counteract doctrinal errors that have been imbibed. On this subject, the correspondent of The Record writes to that paper:—

> A strange and sorrowful recrudescence of the heresy of "Brother Prince" of the Agapemone has infected some men who have left the University, and who had won a great and deserved influence in God's work while here; and their aberration, I am very sure, has been already overruled for good, above all things in reminding "them that profess godliness" that there is no security against the worst errors when the supreme authority of the written Word is once trifled with in favour of any supposed co-ordinate or higher guidance.

The deplorable catastrophe at a Hebrew Dramatic Club in Spitalfields last week, by which nearly twenty lives were lost, has suggested to The Jewish World the need of inspection and control of private clubs. That need is becoming more urgent every week; not because of faulty arrangements as to egress, so much as of the immunity they give to unlimited secret indulgence in drink. The evil is confessedly difficult to meet, because simple justice would demand that the same treatment be meted out to the clubs of the rich as of the poor. But some means of staying this insidious plague ought to be devised, and that speedily.

We note with pleasure that Prebendary Billing, Rector of Spitalfields, has written to Dr. Adler, the Jewish Rabbi, expressing deep sorrow at the calamity, and offering to assist in relieving the wants of the mourners.

Mr. H. M. Stanley has left our shores for Africa, on the merciful errand of relieving the beleagured Emin Bey. We earnestly trust he may, by the blessing of God, be as successful as he was in his search for Livingstone; and that, without putting into actual use the deadly "Maxim gun," which fires off 600 rounds a minute.

We have received several letters, discussing, pro and con, the question recently asked by Rev. G. E. Thomas, whether some of the saints will be left (because unfaithful and unworthy) to go through the Great Tribulation at the close of this dispensation, while those who are caught up to meet the Lord in the air will consist only of those who are faithful and worthy. Wherein that worthiness consists differs according to the views of those who advocate this division of the saints—some think holiness, others baptism, others belief in the Lord's second advent, will be the test.

But a larger question is raised by our correspondent, Mr. Shackleton, in his letter on "The Secret Rapture Theory," p. 16. He says that, having once held this view, he abandoned it because when put to the test he had been unable to find one passage of Scripture which plainly teaches it. Of course, if there is no such secret rapture as he denies, and no coming of Christ until the close of the Tribulation, there is no room for the question stated in the preceding note.

Other than Futurist interpreters will question the seven years' reign of a future Antichrist. But one thing at a time. We shall be interested to have, in reply to Mr. Shackleton's letter, any such texts as he declares himself unable to find; only remarking that we have not space for long correspondence.

Before the memory of the late Lord Iddesleigh is dimmed by coming events, it will be useful to note a few of the terms in which he has been spoken of. Dean Vaughan preaching in the Temple hoped that his high sense of duty, his resoluteness in refusing the evil and choosing the good, his entire freedom from political rivalries and bitternesses, would be a gracious memory of healing influence over partisanship. "He has been in this neighbourhood a friend and brother to the utmost of his power to all" was the testimony of the Bishop of Exeter. Archdeacon Farrar at Sandringham spoke of his simplicity; superiority to vulgar arts of ambition; his modesty, ever ready to give way; his high minded patriotism, and his stainless purity of conduct. A deeply interesting letter of the late Earl's son in The Baptist of last week shows that these Christian virtues sprang from Christian faith.

The Nonconformist and Independent regards the proclamation of the Chinese Government in relation to the rights of missionaries and Christian converts, and the respect it claims for Christianity, as likely to rank in the history of the Christian Church with the conversion of Constantine.

A correspondent writes to us as follows:—

> I was glad to see in last week's CHRISTIAN attention drawn to the fact that references to the work of God in the world, as indicated in your columns, had enhanced the interest and value of the sermons of a parish clergyman. There is no one thing that astonishes me more than the habitual ignoring on the part of both Conformist and Nonconformist ministers (and I have wide opportunities of judging) of the remarkable facts which are transpiring in reference to the passing away of false religious systems and the progress of the kingdom of Christ. There are numbers in their congregations who are in total ignorance of these unprecedented events. Few things would more tend to convince men of the supernatural power of Christianity than reference to them. Silence about them is an inconceivable loss to congregations. Certain it is that the most vigorous Christian communities are those which are differently treated.

The New York Graphic has been printing monstrous cartoons of the drink evil, and has received the praise of prominent persons. We wish our influential illustrated weeklies would lend a hand, in this way, at grappling with the liquor evil, by fostering a public sentiment against it.

"Bull Fight in Paris" were the startling words that recently appeared on the newspaper placards. For the first time in this generation has such a spectacle been exhibited. An immense multitude crowded the great hall of the Hippodrome to see it.

To expose men to deadly wounds, and to infuriate to agony God's creatures, was for this multitude an evident gratification. Surely with such a fact before us we may treat with scorn the so-called philosophic notion of certain evolutionists that time and civilisation will improve the human race. Give men pure Christianity, and they improve; let them discard Christianity, and they retrograde into barbarism, and imitate the old pagans.

Dr. Pentecost writes in the New York Independent, and in his own magazine, Words and Weapons, strongly advocating the abolition of the Week of Prayer at the commencement of the year. He argues that it has served its purpose, and has now become too formal and mechanical in its arrangements. In many churches, he says, evangelistic efforts which ought to be in constant operation, are postponed till the prayer week and are relaxed when it is over. With our radical friend we deplore that such should be the case, but we scarcely see how the abolition of the Week as a season of special prayer would cure these evils. Would not matters be worse than before? Besides, the "Week" is worth preserving, if only as affording a manifestation of Christian unity.

Are we in the ninth century or in the nineteenth? We are constrained to ask the question by reading this paragraph in a New York paper:—

> Dr. John Hall gives it as his opinion that a ruling elder is qualified to pronounce the benediction at the close of a service.

We are intensely curious to know on what Scriptural or other authoritative basis Dr. Hall draws the line at "a ruling elder." Why not a deacon? Why not any church-member of mature age and consistent character?

The Times of Thursday last contained an article of three columns concerning the Sandwich Islands, now called the Hawaiian Kingdom. The monarchy is constitutional, after the model of England. The Judicature approaches perfection, with an excellent civil code. The system of free public schools is of the same admirable nature. The Sabbath is strictly observed. The commerce, in proportion to the population, is without an equal in the world, and renders the kingdom, in resources and stability, the most important in the Pacific Ocean. All this is traced to the missionary enterprise of about seventy years. "The missionaries," says the writer, "have bequeathed to posterity a noble monument of self-sacrifice and labour."

Mr. Moody is now in Chicago, making arrangements for the starting of a Training School for Christian workers, towards which 250,000 dollars have been contributed; he is expected to remain in the city for three months. His aim in planting the school in Chicago, says The Record of that city, "is to carry the Gospel to as many of the homes of the people as is possible, and to help men and women to become skilful workmen in Christ's vineyard."

We heartily bespeak attention to "Able Ministers: a Sermon," by Rev. H. M. Williamson, whose timely and valuable paper, "Prayer, not Conference, the need of the Times," tended, we believe, not a little to give a devotional and prayerful character to the recent Week of Prayer. The sermon is published by Messrs. Wm. Strain & Sons, Belfast.

Mr. Douglas Russell in an exhaustive letter points out the errors taught by Swedenborg, to which we alluded on the 6th inst. Not only must we part with ten books of the Old Testament, Acts, and the Epistles of the New, but also, through the utter perversion of what remains, with all the truths most valued by the Christian Church, if we accept the statements of this "filthy dreamer," as Wesley styled him. The subtlety by which his tenets are now being propagated, under the titles of the "New Age Mission," the "New Church," &c., is shown by the following, from the pen of one of its advocates:—

> I will now close with the words of John Wesley: "We may now burn all our books of Theology: God has sent us a teacher from heaven, and in the doctrines of Swedenborg we may learn all that is necessary for us to know."

Thus Wesley's words, written satirically, are taken from their connection, the note of exclamation (!) removed, to convey an impression exactly opposite to that originally intended.

So far from Wesley endorsing the anti-Scriptural teachings of this false prophet, in a review of his last and largest book (see Wesley's Works, vol. xiii. pp. 425—448), he characterises its contents as "blasphemy joined with consummate nonsense," comparing them with the insane ravings of Behmen (German Mystic of the sixteenth century); and, after quoting a number of solemn Scriptures concerning the future doom of the finally unbelieving, he concludes thus:—

> Who illuminated Jacob Behmen or Baron Swedenborg flatly to contradict these things? It could not be the God of the holy Prophets, for He is always consistent with Himself. Certainly it was the spirit of darkness. And, indeed, "the light which was in them was darkness," while they laboured to kill the never-dying worm, and to put out the unquenchable fire! And with what face can any that profess to believe the Bible give any countenance to these dreamers? that filthy dreamer (Swedenborg) in particular. O, my brethren, let none of you that fear God recommend such a writer any more, much less labour to make the deadly poison palatable by sweetening it with all care! All his folly and nonsense we may excuse, but not his making God a liar; not his contradicting, in so open and flagrant a manner, the whole oracles of God. True, his tales are often exceeding lively, and as entertaining as the tales of the fairies; but I dare not give up my Bible for them, and I must give up one or the other. If the preceding extracts are from God, then the Bible is only a fable; but if "all Scriptures are given by inspiration of God," then let these dreams sink into the pit from whence they came.

> Wakefield, May 9, 1782. JOHN WESLEY.

In our review of a new monthly periodical, The Young Man, we said that its contents were "bright and sparkling." We also said that it showed signs of going beyond evangelical lines in its doctrinal and practical teaching. Now we are nothing if we are not evangelical; it is, therefore, not quite fair for The Young Man to advertise in large type, "'Bright and sparkling'—The Christian," without mentioning our remarks on the other side. Ethics in advertising should not be disregarded.

Letters to the Editor.

SOCIAL PURITY.

Sir,—Will any reader of The Christian kindly give me or tell me where I may get information on the following points?—

(1) The social condition, as to purity, of races that have risen to be nations, and (2) of nations that have fallen and decayed. (3) The effects, physically and socially, of impurity in the individual. (Rev.) W. Fisher.

New Farnley, Leeds.

MR. SPENCER WALTON AND HOLINESS.

Dear Sir,—The following quotation from Hay McDowall Grant has been such a help to me that I am sure you will not mind passing it on. It will just come at the right time with the Sinless Perfection error spreading. "Christian perfection is not perfection in the flesh, but the power of Christ fully manifested in us as well as for us."

I know I am accused of holding the former, and so doors of usefulness are closed against me; this will, I think, refute that charge. May God keep us true to his Word.—Yours very truly,

W. Spencer Walton.

THE SECRET RAPTURE THEORY.

Sir,—I have looked into many recent works on prophecy, and I find that the majority of writers of the futurist school advocate the Secret Rapture theory. Believing that this theory is subversive of the true doctrine of the Second Advent, I should be glad to correspond with any of your readers who are undecided on the subject.

Some years ago, when a zealous supporter of this theory, I was led to submit it to the test of Scripture, in order to assure myself that it rested upon a sound foundation. Much to my chagrin, I soon saw that there was no way of avoiding the following conclusions—that the doctrine is nowhere stated in plain words; that it is directly contradicted by many passages, and that the arguments by which it is supported collapse at once when fairly tested by Scripture, and some of them are actual mis-statements of the facts of Scripture with respect to the connection in which certain Greek words occur.

In many quarters this theory is regarded as a kind of shibboleth, or test of orthodoxy, and there are some who would fain make it a sine-quâ-non to such an extent that the non-acceptance of it would be a ground for refusing admission to the Lord's table. It is also becoming a common habit to stigmatise those who dissent from the doctrine as unspiritual.

Some time ago a very gracious writer, in an article in Footsteps of Truth, characterised as half-taught students of prophecy those Christians who were expecting some events to occur before the Second Advent. I freely own that I am a very half-taught student, but there are many who think with me who could not be thus designated. I subjoin the opinion of one who has persistently and prayerfully studied the Bible through a long lifetime and who is entitled to a respectful hearing.

"Mr. Müller replied in public to written questions, one of which was this, 'Are we to expect our Lord's return at any moment, or that certain events are to be fulfilled before He comes again!' His answer was, 'I know that on this subject there is great diversity of judgment, and I do not wish to force on other persons the light I have myself. The subject, however, is not new to me; for having been a careful, diligent student of the Bible for nearly fifty years, my mind has long been settled on this point, and I have not the shadow of doubt about it. The Scriptures declare plainly that the Lord Jesus will not come until the apostasy shall have taken place,* and the personal Antichrist shall have been revealed as seen in 2 Thess. ii. Many other portions also of the Word of God distinctly teach that certain events are to be fulfilled before the return of our Lord Jesus Christ." — Preaching Tours and Missionary Labours of George Müller.

Yours faithfully, Edmund Shackleton.

MR. WOOD, OF AUSTRALIA.

Dear Sir,—We feel it our painful duty to speak yet more strongly about the manifestations in connection with Mr. Wood's work, than we did even in our previous notice of them in The Christian Herald. And this all the more because paragraphs from Australian papers were once inserted in The Christian Herald, commending Mr. Wood as a successful and acceptable evangelist, as well as a man much used of God in the healing of the sick.

Letters which we received from Australia confirmed us in the belief that Mr. Wood was a man of God, and as such we were prepared to welcome him when he came to England for the Conference on Holiness and Healing in the summer of 1885. Meanwhile, we received a letter from himself, describing his own experience in receiving the baptism of the Holy Ghost and a gift of healing. This, together with his manner of laying on hands, caused us uneasiness, and he was not therefore formally invited by Mr. Boardman to the Conference.

One lady from Australia, indeed, charged him with being a mesmerist, but she did not give proof sufficient to condemn a brother. When, however, Mr. Wood commenced to conduct meetings for the baptism of the Holy Ghost, and led persons who attended them to expect some extraordinary physical manifestations, which we could not see warranted in Scripture, we felt obliged to withdraw and cease any connection with his work for at least seventeen months past.

"By their fruits ye shall know them." We do not read in the Gospels or in the Acts of the Apostles that those who were saved or healed by the grace of God rolled on the floor or danced with frenzy. This was, indeed, characteristic of Pythonesses and persons possessed of an evil spirit, but was far from the character of the first disciples, who "did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart, praising God, and having favour with all the people."

We have the deepest compassion for those who come under the influence of this mingled mesmerism and spiritualism, and we quote a letter from one of those over whom the spell was broken through reading an article on spiritualism in "Thy Healer."

To Mr. W. Brown, Servant, University Hospital, Gower-street.

Dear Brother in Christ,—I feel I must write and tell you how grieved I am for having said, or done anything that has pained you; the Word of God teaches us to confess our faults one to another; this I do humbly, asking your forgiveness. I cannot remember all I said, but I believe you will receive this in the same spirit in which it is sent. Oh, how thankful I am to God that He has brought me out of all the doctrines of devils taught by Mr. Wood and Mr. Pittaway; it seems to me to be nothing less than spiritualism and mesmerism! One thing I am certain, it is not of God.

Praise God! the few at Mill-street are beginning to see it is wrong, and I think, before long, they will give it all up.

I am filled with grief when I think how I have been led by evil spirits and how the name of my precious Jesus has been ridiculed through me, but I did it ignorantly, and for this cause obtained mercy. I was sincere, and believed I was doing the will of God. I thank God again and again for saving me from such devilry.

Please tell Marion that she spoke the truth when she said things at Mill-street were not of the Spirit. I am very very sorry for having grieved her, but I know she will forgive me.

Dear brother, don't let her go to Brighton again, or hold communication with Wood or Pittaway; their influence is terrible. I hope I shall never see them again. I would not go to their home now on any consideration. Will you tell Brother Sussex from me not to go to any of Wood's meetings, or to look for a manifestation, but to look only to Jesus, and to seek to be filled with his love, and to get a knowledge of the Word of God, and be taught by the Holy Spirit alone. Wood is a wolf in sheep's clothing.—Yours in the love of Jesus.

36, Ashford-road, Maidstone, Dec., 1886. A. Hanson.

We are thankful to know that others, besides Mr. Brown, to whom this is written, and the writer herself, have escaped from the influence of Mr. Wood, and we pray for him and for those who are deluded by him, that God may speedily deliver them.

OBITUARY.

REV. E. JACKSON.

We regret to record the death of Rev. Joseph E. Jackson, Methodist minister, of Cockermouth, at the early age of 27. He was a minister of great promise, and greatly beloved in the circuits in which he had laboured.

MRS. STRIBLING, MADAGASCAR.

By the death of Mrs. Stribling, wife of Rev. E. H. Stribling, of Fihaonana, Madagascar, the London Missionary Society has lost one of its most valuable female agents, and her husband a helpmeet for the station he occupied, whose loss is irreparable. Mrs. Stribling died at Antananarivo, on November 29, only twelve days after her return from England.

MLLE. DE QUETTEVILLE,

the daughter of Jean de Quetteville, the Apostle of the Channel Islands, died recently at Guernsey, aged eighty-eight years. She was a true philanthropist, helping forward every good work; a true friend of the poor and the sorrowful. When, through old age, her father could no longer edit The Methodist Magazine, Mlle. de Quetteville very efficiently carried on his work.

REV. J. JONES, B.A.

This well-known Baptist minister has just entered into rest. One of the early students of old Stepney College, Mr. Jones commenced his ministry nearly forty years ago, at Folkestone, removing subsequently to Brixton-hill, London. He was President of the London Baptist Association in 1874, and was on the Missionary Committee in 1879. He was obliged to relinquish regular pastoral work three years ago.

MRS. CLIFT.

This lady, the founder and leader of a community known as "The Holiness Church," and conductor of The Holiness Advocate, died last week, and was buried on Saturday at Abney Park Cemetery, in the presence of many friends and mourners. Those who knew the deceased honoured her for sincerity and zeal, and could not fail to recognise her ability. Mainly through her influence Holiness Churches have been established at five or six centres in London, besides several places in Kent and Yorkshire. We believe this sect can show many examples of saintly and consecrated life, but its teaching very closely approaches sinless perfection in the flesh.

Requests for Praise and Prayer.

PRAISE.—For blessing given at meetings held at Peterhead, N.B., by Mr. F. E. Marsh.

PRAYER.—For Mr. F. E. Marsh, at Fraserburgh, N.B., January 30 to February 13.——That God may so influence the minds and hearts of our people, and of our legislators, that at the approaching Session of Parliament an Act may be passed which will stop the sale of intoxicating liquors on Sunday, throughout the whole of England.——For blessing on the work and workers of the Sailors' Mission, Aberdeen.——For blessing on a Gospel Mission being conducted at Folkestone by Mr. Henry Thorne, which is to terminate on the 31st inst.; and for another, to be conducted by him at Jersey, from February 5 to 21.

PALESTINE.—An earnest effort is being made to open up a Mission in the villages where our Lord went about teaching and preaching and healing. A lady of experience, and knowing the Arabic language, is waiting to go and open up this work, which has been begun among the men, but not among the women. £100 a year is required for each village, to hire rooms and native teachers, and keep up the work. Miss Webb, Vauxhall Bridge-road, S.W., will supply fuller information.

THE PROOF OF THE PUDDING.—A country merchant in Alabama sells fifty pairs of children's shoes where he formerly sold one. The father used to drink up the shoe money, and the children went bare-foot. He also sells quantities of women's hats and bonnets, and never sold anything of the kind before Prohibition was adopted. The husband had no money, so the wives made their own bonnets out of calico and splits; now there is no gallon jug under the bed, and women have decent headgear, and even ribbon.—The Voice.

Mr. Wookey in Manchester.

IN the handsome new hall erected by Messrs. Crossley Bros., Manchester, Mr. J. B. Wookey is conducting a very successful mission. He commenced on Saturday, January 15, by a meeting for the workers. The meeting on the following Sunday evening will be memorable to many. The speaker's fervent words went straight to the hearts of the ungodly, and at the close about sixty names were given in of those who professed to seek and find salvation. Throughout the week the meetings were largely attended, and sinners were found seeking pardon through the atoning blood of the Lord Jesus Christ.

As the mission advances the interest increases, and the workers are confident that the last days will be the best. Will your readers pray that God may yet more abundantly bless his servant's labours here. J. McC.

Evangelistic Mission.

THE thirteenth anniversary of the Malden Hall branch of this Mission was held last Thursday. The first part of the afternoon meeting was devoted to prayer and praise following upon a brief general review of the Mission's operations, including a new start in the villages of Hampshire by one converted some years ago at Malden Hall, and the departure of Mr. Edward Hurditch for twelve months' evangelising in Australia.

Mr. J. Denham Smith gave an address on the regulating effect for good of holding fast Christ as the believer's Head in all things. Mr. J. G. McVicker followed, on brotherly unity. Future numbers of Footsteps of Truth will contain these addresses in full. Mr. C. Russell Hurditch closed by expressing earnest longing for the manifest Christian activity which should flow from the precious truths to which utterance had been given.

After a brief interval for tea, Mr. C. Robson gave an interesting outline of the progress of the work in the hall during the year. He spoke of the spirit of unity that prevailed amongst all the workers, and hoped for still further progress in the future. The hall is well filled on Sunday evenings, sometimes crowded; at the men's class about 120 are on the books, with about eighty in attendance every Sunday afternoon. Addresses of considerable freshness and power followed, by Dr. McKilliam, Messrs. Abraham Wallis, Charles Inglis, James Stanley, and a few words from a young brother about to leave for China. The meetings throughout were marked with much interest.

PALESTINE EXPLORATION FUND.—The new Quarterly Statement is instructive in regard to the work of exploration in Palestine. Very interesting accounts of recent discoveries are given, and show how full of antiquities is this wonderful land. Canon Tristram states, as a result of the labours of the Fund, that now in Western Palestine alone there are 434 identified names of places out of a total of 622.

THE LAMBETH BATHS.—At the annual meeting of the Temperance Society, held at this place of popular entertainment last week, Mr. J. H. Raper said one of the results of inquiry is that the use of alcohol is altogether a mistake—that the human body, under any conditions of cold or heat, is better without it. Exhaustive experiments have demonstrated the relaxing effect of alcohol, even when taken in small quantities. Rev. G. M. Murphy said it was impossible to calculate how much injury was done, not only to individuals, but to nations by its use, as its effects had often accounted for the actions of those in high places.

LADIES' SAMARITAN SOCIETY.—The annual meeting of this Society, which is in connection with the National Hospital for Paralysis and Epilepsy, was held last week. During the year 577 deserving patients were relieved with small grants of money; 93 parcels of clothing were distributed, the expenses of many to the seaside defrayed, besides suitable relief given in other ways. It was stated that the anticipated opening of new wards in the adjacent hospital would necessitate an increase in the resources of the Society, so as to assist destitute patients in a way for which the hospital does not provide. The office of the Society

Irish Church Missions.

THERE was an excellent attendance on Monday week at the annual prayer-meeting of this Society, in Buckingham-street. Mr. R. Nugent, who presided, said steady advance had been made in many ways, although the year had been one of unprecedented political agitation and disturbance. They had much also to pray for. They wanted a suitable man to fill the vacant rectory of Clifden. The Society also is in need of clergymen of the right stamp for Dublin, Belfast, Errislannan, and Ardrahan. The remainder of the afternoon was spent in prayer, Rev. D. F. Grahame, Rev. Dullas Harington, Rev. J. B. Girdon, Rev. Gilbert Karney, Rev. Nevile Sherbrooke, Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe, and Bishop Perry being amongst those who led the meeting. It was interesting to learn that while the meeting in London was the central one, meetings for prayer on behalf of the Society were also held in Dublin, Leamington, Derby, Clifton, Southampton, Bath, Leeds, and Hereford.

Death of a Scottish Philanthropist.

BY the death of Mr. George Freeland Barbour, of Bonskeid and Gryffe, who entered into rest on Saturday week, in his seventy-seventh year, Scotland is bereft of one of the finest exemplars of the Christian character which the present generation has seen. There was no part of this good man's life that was not vitally controlled by his faith; and in its admirable symmetry those who enjoyed the privilege of his friendship saw the happy embodiment of excellencies which are seldom found in combination. He was a great giver, who shrank from publicity, and who made every gift more precious by the beautiful feeling with which it was bestowed. Even when immersed in business in early life, as a great merchant in Manchester, he gave time and thought as well as money to each individual case where his help was required.

A constant friend of all forms of evangelistic work that promised to produce fruit, he was also a steady and loyal supporter of his own denomination, and in him the Free Church loses one of its most trusted office-bearers. The foreign field was ever much in his thoughts, and as President of the Scottish branch of the Presbyterian Mission in China, he achieved a work of which it is not too much to say that its far-reaching results will bless millions in the coming years. His fervent and childlike piety did not lead Mr. Barbour to exclude the welfare of the state from his solicitude and effort; on the contrary, he applied his Christianity to politics as to every other department of life, and manfully discharged his duty there without contracting a stain or disturbing the balance of his Christian character. In the movement on behalf of social purity he took a warm interest.

In 1846 Mr. Barbour settled in the Scottish capital, and it was at his residence in George-square, Edinburgh, that he breathed his last. Perthshire, in particular, will miss the good laird of Bonskeid, whose beautiful country home, near Pitlochry, was in the summer months a centre of attraction to distinguished Christian men from many lands. Mr. Barbour was an elder in the New North Church, Edinburgh.—Christian Leader.

MALOGA ABORIGINAL MISSION.—An interesting account of a camp meeting at this mission station, which commenced on November 5, is given by The Southern Cross. There was a very earnest spirit amongst the black people, and at the various prayer-meetings they took a prominent part. The meetings for praise and for repeating texts were full of inspiration. At other meetings several of the black men gave short addresses. During the week there were Bible and prayer meetings each day, and the whole period was one of great blessing both amongst the coloured and white people, of whom many were present. Mr. Matthews (the superintendent) was about to visit Melbourne and other places to bring before the notice of the Christian public more prominently the claims of the aborigines and the importance of mission work among them.

German Young Women in London.

NUMBERS of German young women, some mere girls, come to this country week after week, in the hope of finding employment. In nearly every case they are without friends, and unable to speak English. It is a matter of supreme importance that they should have some reliable place of call where they can seek counsel and advice from a Christian fellow-country-woman.

Mr. John Shrimpton and his co-workers have formed at 36, Hart-street, Bloomsbury, W.C., "A Christian Union of German Women in London." Its object is to promote the spiritual and temporal welfare of German young women. There was established, some three years ago, at the same address, an English and Foreign Women-Servants' Institute. The Institute is open daily, so that any German young woman is always able to get counsel and advice from the superintendent. The members of the Union meet at 36, Hart-street, on Sunday afternoons, when a Bible-class is held, and tea is provided, as many have to come from distant parts of the Metropolis. Other meetings are held. During three months sixty-four members have been enrolled. Signs are not wanting that much blessing has attended the weekly gatherings.

Any further information will gladly be given by Mr. John Shrimpton, 38, Lincoln's-inn-fields, W.C.

Mr. Arnot in Central Africa.

DEAR SIR,—You will be interested to hear that letters have been received again from my son, F. S. Arnot, dated March, 1886, from the Gavenganji country, where he has settled in a healthy locality, and is surrounded by many native villages, thus having access to thousands of natives within walkable distance. The portion of his diary which had gone astray has also reached home, in which he narrates the difficulties he met with, and the constant demands made by the native chiefs for presents, in order to allow him to pass through their territory. But in one case he found that the native chief acted with the greatest kindness, and insisted on giving him an ox, which he had to refuse, in case too large a gift would be expected in return, according to the usual custom.

The chief again pressed him to accept the ox, and said he would give him a receipt for it—all the same as if the money had been paid for it. In this we have an illustration from heathen Africa of God's grace, in not only giving us his own dear Son, but also giving the full assurance of life in Him, and commanding us "to buy without money and without price." The mode of granting the "receipt" also conveys a lesson. The chief took a small twig, and, after proclaiming the matter to the people, he broke it in two, then threw the one piece over his right shoulder, and the other piece over his left shoulder, and thus the matter is "forgotten," and if any of the natives ever refer to anything that has been settled it is considered scandalous.

It would be well if some young evangelists would take a lesson from the dark centre of Africa, and cease to bring up what God in grace says He has cast behind his back.—Yours in Him, WM. ARNOT.

Raywood House, Pollokshields, Jan. 18.

GATHERING UP THE FRAGMENTS.—Passing through one of our principal city thoroughfares one evening last week, at an hour when it was deserted by the usual throng of vehicles and passengers, we witnessed a suggestive incident. A man coming out of a restaurant went into the middle of the roadway, and immediately was surrounded by a number of street boys and girls, amongst whom what seemed like a free fight ensued. On inquiry we learnt that this is a nightly scene. The man brought out a quantity of broken victuals, which was scrambled for by the hungry children. "They will not stand in order, that each may receive a fair share," he said. It is a kindly act on the part of the managers of the restaurant referred to, and no doubt the same thing is done in many directions. Perhaps the hint, however, may be taken by some where the custom does not prevail.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Motherwell.—Mr. J. W. Moodie has held a three weeks' mission here. Many have professed conversion. Mr. Moodie has gone to open a mission in Eyemouth, for which place prayer is requested.

Hanwell Union Church.—Hatterchele Macher Kistheshe has been delivering Gospel addresses to large audiences here during the past week, and on Friday gave his lecture on "Africa: Customs of the Country and Personal Experiences."

Dr. F. W. Baedeker, writing from Stratford, Ont., on January 1, says:—I am going West as far as Winnipeg to visit German and Russian colonists, especially a colony of Mennonites who immigrated from South Russia. I shall be grateful for continued prayer.

Mr. James Sprunt, Superintendent of the West Marylebone Mission, has recently conducted a very successful mission at the Congregational Church, Petersfield, Hants. Members of the congregation, accompanied by the Sunday-school drum and fife band, paraded the town every evening during the mission.

Hertford.—Mr. Martin J. Hall, of the Children's Special Service Mission, had a week's services among the children here, from January 11 to 15. Drawing-room meetings were held in afternoons, and the evening gatherings averaged 250. Many, both teachers and children, expressed themselves thankful for the services.

St. Etienne, France.—M. Ed. Revel, formerly a soldier at Algiers, and known to many of our readers as a Christian worker, is now with Pastor Th. Vincent at St. Etienne. Three months ago they opened a new mission-hall, and the people crowded to the meetings. Already the preaching has been blessed to some souls. There are also many anxious ones. A school, held on Thursdays, is attended by about ninety children, who are taught to sew, and to know the Lord.

Mr. Spiers at Whetstone.—Rev. John Milnes writes:—A series of bright and helpful meetings have been conducted by Mr. Spiers, in Colonel Puget's school-room, Whetstone. A goodly proportion of those present remained for the after-meetings, and many avowed themselves to be the Lord's. In accordance with general desire, an additional meeting was held, which was larger than any of the previous ones, and pervaded by a most gracious influence. It is believed that many hearts have been opened by God's Spirit.

Mr. J. A. Vicary begins a few days' Gospel work at Landport on January 30, and goes thence to Shanklin for ten days.

Church Parochial Mission.—In addition to the engagements announced last week, the following are at work:—Rev. A. R. D'Arcy, at Loddon, Norfolk, and Rev. E. H. Warren, at St. Matthew's, Nottingham.

Children's Special Service Mission.—Last week we stated that Mr. Spiers was to hold a mission at the Congregational Church, Fetter-lane. Mr. E. Arrowsmith is about to commence services at the Vestry Hall, Hampstead, and Mr. Hall at Wandsworth-road.

LONDON CITY MISSION.—The present week is being set apart by the Mission as a week of special prayer for London. The missionaries, numbering 470, meet every evening at the Mission House, and with the officers of the Society spend two hours in prayer for a blessing on their work.

FELLOWSHIP.—The Hon. and Rev. Canon Pelham, Rector of Lambeth, has done a manly and a Christian act, says The Methodist Times, in stretching out the right hand of fellowship to the Wesleyan young men in his parish. Lambeth Chapel and the parish church have stood side by side for nearly one hundred years, but the chapel found the rector within its walls for the first time on the 10th inst., when Canon Pelham delivered an address, the occasion being the anniversary of the Bible-class.

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE LEAGUE.—At the conversazione of the National Temperance League, held last week, the Bishop of London dealt some trenchant blows against strong drink. Mr. Caine, M.P., dwelt strongly on the evils caused by the presence of the English army in Egypt. The most shameful was that caused by intemperance. In Cairo there are now between 400 and 500 public-houses, whereas, previously, there was scarcely one. The Khedive said that the liquor traffic gave him more trouble and sorrow than anything else; but he could do nothing to get rid of the notorious evils, being tied hand and foot by capitulations forced on them by Europeans.

CONTINENTAL and FOREIGN NOTES.

The Cremorne Mission, New York, founded by the late Jerry McAuley, is being carried on with success under the supervision of Mrs. McAuley.

Rev. Sam Jones has, it is said, chosen to accompany him in his work Rev. Mr. E. O. Excell, of Chicago, who has had considerable success as a musical evangelist.

Mr. J. Sherman, formerly a Roman Catholic priest, was baptized on Sunday, January 2, in Brooklyn, U.S., after a sermon from another convert, Rev. J. O'Connor.

Berlin.—A series of popular evangelistic meetings is being held in the City Mission-house every Sunday evening. The attendance and interest have been exceptionally good.—Anzeiger.

Week of Prayer.—At Berlin and Paris the attendance at the various meetings was somewhat affected by the extreme cold and snow. But simplicity of action and fraternal feeling were well manifested.

M. Reveillaud has conducted some very good Gospel meetings at Poitou in the midst of a Roman Catholic population. From 100 to 300 persons attended, and at the close earnestly begged him to come again.

Pastor Henri Blanc, of the Reformed Church, Vauvert, died on January 7 at the age of forty-five. As a distinguished Hebraist he was appointed a member of the commission for the preparation of a new revision of Ostervald's version of the Bible.

Messrs. Mateer and Parker (two of C. H. Spurgeon's evangelists) have had a hearty welcome from the Congregational churches in New South Wales. The Baptist churches have not availed themselves of their services, because they declined to confine their labours to that denomination.

The Sydney City Mission employs ten missionaries. The year closed with a deficit of £400. The extent of the good work done is admitted on all hands, and is not confined merely to visitation. Meetings of various kinds are held through the week, libraries formed, coffee-rooms opened, and religious services held on Sundays and week-days.

A barbarous sect has arisen in Saratof, Russia, whose principal dogma is that pain is an evil, which it would be a sin to allow any human creature to endure. Consequently all sick people should be strangled or suffocated. It appears that several murders have been committed by these fanatics, forty-two of whom have been arrested by the police.—Evangéliste.

Gossner Mission.—The fiftieth anniversary has been recently commemorated; this Mission to the Kohls of Central India was begun by a Roman Catholic priest who became converted to the truths of Protestantism; after his death the work was continued by a committee, and the churches now include forty thousand Christians, and a theological seminary for native pastors.

Madame Flourit, a devoted, loving Christian worker, passed away in December last. For nearly forty years she took the deepest practical interest in the moral protection of young girls. About seven years ago she gave up her business, and went to Paris to devote herself exclusively to Christian work, and last year she, with her friend, Miss Morgan, opened a Home for young girls of any nationality who were without family or situation. Her loss will be deeply felt.—Evangéliste.

The Armies of Europe.—The following has been published as the number of men now under arms, or available for fighting in case of war: Russia, 4,000,000 men; Germany, 2,500,000; France, 2,430,000, with probably 1,000,000 more if needed; Austria, 1,077,00; Italy, 2,400,000; and Turkey, 800,000. A total of about thirteen million men! What might not be produced if all these were consecrated to agriculture and the arts of peace? Christians, pray and labour that the Prince of Peace may establish his reign upon earth.—Témoin de la Vérité.

Belgium.—In a recent circular Pastor Gayat, of the Synodal Committee of Belgian Evangelisation, writes: Our pioneers have set their banner in twelve different localities. No help is to be expected from our present rulers, whose political and religious views are in direct opposition to ours. The small village of Itree deserves to be particularly mentioned. A labourer, in building his own house, added a wing to it for religious worship. Through private exertions the Gospel has been preached for the last five or six years at Ittre, and now the congregation numbers sixty souls, who will soon require an evangelist to live among them.

Georgia.—An earnest missionary, who is planting Sunday-schools in the State of Georgia, has recently made an extended tour over his field, and writes most encouragingly of the growth and permanence of the work, the increase in Bible knowledge, the interest in the preaching of the Word, and the improvement in singing. Eleven new buildings have been erected, five of which are churches and six school-houses, in all of which there is now regular preaching, and a constantly increasing attendance.

Liberia.—Here the heathen are coming, falling at the feet of Jesus, and calling on Him in their own tongue to have mercy on them. Seventy-five, mostly young persons, have found Jesus up to last night. Scores have professed to have found pardon. From all parts of the seaboard towns, and back to the frontier settlements, come the tidings of men and women being saved by scores. Seldom an hour for weeks, but shouts, or songs of praise, or cries for pardon, could be heard in different parts of the city; the work is going on.—British Weekly.

New Hebrides.—The latest tidings from the New Hebrides show that the French still cling to the nefarious project described by Dr. Inglis at the recent Protestant Convention in Glasgow. At Havannah Harbour the French soldiers continued hard at work, Sunday and week-day, erecting houses. Their assurances that their settlement has no political aim are evidently empty words. The natives at Havannah Harbour, in spite of all the efforts of the French to conciliate them, are wholly opposed to French annexation, and warmly resent the unprovoked invasion.—Christian Leader.

Melbourne.—Dr. Bevan's noon-day services on Thursdays promise to be a great success, an audience of about three hundred—composed mainly of business men—having gathered to the first of these services. We sincerely hope, says The Southern Cross, that the 300 may quickly grow to thrice 300, and see no reason why this should not be the case. Business will not suffer from that brief pause, and better things than business will greatly profit. Dr. Bevan is rendering a genuine public service by his action in this matter.

CAMDEN-ROAD Y.M.C.A.—The twenty-seventh annual meeting was held on Thursday evening, January 20, Mr. George Williams presiding. The report contained a record of much good work done in the past year, and not a few have testified to the spiritual blessing received. Rev. Dr. O'Brien gave a very practical address on "Purpose," and Rev. Dr. Clifford held the audience spell-bound by his masterly treatment of "The Culture of Faith."

KONIGSHEIM.—During last year ninety-eight ladies spent a season of quiet and refreshing in this House of Rest for Governesses and lady Christian workers at Weston-super-Mare. The Home has now been open five years, and has been the means not only of physical but soul refreshing to many, as testified by extracts from letters in the present report. All inquiries should be addressed to the hon. superintendent, Miss Fanny Bulkley, Edinburgh-place, Weston-super-Mare.

NATIONAL VIGILANCE ASSOCIATION.—The importance of the work undertaken by this body cannot be exaggerated, and recent notorious cases prove that there is need enough for action. The pamphlet containing the report presented at the annual meeting ought to be read by all who desire the welfare of the people, and especially the protection of young girls. Many overlook altogether the necessity for such work; indeed, know nothing whatever of the dangers so many are exposed to, and will hardly believe in their existence. To such this report should be presented, for it plainly shows in what grievous peril are young girls coming from the country and foreign places. Copies of the report can be had from the office of the National Vigilance Association, 267, Strand, W.C.

THE PEACE SOCIETY.—Mr. William Jones, the secretary of the Peace Society, has lately been actively engaged in delivering, both in London and the provinces, lectures on the evils of war and the advantages of arbitration as a proved means of obviating many international disputes and difficulties. His lectures have been rendered the more interesting by his graphic descriptions of his own observations when engaged as an honorary commissioner of the War Victims' Relief Fund, during and after the Franco-German War and the Russo-Turkish War. The committee have prepared, and widely circulated from their office, 47, New Broad-street, various useful pamphlets and tracts. One of the latter in particular, entitled "Where Have the Millions Gone?" is à propos

SECOND EDITION.

THE GOSPEL MALE CHORUS BOOK.

A COLLECTION OF

New Part Songs, Choruses, and Anthems,

Written and Arranged expressly for Male Voices

BY JAMES McGRANAHAN.

Tinted Covers, 1s. 6d.; Cloth Limp, 2s.; Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

To be had in either Tonic Sol-fa or Old Notation.

The GOSPEL MALE CHOIR was, during the last five months of the London Mission, a special feature of the meetings of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. There are, doubtless, many more who would wish to dedicate their voices to the service of the Master; and with the present volume (which is arranged for 1st and 2nd Tenor and 1st and 2nd Bass) in their hands, and the hearty co-operation of a few brethren like-minded, this wish can be easily gratified.

Says Mr. McGranahan:—"Organize a quartet, a double quartet, or better still, a chorus of male voices; and prove the power for good in the harmony of male voices when consecrated to the glory and service of our divine Master."

"In both Notations. Is specially prepared for Male Voices only. We can testify from personal hearing that these choruses are well harmonized and excellently adapted for the rich effect of men's concerted voices."
Literary World.

"An excellent combination of some of our best Christian hymns; with suitable music, and vocal and instrumental arrangements. Seems to us a surpassingly good collection of Hymns and Tunes, in beautiful type and binding."—Irish Baptist Magazine.

"THE GOSPEL MALE CHORUS BOOK indicates a new departure; and one which has proved largely successful. The music in this book is arranged for Male Voices alone. It is too often supposed that there can be no good singing without female voices. This is a mistake. It is possible to have very effective singing with a choir composed only of Male Voices."
New Zealand Christian Record.

"We may say first of the songs—they are full of the Gospel; and of the musical compositions—they are many of them very taking. The idea of A Male Choir is to some extent a novelty, and will commend itself to many circles."—Baptist Messenger.

"We are sure the publishers are rendering a good service to the cause of Christ by the issue, in so remarkably cheap a form, of this book."—King's Highway.

"Mr. SANKEY has taught all the churches how much may be done for Christ by the consecration of the voice to His service. Strange that we should have been so long in laying this to heart! THE MALE CHORUS BOOK is intended for Male Voices. Why should not Christian young men offer themselves willingly for this service? Why should there not be an earnest attempt in all our churches to make the public services more attractive by the singing of these and similar Pieces?"
Irish Congregational Magazine.

"Mr. McGRANAHAN believes largely in the power for good in the harmony of Male Voices when consecrated to the service of our Lord and Master; and he has issued this volume of bright and living sacred song, as a means alike of illustrating and giving effect to this impression. Far more, we are sure, could be done in this way than has yet been done: Christian men have not recognized, in anything like due measure, the noble gift of song which God has bestowed upon them for His service. We wish that this book may have good success."
British Messenger.

"We doubt not that a cordial welcome will be given to the volume of Christian song issued by Messrs. Morgan & Scott, and entitled, 'THE GOSPEL MALE CHORUS BOOK.'"—The Rock.

"The Hymns are many of them beautiful in the words, as well as in the music."—Friends' Quarterly Examiner.

Address, Mr. Ferguson, Market-place, SELKIRK, N.B.

"I have much pleasure in writing to you, relative to the great good I have got by your Balsam."

"I came home from Newcastle four months ago, with both lungs seriously diseased. Several of my relatives have died of Consumption, and it was feared I should follow them."

"I could not walk across the floor, my breath was distressing. Now I can walk five or six miles without fatigue."

In a letter written me two months after commencing my treatment, he says:—"I have gained 13 pounds in weight. I am using your Liniment, and my breathing is much relieved. I am taking your Balsam very regularly. Your Pills agree with me well."

In his last letter he says:—"I am going to Australia. Make use of my case. Thank God, you have been the means of restoring me. May many other sufferers be benefited, as I have been! Thanking you for all you have done, and trusting you may long enjoy that greatest of earthly blessings—health—I am, yours faithfully,

THE RISE AND PROGRESS OF THE HERESY OF REV. H. J. PRINCE.

BY

ARTHUR AUGUSTUS REES,

Brother-in-law to Rev. H. J. Prince, and late Minister of Bethesda Free Chapel, Sunderland.

"As soon as the judgment and the Word of God were given up, a wide door was opened for the entrance of the devil; nor did that wicked spirit lose the opportunity thus presented to him, but at once walked in, took charge, and assumed the character of the Holy Ghost. Having thus obtained the complete control of Mr. Prince, he led him on step by step, in mockery of the Blessed Spirit, to do and say the most outrageous things, in the awful name of God; and left him without any means of detecting the delusion, by having first persuaded him to abandon the only test by which he could discover it.

"Thus fell that dear child of God, HENRY JAMES PRINCE; and thus he will remain fallen till Jesus signally interposes to deliver him."—Extract.

A POSITIVIST SERVICE.

VING occasion some time ago to spend a nday in one of the great commercial cities of igland, I attended Cathedral Service during e day. I had seen an advertisement in the turday newspapers that a "Positivist Service" ould be held in the Hall of the Positivists on e Sunday evening at seven o'clock. If it was rong to go to that hall at the hour named, the ed is here avowed; but I did not think it wrong. od knows I went in no mocking spirit, but nestly and respectfully wondering why certain my fellow-creatures who will have nothing to say to a living God should desire to have a Service."

Indeed it seemed that not many of them esired it much, for the congregation numbered fteen all told. But I was politely led to a seat, nd had a hymn-book given me: I am sorry to ay I have known strangers less courteously eated in Christian churches.

Truly it was a pathetic service! Most touching was to witness the genuine endeavour of those fteen persons to worship without God, and, of ourse, without Christ; to pray, with no one to ray to; to sing hymns to nothing in particular, ith accompaniment of plaintive music which as played by a lady on an instrument. Five of ne fifteen were ladies: God help them, and send hem something better for their hearts some day!

Men give up faith, but are held by custom; nd the Positivists have retained the form of ivine Service, without any of its meaning.

To take notes would have been indecent, but his is what I remember of the opening of a rayer:—"O Thou great Humanity! we praise hee, as is most meet, for all the blessings inherited from past generations."

And this was the benediction at the close:— ' The Faith of Humanity, the Hope of Humanity, he Love of Humanity, comfort and strengthen s . . . for evermore," to which the congregation esponded with a loud "Amen."

One involuntarily writes all these words with a apital, to make believe that they mean a great eal; or because of the impression left on the mind that Positivists, in order to worship, have o try very hard; or simply because one would rite in that way the corresponding words in an ccount of a Christian Service. The last is the kindest explanation: let it be adopted. After all, a Positivist Service, as I saw it, is just a Christian Service, with Christianity, and all that we commonly regard as religious belief, left out, and only the form remaining.

There were two speakers, both of them educated men, with a proper sense of what is becoming; and it seemed to me that they made the service as good as was possible in the difficult circumstances. They had no special dress. He who was chairman prayed, gave out the hymns, read the discourse, and pronounced the blessing. By the way, the hymnal was a very small one: doubtless it is not easy to find hymns quite colourless as to belief. Most of them are addressed to "Humanity;" one is to Auguste Comte. The other speaker read the "lesson"—he called it by that name. It is needless to say that the Holy Scriptures were not used. What I heard was a passage on marriage and widowhood, which may have been from the writings of Comte, but the reader did not say.

The sermon that followed was on the Positivist "sacrament" of marriage. In a perfect marriage the man must not be under twenty-eight, but in regard to the age of the woman nothing was said; and the parties take a vow of perpetual widowhood for whichever shall survive the other. It appeared, however, from what the preacher said, that transgression of these rules will not be severely regarded by Positivists.

It seemed all very strange: but, when one thought of it, what else had they to preach about? In the course of that sermon the preacher intimated his belief that man dies and ceases to be, like the beasts. He believed in "corporate immortality;" but this just meant—f . I will do him the justice to say that he hid that if we are unselfish, the memory of our unselfishness lives on and helps, or stimulates, those who come after us. We bow reverently before this most blessed truth, but it is not Immortality. One could not help noticing that the preacher gave to the life and sayings of Auguste Comte the place which is given in Christian sermons to the life and sayings of Jesus. But the strongest point which he made —of course he was limited by his subject—was that though Comte was unhappily married, yet when he became a widower, and might have urged that he had not had his "perfect" marriage, he contented himself with a platonic friendship for a certain excellent young lady. Is that all, our readers may say, that men get to preach when they give up Christ and God?

They seemed amiable people, those Positivists, and they shook hands with each other kindly when all was over. Christianity has nothing to fear from Positivist Services—they want the very thing which their name claims. There is not enough of positive truth to hold the system together. It was significant that there were no poor persons, and apparently no sorrowful persons, in that room. No soul burdened with a sense of sin would go there. Probably those few present were the best of the sect, and I think they were genuinely seeking to be religious, yet I had found no sufficient reason why they should have a religious service, save one. It seemed to me that though they did not know it, and would have cast aside the imputation, they were feeling after God. The Father hears his children when they do not hear each other, and the prayer that to us seems foolishness has in it a cry—which may He answer, through Jesus Christ our Lord!

MAIMED, LAME, AND BLIND.

"When thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind."—LUKE xiv. 13.

THIS exhortation was fully carried out at Mr. William Harrison's new Bloomsbury Hall, Meard-street, Soho, on Monday week, at noon. By the kindness of the Hon. Thos. Holt and the Misses Holt, invitation cards had been given to the infirm of all castes and creeds, and in response 260 sat down to an excellent dinner. Never have we seen such an arrival of guests: the blind were led, the cripples limped upon their crutches, and the feeble upon their sticks. Slowly and sadly the procession drew on, some without an arm, some without an eye, some paralysed, some bent with age—a gathering such as often met around the Great Physician.

Inside the sight was equally interesting. At one table three blind men were grouped, finding the food upon their plates as best they could; at another sat a man crippled in both arms, and next him one who had lost a leg, but who was thus able to cut for his neighbour; several were so helpless the ladies had to feed them like children. We particularly noticed an aged couple; the husband was blind and the wife had only one arm. How did these maimed ones fight the stern battle of life?

After dinner and coffee, short addresses were given by Miss O'Dell, of Crayford (as representing the kind provider, who is an invalid), Rev. James Baillie, and Mr. William Harrison. The hour was enlivened with singing by a band of coloured singers. As the guests departed, each was presented with a Testament, thanks and gratitude being profuse.

CITY MISSION WORK.—At a conversazione given last week by the Kensington auxiliary to the London City Mission, it was stated that the number of city missionaries is now 463, and every missionary visits once a month about 650 families, or 2900 persons. Sir R. Webster, M.P., Attorney-General, in the course of his address, described much of the literature that circulates amongst the lower classes as of a horrible nature. People have no conception of the wickedness and fearful blasphemy of the anti-Christian publications spread in the poorer neighbourhoods. Influences of that kind should be counteracted by men and women giving up some of their time to go amongst the poor and teach them what the love of God really is. Much is to

The Book World.

OLD CHRISTOPHER'S BIBLE-CLASS NOTES is a very helpful exposition of the first five chapters of S. Luke. Jarrold & Sons.

A GARLAND OF ORANGE BLOSSOMS. Elliot Stock. This is an elegant and tastefully-arranged book on the "Birthday Text-Book" plan for the recording of dates of marriages. Doubtless it will find some acceptance amongst the many who value such mementos.

LESSONS ON THE NAMES AND TITLES OF Our Lord, and Prophecies concerning Him. By Dr. FLAVEL COOK. 1s. Nisbet & Co. This consists of fifty-two Bible Lessons, which will form the staple of many a valuable afternoon's consideration in the Sunday-school.

THROUGH STORM TO SUNSHINE. By W. J. LACEY. Nelson & Sons. This temperance tale gained the first prize awarded by the Band of Hope Union, and the fact that it survived the severe criticism of Revs. Canon Barker and Dr. Sinclair Paterson would alone be sufficient commendation. We are pleased, however, to add that the story is well conceived and cleverly carried out.

GLEANINGS FROM A TOUR IN THE EAST. By Rev. Canon BELL. 5s. Hodder & Stoughton. The perusal of this book is most profitable. The places visited are described with great clearness, whilst the reader is also reminded of the Biblical events for which each spot is famous. The author evidently knows his Bible well. Thus, joining the party in imagination, one is able to enjoy the bright and interesting trip, the graphic account of which renders this an instructive and entertaining book. Canon Bell emphasises the fact that his visit to the Holy Land in no way marred the ideal whch he had previously formed of it.

BIBLE WORK FOR LITTLE FINGERS. 1s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. The desire of children to be doing something is here met in several ways, for there are pictures to be coloured, texts to be illuminated, hymns to be copied, and Scripture acrostics and questions to be answered. Under proper guidance the book will be found most helpful in securing the interest of children to Scripture lessons, in occupying their minds and bringing out their powers.

THE BLESSINGS OF THE TRIBES. By Rev. F. WHITFIELD. 3s. 6d. Nisbet & Co. A volume of addresses delivered by the author in St. Mary's Church, Hastings, and full of spiritual teaching. The deeper the reader goes into this mine of Gospel truth, the more will he see of the treasures unfolded to him, and the clearer too, if spiritually taught, will be his perception of the Gospel light which shines out in every one of these blessings, shadowing forth the rich heritage of God's people in all time.

BIBLE TOPOGRAPHY. By Rev. G. RAWLINSON. 2s. 6d. Nisbet & Co. Biblical students will be grateful for such an attempt as we have here to fix the site of some of the most interesting places in the world. That of the Garden of Eden will, we imagine, ever remain a matter of speculation, about which the most learned must agree to differ. But the case is different in regard to the early cities of Babylonia and Assyria, and to cities connected with the history of Abraham, and the author has given us some gorgeous descriptions of regions which ages ago were the cradles of learning and science, and the scenes of events described in the inspired narrative, but for which we should be in utter ignorance concerning men and places whose influence on the world's history is ineffaceable.

THE EXPOSITOR. Vol. iv., Third Series. Hodder & Stoughton. We give this new volume of "The Expositor" high but honest praise when we say that it is a worthy successor of those that have gone before it. Like them, it will prove a most valuable helper to thoughtful and educated readers. Dr. Alexander Maclaren continues his expositions on the Epistle to the Colossians in six chapters, which are probably equal to any work that has come from the great master in Israel. Careful and critical Bible students will find Professor Kirkpatrick's articles on the "Revised Version" (1 Kings to Nehemiah) full of helpful suggestions. The volume contains a remarkably interesting and picturesque paper on "Jewish Dancing Customs" by Professor Delitzsch; a continuation of Dr. Marcus Dods' "Expositions of Zechariah;" and some original papers on the "Epistles of Peter" by Bishop Alexander. A finely executed portrait of Bishop Lightfoot makes a capital frontispiece, the value of which is greatly enhanced by Professor Sanday's able sketch of the man and his work.

The Religious Tract Society has issued a Jubilee Broadsheet (1d.), entitled QUEEN VICTORIA, which, with a capital portrait, gives principal events, and an interesting summary of Her Majesty's illustrious reign.

THE FAITHFUL WITNESS. Partridge & Co. The editorial "salutation" to the readers of this new Canadian bi-monthly assures us that "the paper is the outcome of many prayers." In its pages are many valuable contributions, which are in themselves sufficient to proclaim fidelity to the truth, as revealed in the Word of God.

ELECTRICITY AND ITS USES. By J. MUNRO. 3s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. We have here, in the form of an attractive handbook, a history of electricity, from the time of the earliest discoveries by a Greek philosopher, 2000 years before Christ, and its practical illustration by Franklin's kite, to the present day. We are placed en rapport with all the latest applications of this mysterious power, and very marvellous some of them are. In a concise and yet full and distinct form, the amateur will find almost all that he can wish to know, and the student an invaluable précis of a science that, though but yet in its infancy, is perhaps more full of fascination than any other.

OUR HOMELY COMEDY AND TRAGEDY. By the Author of "The Recreations of a Country Pastor." Dr. Boyd is a preacher of sermons and a writer of books, and has won renown in both capacities. He is as fresh and as charming as ever in this, the latest production of his fertile brain. He loves the quiet places of life, and can reproduce their beauty. Nothing is common or unclean in his eyes; trees, country roads, bridges, and sunsets seize his attention and provoke contemplation. He can describe a scene and tell a story well; and he does not forget "to point a moral, or adorn a tale." His essays give his ripest thinking about men and things. (3s. 6d. Longmans.)

WESLEYAN METHODIST SUNDAY-SCHOOL UNION.

WILD LOTTIE AND WEE WINNIE or, Led by a Little Child. By ASHTON NEILL. 3s. Decidedly a lively book, but not one to put into the hands of young people of an imitative turn of mind. The conversations are very unreal, and the situations forced. It is not wise to write down the worldly, or "slang" ideas and phrases indulged in by the utterly thoughtless, even for the sake of contrast. They are oftener remembered than the better part of the book.—SOUL ECHOES; or, Reflected Influence, by SARSON J. INGHAM (2s. 6d.), is in direct contrast to the above. It is the story of grand and noble lives, and we look with interest for more from the same facile and cultivated pen.—HAGAR'S REPARATION. By EDITH CORNFORTH. 2s. Sweet, reposeful, a poem in prose, this true love-story will have an untold charm for all the girls who read it.—HAROLD AND HIS SISTERS IN NORWAY. By HENRY H. MCCULLAGH. 1s. 6d. A bright, useful book, telling of a trip into Norway of a father and his two children. As there are very many interesting, geographical and natural descriptions, which, in this age greedy for knowledge, will prove acceptable to young readers, the book is likely to have, and deserves, a wide circulation.—MOTHER FREEMAN. By J. W. KEYWORTH. 3s. This is a vivacious narrative of the sleep and revival of religious life in a country village, largely due to the efforts of a worthy Deborah, in the person of "Mother Freeman."

BRIGHT WORDS. ½d. Marshall Bros., Amen-corner. Pilgrims to the heavenly city, for whom this little monthly is sent forth, will find in it much that is cheering and truly helpful.

TO THE UTTERMOST (1d. Partridge & Co.) gives the story of a man who, having committed a murder while under the influence of drink, was converted through reading a sermon by Mr. C. H. Spurgeon.

LEAVES FOR LEISURE MOMENTS. 1s. Religious Tract Society. This packet of "leaves" (of a large size, the first page covered with suitable illustration, and the remaining three with matter), containing single stories, with words for everyday life, are sure of a cordial reception into whatever hands they fall.

PICTURES FROM THE LIFE OF JESUS. 1s. (same publishers). Sunday-school teachers and others will welcome this new packet of cards. The picture is graphic and at once tells its own story to the eye, and this also is again told in simple language at the back.

Canon Westcott is to commence a series of papers on the Revised Version of the New Testament in the February number of The Expositor. Although not formally a defence, it is understood they will be in reality a reply to the criticisms that have been made on the Revised Version, and as such they will be read with the greatest interest.

COMING INTO A FORTUNE, LAURENCE HOPE'S STRANGE DREAM, and FRANK ARMSTRONG'S TURNING POINT. 1d. each. Wesleyan Methodist S. S. Union. These charming Golden Text Stories, by Sarson C. J. Ingham, should have a large sale. Deftly woven into the warp and woof of each is the lesson which cannot be too much taught, 'Seek ye first the kingdom of God.'

The cheap edition of Professor Drummond's "Natural Law in the Spiritual World" consisted of ten thousand copies, of which eight thousand were sold before the day of publication.

THE MISTRESS OF THE HOUSE: A Story of Christian Service in Daily Life. 1s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. Full of an old-world sweetness, this beautiful little story leaves the heart redolent of faith, hope, and charity.

Mr. Edwin Hodder is engaged upon a biography of the late Mr. Samuel Morley (at the instance of the family), and he will be glad to receive any letters or personal reminiscences which would add to the interest of the work. Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton will be the publishers.

THE ROAD TO THE NORTH POLE. 1s. Religious Tract Society. The story of the American expedition in the Arctic steamer Jeanette is given in this volume. It is a record of brave endurance, of calm facing of terrible dangers, and, alas! of death, from which many a noble lesson may be learnt.

TEMPERANCE AS TAUGHT IN THE REVISED BIBLE. By Rev. J. COMPTON. 1s. 337, Strand. We have here a collection of all the passages in the Bible in which reference is made to the subject of strong drink, with a brief comment on each. A more emphatic proof of the verdict of the Scripture in regard to this matter could not be adduced.

"HOMEWARD BOUND" is a diagram issued in connection with the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen, representing a ship in full sail on a peaceful sea, surrounded by the flags of many nations. On the sails are inscribed a number of texts, and the whole will be found attractive to landsmen, as well as those who do business on the mighty deep (1s., Partridge & Co.).

HISTORY AND PROPHECY; or Jehovah's Dealings with the Jew, the Gentile, and the Church of God. Illustrated by a new Prophetic Chart. By FREDERICK NEWTH. 6d. J. F. Shaw & Co. A very able, comprehensive and useful help to the study of the ages and of God's purposes in them. It is on Futurist lines, and supposes, after the removal of the Church, an interval of some, perhaps many, years before the covenant, which Futurists think will be made by the Jews with antichrist. As this lengthened interval Mr. Newth differs from others of the same school, and for this and other conclusions we do not think there is any clear Scripture warrant.

Gleanings.

TEMPERANCE.

Mr. H. M. Stanley says that on the West Coast of Africa gin is the currency.

Lady Jane Ellice fears that the Queen's Jubilee may be made a great occasion for drinking.

In India, perfumed spirits, used as drink, have been imported as "perfumery," free, but are now to be taxed.

On Thursday last, Mr. W. Forbes, of London, gave a Gospel temperance address at Melbourne Hall, Leicester, which was much appreciated.

A correspondent complains that on Temperance Sunday in some Glasgow churches it was difficult to say which side the minister favoured.

At Valparaiso temperance sentiment is growing. Drinking booths, formerly allowed in the streets at holiday times, are now prohibited.

In the Local Option campaigns, in the Southern States of America, the educated negroes voted "Prohibition;" the ignorant, "whiskey."

Dr. Richardson recently quoted Dr. Farr as stating that from the time grocers began to sell spirits the mortality amongst them increased.

At Edinburgh, during the New Year's festivities, there was a marked increase in juvenile intemperance, many cases being from respectable families.

In Chicago, in the locality where the recent labour riots occurred, there are 115 drink-saloons. Nearly all the rioting was where saloons are most numerous.

At the Cumberland Assizes, just held, Mr. Justice Hawkins said, the Calendars of England would show 75 per cent. of the crime traceable, directly or indirectly, to drink.

At a public meeting, recently, Rev. Professor Blaikie, the Lord Provost of Edinburgh, and others, urged the inclusion of public-houses in Sir J. Lubbock's Shop Hours Bill.

The Cardiff Quarter Sessions reversed some recent magisterial decisions against "clubs," and awarded the appellants' costs. "Club-drinking" thus gains a new lease of life.

Mr. F. P. Wheeler, chairman Prohibition State Committee of New York, writes that, to his own knowledge, votes are now freely bought by both the great political parties in the States.

The African Lakes Company, established 1878, does not trade at all in intoxicants, and has proved that a large and profitable trade may be done in Africa apart from the drink-traffic.

High license does not shut up the Chicago saloons and a Bill is before the city council to double the rate, making it 1000 dollars. If the aldermen saw what goes on every day, they would vote for 2000 dollars.

Hon. W. S. Howland was re-elected Mayor of Toronto, Ont., January 3, by the votes of the women of that city. Toronto is said to be the best governed city in the world, as the Mayor and Council are prominent temperance men.

The success which has attended the afternoon temperance meetings in Boston and New York has led to their inauguration in Chicago. The first was held on January 2, and was addressed by Miss Frances E. Willard.

M. Chevreul, the distinguished French chemist and philosopher, has just completed his hundredth year. He ascribes his long life, and perfect health, to the fact of his never having tasted any kind of liquor, or smoked a pipe or cigar.

Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., in The Leeds Mercury, calls attention to the ruinous effects of the drink trade on the natives of India. It is charged against the Government, he says, that it multiplied temptations for the sake of the revenue.

In the recent number of The Medical Temperance Journal, Dr. Beach, Darenth Asylum, gives tables on hereditary predisposition to imbecility, the largest percentages being credited to "intemperance," and "intemperance and other causes" combined.

The devil has patented a new device to ruin women and young men, says the New York Voice. It is the manufacture of Vinous Rubber Grapes. A company has been started to put brandy, gin, whisky, wines, &c., into rubber globules, made to look like grapes.

During the month of December, 9000 meals and 6000 nights' lodgings were given by the Bethesda Mission Inn and Restaurant, conducted by the Central Women's Christian Temperance Union, of Chicago. The influence exerted by this Mission in the "black hole" of that city is simply wonderful.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Index of Boston, the organ of the Free Thinkers, is defunct.

This day (Thursday) is observed as a day of prayer for Colleges in America.

It is estimated that there are nearly three thousand Chinamen in attendance at the different Sunday-schools in New York and Brooklyn.

The New Hebrides Mission Synod has passed a resolution, recommending the purchase of a new mission ship twice the size of the Dayspring.

A Young Men's Hebrew Association, on the plan of the Y.M.C.A., has been started in Brooklyn by the encouragement of 500 of the most prominent Hebrews of the city.

The Methodist Times says: When we are prepared to make as many sacrifices and efforts for our convictions as Mr. Champion has done for Socialism, London will be evangelised.

The Indian Government have rejected the memorial drawn up by the Bishop of Bombay and numerously signed, praying for the withdrawal of the C. D. Act which still stains that city with disgrace, and lays up the wrath of God against it.

Rev. Dr. Macdonald of Melbourne declares that the capital of Victoria threatens to be worse and not better than the older cities of the world. The rich in it are given almost wholly to dissipation and mere amusement, while the mass of the people care only for what they shall eat and drink.

Sir J. Wm. Dawson, of McGill College, Montreal, and President of the British Association, gave two lectures at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on the first two Sunday evenings in January, on "The Development of the Divine Plan in the Physical History of the Earth and its Preparation for Man."

The conviction of Mr. McQuade, one of the fradulent New York aldermen, is a distinct triumph of justice, which cannot but be gratifying to all honest citizens. Nor can the sentence of seven years' imprisonment with hard labour and the payment of a fine of 5000 dollars be looked upon as too severe, if one considers the enormity of the crime.

A captain has just succumbed at Gravesend a martyr in the cause of humanity. During the homeward voyage of his vessel smallpox seized two of the crew. Captain Bew nursed them with tender solicitude. His patients recovered; but after the arrival of his vessel in the Thames the captain was stricken down with the disease, and has died.

Rev. Newman Hall, at Christ Church, on Sunday week, preached from the text, "Why do ye spend money for that which is not bread?" He argued that distress was due to the fact that so many millions were annually spent on alcohol, which was the main cause of pauperism, insanity, vice, crime, accidents, &c., and the chief deterrent from religious influences.

Temporally and religiously, says a writer in The British Weekly, the great bulk of the Jews in East London are in a sad condition; but they are in many respects a favourable contrast to the herd of vulgar Gentiles. In a far less degree are they addicted to drinking, and when do we ever find that a Hebrew wife-beater is arraigned in a Gentile police-court?

Three of the officers of the Salvation Army who have lately gone to India in the Clan M'Gregor steamer have met with serious accidents on the way. While crossing the Bay of Biscay they encountered a very heavy storm, which forced open an iron door belonging to an airtight compartment. The door struck Sergeant Nursee Gopal, an Indian, breaking one of his arms. An English female officer also has two of her ribs broken.

MR. SPURGEON hoped to reach London on Tuesday last, and purposes preaching at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Sunday next. We are glad to know that he is much improved in health by his stay at Mentone.

MR. PETER MAMREOF VON FINKELSTEIN is fulfilling engagements in London, giving descriptions of Palestine life, while Miss von Finkelstein is busy in provincial towns. The former, who is scarcely inferior to his sister as an interesting lecturer, is open to engagements, and may be addressed at 4, Bedford-place, Great Russell-street, W.C.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, JAN. 30.—JOB XXXVI.

The last discourse of Elihu. After a short reface, stating his object and asserting his ruthfulness (1—4), he proceeds to prove that od is righteous. First, because He does justice the afflicted and raises the righteous to ignity, and watches over them continually 5—7). Secondly, because He makes their afflic- ions work for their good, awakening conscience, nstructing their minds, and bringing about their eformation (8—11). Elihu thus takes an en- irely different position from the other speakers, ince he treats Job as one who had been sub- tantially a righteous man, and an object of God's favour, both before and in his suffering, hough liable to punishment for some unknown ransgression, the chastisement being a proof, not of wrath, but of love. Thirdly, because the esult of the punishment is just; if men do not ubmit, they perish, and prove that they were, rom the beginning, hypocrites; if they repent hey are restored (10—16). Job is warned that his wrath may lead to his complete destruction, and is admonished to magnify the work of God by confession, and amendment for the good of his fellow-men (17—25)."—S.C.

7.—With kings are they on the throne.—"He hath made us kings and priests to God" (Rev. i. 5). "Ye are a royal priesthood" (1 Pet. ii. 9). Elihu's words are even more true than he knows."—S.C.

20.—Desire not the night, &c.—"Alluding to Job's repeated prayers to be cut off at once, and hid in the grave."

26.—Behold, God is great.—Elihu celebrates God's power and goodness. The three friends dwell more upon his power and justice; and Job himself upon his power and wisdom.

MONDAY, JAN. 31.—JOB XXXVII.

2.—Hear attentively the noise of his voice.—From verse 29 of the last chapter to verse 5 of this we have a vivid description of a thunder storm, "apparently one that was then coming on, preparing the minds of all present for the manifestation of the Godhead in the whirlwind" referred to in xxxviii. 1.

6.—Be thou on the earth.—This is rendered by all critics "Fall thou on the earth." So R.V.

7.—He sealeth up the hand of every man.—I.e., brings all human labours to a standstill, so that men may meditate upon his work, or that men, who are his work, may have reason for reflection. R.V. renders the latter clause, "That all men whom He hath made may know it."

14.—Hearken unto this, O Job, &c.—"Elihu's chief aim is to defend God against Job's charge of injustice. He shows how omnipotence, love, and justice are all found in God. The peculiarity of Elihu's speeches is that they demand of Job penitential submission, not by accusing him of coarse, common sins, as the three have done, but because even the best of men suffer for hidden moral defects, which must be perceived by them in order not to perish on account of them. He, however, makes Job's sin the cause of his affliction, whereas Job's affliction has nothing whatever to do with his sin, except in so far as he allows himself to be drawn into sinful language concerning God by the conflict of temptation into which the affliction plunges him. For after Jehovah has brought Job over this sin, He acknowledges his servant to be in the right against the three friends (xlii. 7). His affliction is really not a merited affliction; it is not a result of retributive justice; it also had not chastisement as its design; it was an enigma, under which Job should have bowed humbly, without striking against it—a decree into the purpose of which the prologue permits us an insight, which, however, remains unexplained to Job, or is only explained to him so far as the issue teaches him that it should be to him the way to a so much the more glorious testimony on the part of God Himself."—Delitzsch.

TUESDAY, FEB. 1.—JOB XXXVIII.

"The four following chapters contain the answer of the Lord God. The mind of Job had been prepared for this manifestation, first, by the careful review of his past life, and then by the discourses of Elihu in which the loving purposes of Divine interpositions were, for the first time, distinctly enunciated. All that he now needs is a personal revelation, to be brought face to face with Him, whom in the midst of his great misery he had ventured to arraign. The Lord ...reproves Job, and brings before his mind a vast and most comprehensive picture of his providential administration of the universe. The great lesson of all being the utter unsearchableness of the Divine will and ways; but that though the special object which God may have in any one of his works may be wholly undiscoverable, if not incomprehensible, to man, yet that they each and all display a manifold wisdom, an all-pervading and all-controlling providence, an adaptation of means to ends, which are inseparably connected with absolute goodness, and should teach man to submit, without a question, without struggles or reluctance to whatever He, the Almighty Maker and King, may ordain or permit."—S.C.

1.—Out of the whirlwind.—"Job had said (xxxi. 35), 'May the Almighty answer me.' He now really answers, and, indeed, out of the storm, which is generally the forerunner of His self-manifestation in the world."—Delitzsch.

4.—When I laid the foundations of the earth.—"This expression gives a false impression, as though the earth were represented according to old heathen cosmical ideas, as resting on a basis out of itself. The original has simply, 'When I founded the earth,' i.e., created and established it."—S.C.

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 2.—JOB XXXIX.

9.—Will the unicorn be willing to serve thee?—The Hebrew word for "unicorn" is "Reem," "which early translators identified with the legendary unicorn, but which modern commentators take to mean the oryx, a well-known species of gazelle." But Dr. Tristram, whose authority is paramount, says, "beyond all doubt the Reem is the urus (or wild ox) of Cæsar."

15.—And forgetteth that the foot may crush them.—"The outer layer of eggs is so ill covered that they are destroyed in quantities by jackals, wild cats, &c., and the natives carry them away, only taking care not to leave the mark of their footsteps, since, when the ostrich finds that her nest is discovered, she crushes the whole brood, and builds a nest elsewhere."—S.C. This is probably what is alluded to in the next verse, "She is hardened against her young ones as though they were not hers."

19.—Hast thou given the horse strength?—"This passage of the book of Job is the oldest and most beautiful description of the horse."—Löffler.

Hast thou clothed his neck with thunder?—The word for thunder (says Delitzsch) comes from a root, which means to quiver and tremble, and means the mane. R.V. translates the "quivering mane."

THURSDAY, FEB. 3.—JOB XL.

2.—Shall he that contendeth with the Almighty instruct Him?—Rather as R.V., "Shall he that cavilleth contend with the Almighty?" The question means, "Will Job persist in this contending with God?" "The great point is thus determined: any reasoning which implies a right to remonstrate with the Almighty, or to dictate the course which He ought to adopt, is presumption."—S.C.

4.—Behold, I am vile.—Better rendered "worthless." This is not so much a confession of sin as of utter weakness and inadequacy to "contend with the Almighty." The Hebrew verb used refers to lightness in the balance, insignificance. It is rendered by Delitzsch, "Behold, I am too mean;" and by R.V., "Behold, I am of small account." The LXX. renders it, "I am nothing."

6.—Then answered the Lord.—Job is indeed silenced, but not yet brought to repentance, as in xlii. 6. "Silence and submission are not enough. What is wanted is teachableness and perfect trust, of which this first confession of Job does not give any clear indication: hence the occasion for a second address."—S.C.

15.—Behold now behemoth.—The Hebrew word is the plural form of the word "beast," and signifies "the great beast." Dr. Tristram (Nat. Hist. of Bible) says: "It is clear that the description suits the hippopotamus exactly, and it alone." This is now universally admitted by scholars. R.V. puts in margin, "that is the hippopotamus."

FRIDAY, FEB. 4.—JOB XLI.

1.—Canst thou draw out leviathan with a hook?"—"The word, which properly means a large creature, lithe or folded, may apply either, as in iii. 8, to a dragon; or, as in Ps. civ. 26, to a whale; or, as in this chapter, to the crocodile; a point on which all commentators are now agreed. This interpretation rests upon the accuracy of the description."—S.C.

11.—Who hath prevented Me, that I should repay him?—The use of the old word "prevent" tends to obscure this passage. R.V. translates it more clearly—"Who hath first given unto Me that I should repay him?" It is clearly to this that St. Paul refers (Rom. xi. 35). Indeed, his words are (put only in the third instead of the first person) the closest translation that could be given of the Hebrew—"Who hath first given to Him, and it shall be recompensed to him again?" It may be added that the outburst of adoring praise with which these words are connected (Rom. xi. 33) represents the true key to the Lord's remonstrance with his servant Job. By calling his attention to the wonders of creation. He would remind him of the "depth of the riches, both of the wisdom and knowledge of God" as displayed in nature. But also that, as even in this sphere, "his ways were past finding out," so in the sphere of his dealings with his servants, who should not therefore call Him to account for what they cannot now understand. The Lord's appeal to nature is but a suggestion of argument from analogy, which might be expressed in the terms of Origen's famous saying (which is the motto of Butler's Analogy), thus: "He who believes that God's dealings with his people proceed from Him who is the Author of nature, may well expect to find the same sort of difficulties in them, as are found in the constitution of nature."

34.—He is King over all the sons of pride.—These last words in the description of leviathan are very suggestive. May not leviathan, which in iii. 8 means "dragon," and in that passage seems to refer to Satan as the author of the Fall, be here intended to suggest that if this great monster is so formidable an object in nature, what must the great enemy of souls be, who was really the cause of all that seemed inexplicable in God's dealings with Job? See i. 6, ii. 6.

SATURDAY, FEB. 5.—JOB XLII.

3.—Who is this that darkeneth counsel?—Job refers back to the opening words of the Almighty (xxxviii. 2) that he may plead guilty to the charge they convey.

6.—Wherefore I abhor myself.—Although the word "myself" is in italics (i.e., not in the original) it is well supplied to express the sense, and so is retained in R.V. Delitzsch says: "The object of 'abhor' is his previous conduct," which means much the same.

7.—Thy two friends.—"Elihu is not mentioned. The rebuke does not apply to him."—S.C.

8.—My servant Job shall pray for you; for him will I accept.—Job here is made a type of the great Kinsman-Redeemer in whom he trusted.

10.—The Lord turned the captivity of Job, when he prayed for his friends.—A striking type of the captivity of God's people being turned (i.e., their deliverance effected) when the hitherto persecuted One passed from his sufferings to the glory where He now intercedes.

13.—He had also seven sons and three daughters.—All his other possessions were doubled, but his children now given were the same in number as the first. Does not this suggest that they were not lost but gone before, through his intercession for them (i. 5), and, therefore, that his family was virtually doubled by the accession of the new ones?

Forthcoming Meetings.

The Evangelisation Society will send evangelists to any part of England, Scotland, and Wales on due notice. Hon. Sec., 21, Surrey-street, Strand, W.C.

The Irish Evangelisation Society will send evangelists to any part of Ireland on due notice. Apply to Mr. J. Barton, Hon. Sec., Dundalk, Ireland.

The Metropolitan Tabernacle Evangelists' Association will send lay preachers and evangelists to any chapel or hall of any evangelical denomination in London. Hon. Sec., 121, Camberwell New-road, S.E.

The Scottish Evangelistic Association will send evangelists to any part of Scotland on due notice. Apply to Dr. Moxey, 5, St. Andrew's-square, Edinburgh.

The Church Army will send evangelists (working-men) to any clergyman on due notice, for short or long missions. Hon. Sec., 128 and 130, Edgware-road, W.

A REMARKABLE PICTURE.—Mr. Gawin Kirkham, Secretary of the Open-air Mission, expounded his allegorical picture, "The Broad and the Narrow Way," for the 750th time last week, at Woking, in Surrey, in connection with the Church of England Temperance Society. This picture is of German origin. Three years ago a shilling edition in English, was published by Morgan and Scott, which has had a rapid circulation. Mr. Kirkham starts on the 10th of February for a fortnight's lecturing tour in Devon and Cornwall, and wishes us to say he has still a few vacant dates, and will be glad to hear from friends in those counties willing to arrange for the lecture. His address is 14, Duke-street, Adelphi, London, W.C.

Subscriptions Received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Saturday, January 22, 1887.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps. Cheques to be drawn in favour of Morgan & Scott, and crossed City Bank; P.O. Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, at G.P.O.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Saturday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

Mission and other Appeals.

Christmas Cards.—Mrs. Ross, 25, Regent-square, Doncaster, will receive thankfully old Christmas cards for scrap books for poor children.

Malta Soldiers' and Sailors' Rest.—Earnest appeal is made for contributions towards this institution. Nearly £1000 has been received, and the remaining £2000 must be obtained before August next. Contributions to Rev. J. Laverack, Wesleyan Chaplain, Floriana, Malta.

Orphan Working School, Haverstock-hill.—Mr. B. L. Cohen (30, Hyde Park-gardens, W.) makes earnest appeal on behalf of this institution. Six hundred orphan children, gathered from all parts of the kingdom, have now a home within its walls. At the close of the year there was a deficit of £1500.

Dock Labourers' Mission (32, Chamber-street, E.).—The pressure of distress daily among the unemployed labourers during the past few weeks has been so great that it has quite exhausted our funds. We cannot keep up the supply of food unless the Lord's stewards furnish us with help for a few weeks longer.

C. H. Coleman.

FRIENDLESS AND·FALLEN.

ANNUAL DEVOTIONAL MEETING,
EXETER (Lower) HALL,
TUESDAY EVENING, FEB. 1, at 6.30.

All evangelical Christians will agree that the definite end to be sought in all Preventive and Rescue Work is the salvation of the souls and bodies poor Women and Girls, reclaimed by Missionary effort; and this end can only be attained in God's appointed way. See Zech. chap. iv. vers. 6, 7; att. xviii. ver. 3; St. John, chap. iii. vers. 5—8; also St. John, chap. xvi. vers. 8—16.

Our Lord directed his Apostles, before they went out to preach his Gospel, to wait for the promise. See Acts, chap. i. vers. 4—8. Workers are s dependent now as at the time this direction was given, and the privilege of meeting together as Christian workers is ours as much as theirs, and the romises are equally applicable.

Not only are Contributors and Workers in connection with the Homes of the London Female Preventive and Reformatory Institution invited to this leeting, but Christian Friends engaged in any organization having for its end the protection and rescue of the Friendless and Fallen are asked to join his union for prayer on the 1st proximo.

Tea will be provided for Workers at 5.30. Tickets will not be required.

"BLESSINGS ON THE BEES!"

A Story of Systematic Giving.

BY S. J. HUMPHREY,
Author of "For His Sake."

"After we have our homes paid for, and are in comfortable circumstances, all we can make surely belongs to the Lord. It would only burden us to keep it; but if given back to Him it is a source of great happiness ever after. It must yield in the conversion of souls more than compound interest."
Extract.

Price 6d. per dozen, or 3s. 6d. per 100.

FOR HIS SAKE.

A Deeply-Interesting Narrative.

BY S. J. HUMPHREY,
Author of "Blessings on the Bees."

'A year ago this winter our house took fire. It was in the middle of the night, and we were all asleep. The flames were first discovered by a poor neighbour, who at once gave the alarm, and then burst in the door. . . . It seems almost a miracle that we were got out alive. We were dazed and suffocated, and it was only the heroic courage and great strength of our neighbour that brought us down the blazing stairway into the open air but it nearly cost him his life.'—Extract.

Cruden's Concordance PRESENTATION EDITION.

To the Old and New Testaments.

Handsomely Bound in Cloth Boards.

"This is a noble book, 4to. size, consisting of 757 pages. . . . It contains a carefully revised and much extended list of the Scripture Proper Names, with their meaning in the original languages. This is a most important feature of the work, and renders it so much the more valuable to the Biblical Student, as well as the Sunday-School Teacher and Scripture Reader."—Gospel Magazine.

Cruden's Concordance ILLUSTRATED EDITION.

To the Old and New Testaments.

Beautifully Bound in Cloth, Gilt Edges, containing Twelve exquisite Steel-Plate Engravings, and Six Beautiful Coloured Maps.

"The Rev. J. L. PORTER, D.D., Professor of Biblical Criticism, speaking of the Steel-Plate Engravings, says:—"I have examined with care the views for Biblical illustration. . . . The Engravings are very beautiful. In clearness, accuracy, and general effect they surpass, I think, any I have seen."—J. L. PORTER.

Cruden's Concordance LIBRARY EDITION.

Handsomely Bound.

VERY SUITABLE FOR A GIFT-BOOK.

"The 'Gallery' is hung with many quaint conceptions, and all teach some lesson of spiritual import."—Church Sunday-school Magazine.

"PERCIVAL'S PICTURE GALLERY is a prettily illustrated book, containing a collection of fanciful legends, which equally merit the name of parables, since they convey many spiritual lessons in the form of a story. The familiar letters A. L. O. E. will be sufficient guarantee for the devoutness of tone and originality of style which mark this volume."—The Literary World.

"The volume is most beautifully got up, printed on fine paper with large margin; and most artistically illustrated. It will prove a very acceptable present to one who loves the beautiful, and who can appreciate A. L. O. E.'s tender and touching words."
Irish Congregational Magazine.

"In the introductory preface we are told that some of the ideas contained in this little book came to the author in a chamber of sickness, and proved both pleasant and soothing."—Fireside News.

INTRODUCTION.
THE PASSAGE OF THE RED SEA.
KING DAVID'S MISSION.
THE CARPENTER'S DEATH.
HOMELESS.
LEGEND OF THE SELF-MADE GRAVE.
THE THREE "BIHISTIS."
LEGEND OF THE SHEKEL.
THE NIGHT AFTER THE CRUCIFIXION.
THE LEGEND OF THE ROMAN SOLDIER.
"FALLEN ASLEEP!"

"Percival is a young artist, who, almost at the outset of life, suffers from an injury to the knee which renders him an invalid. . . . The chapters describe various illustrations of Scripture, designed and sketched by the young artist; in these he departs entirely from the ordinary conventional treatment; and his designs are eminently original and suggestive. The book is perfectly printed, and would form an appropriate present."—The Christian.

"The name of the writer is sufficient to secure for this pretty book a cordial welcome. Percival, an amateur artist, beguiles the long hours of his dying illness by representing on canvas fancies and legends connected with our Saviour's life on earth. The tiny thread of narrative is used to string together these parabolic scenes."—The Record.

"This book is a gem. The invalid artist sketching his pictures and telling his wonderful stories is a tender and beautiful portraiture. The get up of the volume is a credit to the Publishers. It will make a fine gift-book, fit for any recipient."
The Christian Commonwealth.

RICHARD WEAVER.

THIS well-known evangelist was born in the little mining village of Asterley, Shropshire, June 25, 1827. He was the youngest of four sons, who had the inestimable blessing of a praying mother. One of his earliest recollections is of that mother, with her arms around him and another brother, pleading in prayer; and how the father stood over her with an axe, swearing he would cleave her in two if she did not stop; and how she looked up, tears rolling down her cheeks, saying, "Ah, George, you cannot let it drop unless God permits."

When Richard was only seven years old he began to go to the coal-pit, working from five in the morning, sometimes till ten at night, in a narrow seam, crawling on hands and knees, dragging a sleigh of coal, the roof being so low that it was impossible to prevent hitting the back against it.

The evil associations of the pit soon led the boy into bad ways, and he went fast on the downward road, while the mother pleaded still with her God. When only thirteen he got drunk at his eldest brother's wedding, and from that time drinking and fighting were his delight. Whilst still a lad his boldness and love of fighting gained him the name of "Undaunted Dick." Many a time during this career of sin the Spirit of God strove with him, and he would cry for mercy, but the feeling soon passed away; he did not yet see himself, or realise his lost condition. He grew weary of home and the restraint of his mother's prayers, and one night struck her to the ground. Then he left home for a colliery in Staffordshire, where his brothers worked.

Now, being free from all restraint, he gave himself up to every kind of evil, and became a terror to the very men amongst whom he lived. He left that colliery, and went to another town in Staffordshire, while the praying mother kept pleading for the prodigal, and wrote letters to show him that he was remembered still.

He says: "Once I received a letter from my mother, which I asked a companion of mine to read for me—(I was not able to read then). My mother generally closed her letters with the words, 'I will never give thee up.' So when he had read the letter, he asked me, 'What does she mean by that?' 'Why, that she will never give up praying for me,' I replied; 'burn it, Tom.' 'Nay,' he said, 'it will never do to burn thy praying mother's letter;' and the tears rolled down his cheeks, as he added, 'I wish I had a praying mother; I wish my mother was alive, Dick. Her last words to me when she was dying were, "My son, will you meet me in heaven?" And by God's help I will meet her in heaven; give me thy mother's letter.' And he there and then bade me good-night, and left me. I never saw him again; but, after I was brought to Christ, I received a letter from his brother-in-law, enclosing my mother's letter, stating that it was the turning-point in his life, and that he had died in peace and joy in the Holy Ghost, triumphant through the blood. Thus God honoured the tried and faithful mother."

In the year 1852 Richard went to live with his brother George, the underground manager of a colliery, who had been brought to the Lord, and was a preacher among the Primitive Methodists. Here his mother's prayers were answered. He says:—

I was engaged to fight a man on the Saturday, May 21. On the Wednesday night before the battle I lay in bed planning and scheming how I could beat my opponent. My brother had been to a cottage-meeting that night, and, as I lay there thinking, he came home, and went into the kitchen. His wife asked, "What was the text, George?" He made answer, "What then shall I do?"

Now as I lay listening to their talk I thought to myself, "What a funny text! there must be something more than that." Then I thought, "Yes, what then shall I do when God rises up in judgment against me?" I turned over in bed, and heaved a deep sigh. "Ah," I thought, "I shall be damned." The Spirit of God carried that text into my heart, and nailed it in a sure place. I could neither sleep nor pray. A conflict was raging between the powers of Satan and the power of God, and my soul was the battle-ground. The devil held up to view the coming fight, and said, "If you get converted now they will think you are afraid of fighting." There he had me.

That night passed away, and morning came. When it was time to get up and go to work my brother called me, but I said I was not well, and was not going. I was afraid to go to the pit lest I should be killed, and go right to hell. All that day I could do nothing, and again on the Thursday night lay groaning and tossing. On Friday morning I went out, spent seven shillings in drink, and had a sparring "do" with a well-known pugilist. I had a four-mile walk home, and every step I took the earth seemed opening to swallow me up. I fell on my knees, and asked God to spare me till morning, promising then to go and pray in the field I was to fight in. Next morning early I went to the field, and there, in a sand-hole, fell on my knees. I did not know what to say; there I knelt, trembling. At last I said, "Now, Lord Jesus, I am on my knees, and I will shut my eyes, and will not open them again till Thou hast pardoned my sins." The devil whispered, "You don't know whether you are elected or not," but I still knelt on with shut eyes, and I thought I heard my mother's voice saying, "My dear boy, 'God so loved the world, that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life.'" I had heard that believing was taking God at his word, and I reasoned that if God loved the world, He loved me; that was the first step. And if I accepted his gift to me, then "Whosoever" spelled "Richard Weaver." There and then joy and peace came.

He immediately began to tell others what the Lord had done for his soul. When he went to the colliery on the following Monday he found that the news had spread far and wide that "Undaunted Dick had got saved." Few believed it, many mocked, but the Lord gave him grace, and in after years many of these old companions were brought to Christ through his preaching. At the time of his conversion he owed pounds for drink, but now never rested till all his debts were paid, taking the opportunity of telling the publicans the change that had been wrought in him.

For more than six months he walked in the light of the Lord; then, under great provocation, he was led into fighting. Like a madman he rushed into a public-house, calling for ale, which the landlady refused to give him, seeing that something was wrong. Then he was overcome by a sense of transgression; the fact of having gone into a public-house weighed on his mind; he lost peace and confidence, and became a backslider. What misery might have been saved if he had acted, then and there, on the assurance, "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins." He thus describes his next action:—

> Now that I had fallen I was determined to settle accounts with the man I was to have fought with on the day of my conversion. I went to him, and said, "Now I have backslidden, and you know how you have taunted and insulted me; now we will settle that fight once for all." We met about a week after, and in the first round I broke his jaw with a blow of my fist, and was hailed the victor. Some years afterwards, when preaching in a Primitive Methodist chapel, the power of God filled the place, and I invited anyone who desired to turn to the Lord to go into the vestry. A man and woman jumped up, and led the way, and forty or fifty others followed. In the after-meeting I was standing on a form, when the man who had gone in first came out of the vestry rejoicing. He asked permission to speak, and, turning to the people, said, "The last time I saw Richard he broke my jaw, but to-night God, by his preaching, has broken my heart. I came in here to-night unsaved, but I go home washed in the blood of the Lamb."

Richard could not bear to remain on the scene of his fall, so went to work at Clayton Collieries, near Manchester. Here he sank deeper and became the associate of some of the worst characters in the town. But the Lord was watching over his erring child.

> One night I was sparring with a black man, and as we stood up face to face, God's Spirit brought these words into my mind: "The same Lord over all is rich unto all that call upon Him." "Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved." "The blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin." "Here," I said, "pull off these boxing-gloves; never shall another pair be put on my hands." I went home to my lodgings, and there poured out my soul to the Lord, praying Him to heal my backsliding, and to deliver me from the corruption of sin. The Lord answered me, "I, even I, am He that blotteth out thy transgressions for mine own sake, and will not remember thy sins." Next day I went to the Wesleyan chapel, and joined the Society.

In January, 1853, Richard married one who proved a true helpmeet. At this time he worked in the colliery all day, giving evenings and Sabbaths to the Lord's work, and receiving many tokens of blessing. In 1855 Edward Usher and John Hambleton came to Hyde on Bible-carriage work, Richard Weaver and a brother collier joining them at their meetings in the market-place. Next year Mr. Reginald Radcliffe came, and during his visit many were led to the Lord. Shortly afterwards he sent for Richard to come to Liverpool; at first this seemed impracticable, but after waiting on God the way was made plain for him to go. Mr. Radcliffe sent him to Chester to give away tracts and speak to people, in preparation for further work at the races. The next few years were employed in evangelistic work in Liverpool and the surrounding district; many were the signs that the Lord was working with his servant. One instance here must suffice:—

> One night as I was preaching in Liverpool, in the open air, a young girl came up to me and said, "Can Christ save me?" "Yes," I said, "for by the grace of God Christ tasted death for every man." "Ah, you don't know me!" "But, my dear sister, Christ knows you." "Oh, I am one of those forlorn creatures," she began to say. "I don't care what you are," said I, "He is able to save, unto the uttermost, all them that come unto God by Him." "Can He save me here? Can He save me now?" "Yes; now is the accepted time; only try Him." "Then," she said, "if I perish, I will perish here, crying to Him to have mercy upon me." She was standing by the parapet of the bridge, and she dropped upon her knees and cried out, "Lord, if Thou canst save a poor prostitute, save me here, and save me now. Lord, I believe that for the sake of Jesus thou canst save me now." She wrestled in prayer awhile, and presently got up, lifted her hands, and said, with streaming eyes:—
> My God is reconciled,
>   His pardoning voice I hear,
> He owns me for his child,
>   I can no longer fear:
> With confidence I now draw nigh,
>   And "Father, Abba Father," cry.

> I took her with me to Mr. Radcliffe's house, and she was afterwards sent to her friends; she is now a happy Christian wife and mother.

After this Richard was for some time employed as town missionary at Prescot, where some of the most remarkable experiences happened to him (see his "Life"). He left Prescot to devote himself to work as an evangelist wherever the Lord might call him. He laboured in many places in England, Scotland, Ireland and Wales, and was allowed to see much fruit to his Master's glory.

One Sunday evening, during his first visit to Edinburgh, he was advertised to preach on Arthur's Seat. He says:—

> All round and above me was a natural amphitheatre, and I faced the people, who ranged themselves on the hillside. What a crowd was there! I took as my text, "How long halt ye between two opinions?" That was one of the most wonderful nights in all my history. At the close of the meeting I was accosted by a woman, who told me that while I stood on that platform she was winding her way along the foot of the hill, sad and sorrowful. As she went she heard voices singing, so left the track, and turned towards the sound, and as she drew near, the first words she heard were, "Christ for me." The crowd was so large that I had to take refuge in a shop while a cab was sent for to take me to the Assembly Hall, where we were to hold an inquirers' meeting.
> I could not describe the scene, nor the numbers of men and women who, with broken hearts, were seeking Christ. Many a poor soul professed > find the pearl of great price at that meeting, and among them the woman I have referred to. She came to me, and drew from under her cloak a rope, saying, "Take this, sir; I was on my way to commit suicide by drowning myself, and this rope was to tie my legs; but I was drawn by the Spirit of God to your meeting, and here in this room, instead of being drowned and damned, I am saved, and have life in Christ my risen Lord. Oh, sir! don't despair to preach to the chief of sinners. I praise God that ever you sang that hymn, 'Christ for me.'"

Richard Weaver's health at length broke down under his continued labours, and he was brought to death's door. But the Lord had more work for him, and raised him up again. An old friend took him for a rest to his house at Oldham, and while there some factory-masters in Hollinwood, near Oldham, asked him to settle amongst them, and visit the people round. It was supposed to be one of the roughest and wickedest places in Lancashire, but here cottage-meetings were started, Bibles distributed, Sunday services held in the Workmen's Hall, and many of the worst characters in the place were brought to the feet of Jesus. A new building was erected to hold the increasing congregations, and for five years Richard worked here. Then he again gave up a settled resting-place, and resumed his more extended evangelistic work, in which he is still engaged. May he be spared to win yet many a jewel for the Saviour's crown.

PASTOR CHINIQUY'S WORK.

Dear Sir,—I have just received a letter from Pastor Chiniquy in which he desires me to transmit through you the assurance of his gratitude to his "Christian sisters and brothren in Great Britain" for having so nobly come to his rescue in the time of his trial. He writes:—

"Surely our merciful heavenly Father has heard the humble supplications of his unprofitable servant when He has chosen you and so many others of his faithful children to save me from the fiery furnace which the enemy had prepared for my destruction.

"I could give you and my English benefactors many facts to rejoice your Christian hearts, if the short limits of a letter would allow it. But I cannot conceal from you that, three weeks ago, it was my unspeakable joy to open again the doors of the Converted Priests' Home to one of the most known and respected priests of Canada—whose name is Lectair. He is sixty years old and has been the Father-Confessor of the two Bishops of Wallawalla and of Vancouver. Without going into details of this new and admirable manifestation of the mercies of God, let me tell you that I have never seen anything more touching and marvellous than the conversion of that remarkable and venerated priest.

"Without you, and without the Christian sympathies you have so nobly enlisted in my favour, this last year, my Mission would have been a most ignominious wreck...But, thanks be to God, this Mission has been, this year, one of the greatest evangelical successes of my life. For the dear Saviour's sake and not for my sake, I am still in need of your fervent prayers and your material help.

"May the merciful God give you a most happy year is the prayer of your devoted and grateful brother in Christ, "C. Chiniquy."

The amount sent to me, and by me forwarded to Pastor Chiniquy up to date, is £185 0s. 3d.

Yours very faithfully,
12, Princes-square, W. Frank H. White.

SOUL WINNING AND PRAYER UNION.—Promise for February 10 (Jer. xxxi. 14):—"I will satiate the soul of the priests with fatness, and my people shall be satisfied with my goodness, saith

CHRISTIAN SOCIALISM.

It has been said that we cannot rightly understand the attitude of Jesus towards the civilisation of his day, if we do not take into consideration the economic conditions of society in Judea during our Lord's lifetime on earth. There can be no doubt that the keenest sympathies of Christ were aroused by the bitterness of the oppression under which the poor were labouring, for the Gospels teem with Divine utterances against misused wealth and power, and Divine words of comfort for the lowly and oppressed. Unworldliness and unselfishness were the keynotes of much of Christ's teaching, and He who had not where to lay his head exemplified in his own life the practical application of that which He taught. As Heber Newton has finely remarked, Jesus followed in the line of the goodly fellowship of the prophets in his recognition of the under-currents of social dissatisfaction, and of "the aspirations that found no vent in the souls of myriads of men."

To every thoughtful student who looks at the life of Jesus in this aspect, it is evident that just as the most remarkable portion of the Hebrew legislation was socialistic, and the strongest denunciations of the inspired prophets were poured forth upon individual and national departures from the principles of primitive Hebrew society, so the most powerful of Christ's laws of life, and indignant protests against selfishness and greed, had the same tendency. Jesus came to elevate and ennoble humanity, and He found in the way of that elevation no enemy more potent than the worldliness of those who in many ways refused his teachings, because in their purblind sight He was only "the carpenter's son."

There are many Christians who do not care to think of Jesus as condescending from purely spiritual things to the lower level of practical moralities. But all such lose more than they gain, for in refusing to recognise the many-sided character of the God-man, they lose the comfort which is to be derived from a knowledge or a consciousness of his close relation to our suffering humanity. Christ was intensely human, and, therefore, his heart throbbed responsively to all the sorrows and troubles of the lowly life about Him. If to-day Christianity seems to myriads of our working people to have lost much of its ancient reality, it is perhaps because, in dealing with the kingdom of heaven, men have too often forgotten that the position of that realm is within, not without, and that its clear light should shine not from without and upon the daily life, but from within and through the life.

And so it has come to pass that Socialism has now "a strange and delusive potency," its strength being due, almost entirely, to the sins of the society which it would destroy; for if in the days of Jesus in Judea the evils of society were such as to influence perceptibly the teachings of Christ Himself, in these later times they have grown and developed in proportion to the development and growth of civilisation. Yet there is no room for hopelessness, for although the canker may have eaten deeply into the very roots of national existence, whatever vitality remains we owe to Christianity, and the leaves of that tree of life are "for the healing of the nations."

It is surely a healthy symptom that there regard to everything concerning the circumstances and surroundings of the toiling poor, and it is a remarkable fact that every revival of religion in England, for more than a century back, has been followed by a similar wave of sympathy, and by a consequent outburst of philanthropic effort. But there is room for alarm lest the ground swell which is to-day moving the usually calm waters of Christian life may subside, as did those which resulted from the previous spiritual quickenings, and leave hardly a trace behind. We need not anticipate such a result, however, and we ought to rejoice in every effort honestly put forth in the endeavour to bring society face to face with the ethics of Christ in regard to social questions. One command of Jesus, "All things whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, even so do ye also unto them; for this is the law and the prophets" (Matt. vii. 12), would, if generally obeyed, sweep away the so-called science of Political Economy, and the terrible evils upon which its hard and cruel axioms have been based, and revolutionise and reform the whole of our modern life. Eighteen centuries have passed away since that command was given, but the world is not yet ready to receive it in its simplicity. Therefore, it cannot be too frequently whispered into the world's ears, that here and there men may be led by shame, if not by love, into some sort of obedience to the mind of Christ.

Thirty-six years ago Christian Socialism had its little band of ardent followers, who attacked "cruel cheapness" in brave pamphlets upon "Cheap Clothes and Nasty," and who in many other ways laboured hard to infuse the spirit of brotherhood into trade. At intervals since, there have been efforts to create societies with a like object. Of late, however, the prominence which has been given to social questions, and the fact that they have been pressed upon the attention of religious people, have led to the formation of several associations of "Christian Socialists." The programme of one of these, having its centre at Clifton and Bristol, has been very skilfully compiled to show the points of contrast between our present economical system and a possible Christian Socialist system, and we have been deeply interested by it. At the same time, after setting aside two or three of the possibilities as being more than Utopian, we find there is little suggested in it which is not included in a few of our Lord's commands.

The prospectus of the London Society, if more condensed, is not less comprehensive. It opens with the statement that "the ideal of Christian Socialism is found in Jesus Christ," and the promise that "all its operations will be based on the spirit of his life," and it asserts that the measures which it advocates will make it possible, "under the altered conditions of modern life, for men to put into practice the principles taught by Christ." We should have thought that the adoption of the principles inculcated by Christ ought to precede, and must necessarily precede, altered conditions in modern life, and we have no hope that any radical reform will take place that does not result from the wider acceptance of the teachings of Jesus. That those Divine utterances are diametrically opposed to the mammon worship of to-day, every thoughtful reader of the New Testament is well aware; and if there still exist crying evils and abuses which Christianity ought to have fought with and overcome long ago, it is due to the fact that even Christians have failed to take Christ's words literally. Most of our ligious questions, and the Church of Christ will have to take some of them out of the hands of those who hitherto have only trifled with them.

The formation of these societies of "Christian Socialists" is a sign of the times, but there will have to be something more than the isolated action of a few associations of the kind, before any great and important change can be wrought in the constitution of modern society. The day will come when every Christian shall recognise that he is "pledged by his redemption" to be a co-worker with Christ in lessening human wrong and sin and sorrow, and that work will not be so much of destruction as of renovation. The universal observance of that one of the commands of Jesus to which we have already alluded, would bring about the Millennium, and obedience to it on the part of Christians only would go far to remedy many of our social evils. The greatest problems of the present age are capable of solution only upon certain conditions, and it is useless endeavouring to solve them unless we are prepared to deal with them in the spirit of Him who gave us the simple truth that we cannot worship God and mammon.

OUR TRAMPS.

MISS BARNETT, who carries on work amongst this class, relates a touching case of conversion resulting from a recent visit to one of our country unions. She has lately been enabled to supply twenty-one workhouses with libraries for casuals, floral wall cards, and Gospels and tracts for distribution to each tramp who could read. It is desired that other unions should share in these advantages. Miss Barnett having sent an appeal for co-operation to the six hundred and fifty workhouses in England and Wales, received replies from about two hundred. The direct result of this was that at Halifax the Guardians made arrangements with two Scripture-readers, who ever since have regularly visited the tramps. At Ipswich a lady kindly volunteered. At Beverley a Guardian took up the work, and now holds special services for the tramps. At the Cheltenham Union the casuals assemble night and morning for prayers. A tramp-master writes: "I cannot refrain from expressing the hope that nothing will induce you to hold your hand in the good work in which you are engaged, and from which blessings seen and unseen must flow."

Experienced Christian workers are needed to assist in this growing work, which has the warm sympathy of Mr. Jenner Fust, Local Government Inspector, who says, in reply to a request that tramps might be admitted to the regular services of the inmates, or invited to special services, that he will do what he can to bring about such desirable results. Miss Barnett's address is 2, Eldon-villas, Battledown, Cheltenham.

BETHEL SANTHAL MISSION.—Dr. A. Haegert, in a recent letter to Mr. Burn, 186, Aldersgate-street, says he and his wife have been ill with malarious fever for four weeks, and that their little daughter died after two days' illness. The unusual heavy rains had given a splendid crop to the hillmen; but, as soon as they began cutting it, malarious fever, death, and destruction walked through the country. "In Rampore, there are only two Christian families; both heads of the houses are ill; in every house in the village was one patient, and in four families were two patients each." Since his return to India, in 1882, Mr. Haegert has baptized 227 men and women. Ten new chapels were being built in different villages, two having been opened in June and July last year. Eight dispensaries have also been opened by native preachers whom Mr. Haegert had trained. "They attended patients from ninety-five villages during the year, saving much life, and removing much

THE CHURCHES AND MISSIONS.

By Mr. REGINALD RADCLIFFE.

A few nights ago, being in the company of a number of the Secretaries of the Evangelical Foreign Missionary Societies in London, I was struck by the earnest desire expressed by a clergyman that during the second week of February—the week fixed by the Church of England for their simultaneous Foreign Missionary meetings — similar meetings should be held by the other denominations. We may well rejoice and be thankful for the increased sympathy towards foreign missions of the last few years; and are not many looking for an advance altogether greater within the present year, 1887? The Salvation Army has given us notice that it intends to pour into India fresh recruits; and the following letter, just received from Mr. Hudson Taylor, draws aside the curtain, and shows us what missionaries kneeling together on the soil of China are expecting of us for that country during this year.

> Dear Friend, — A number of us here are banded together in daily prayer for a hundred new missionaries by the end of 1887. Will you join us in prayer, and do what in you lies to help us in this enterprise? Bringing the need forward at such meetings as you may hold, or be present at, and letting it be known that there is something practical—that men and women are wanted, and wanted immediately.
> Sometimes, when the hearts of men are stirred, there is an indefiniteness which makes the matter come to nothing. They do not know where to turn; they do not know whether, if they were to offer themselves for any particular work, there would be any chance of their acceptance for several years to come, and the opportunity passes by. In our revival work, by an after-meeting, we try to bring people to an immediate decision for Christ. Do not you think we want missionary after-meetings to bring men and women to immediate decision for missionary service?
> Yours affectionately in Christ,
> China, Dec. 10. J. Hudson Taylor.

But now tidings have arrived of the marvellous proclamations to the Chinese from their Imperial Government, explaining that Christian missionaries seek only to make bad men good; that they are to be protected throughout the Empire, and in the villages to be looked upon as guests, and that the motives of any Chinaman in embracing Christianity are never to be inquired into; that he does not thereby cease to be a Chinaman, and that all are to continue to live together in peace. When, since the Saviour walked upon the earth, has there been issued such a proclamation reaching so many hundred millions of the world's population! How incalculably more numerous may the doors be now that this extraordinary proclamation is being spread through that land.

Yet this is only China. What shall be said for Africa? One of its youngest missionary associations working in the nearest part of it to this country, has just met with such striking encouragement that it is now increasing its workers by a third. South of its mission field lies the vastest, untouched missionary area on the globe, with a population of 50 to 100 millions, and without a single Christian worker, though the Mahommedans are hastening to proselytise. Then, what is to be done for the wants of India, Corea, Thibet, Central Asia, Arabia, South America, for European places, and for the scattered Jews? Surely, the speedy sending out of this detachment of one hundred, prayed for by Mr. Hudson Taylor, will be an incentive to America, to Scotland, to Ireland, to England, to our Colonies and faithful co-workers on the continent of Europe, to make a general forward movement during 1887 upon the whole world.

But, to be practical, we must take the globe in detail, and be definite. Here, then, is Mr. Hudson Taylor's cry for one hundred men and women, wanted immediately; and the whole of these should depart to China before this year is out. Who will help? Who will go? Aye, and who will stay at home and pray—not for men and women merely—but that the wrong ones may be kept back? For what a dreadful drag must be a wrong missionary! A clergyman of the Church of England, who has just given up his position and sailed for India, desired me to say, "Rather send one missionary filled with the Holy Ghost than a thousand others."

Furthermore, although it be now too late to have missionary meetings simultaneously with those of the Church of England in the second week of February, would it not be a lovely sight to witness, as early in this year as could be arranged, meetings for the evangelisation of the world, amongst as many congregations as possible, in places of worship? also similar meetings, or even conferences, in theatres and halls, either under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. or the Y.W.C.A.,* or in connection with our numerous missions and evangelistic associations? In this crisis—when the heathen's bitter cry against slavery, opium, brandy, child widowhood, and human sacrificing still goes up to heaven—will not many of our zealous evangelists, whom God is honouring in this land, think of terminating more of their missions at home by devoting the last day for the heathen, either by a Conference or otherwise? Again, some of them have been greatly blessed in labouring beyond this little Britain. To name but one, and himself departed, "Harry Moorhouse." Will not others be induced to extend their parish as he did?

* Our sisters are very greatly needed as missionaries; and in regard to woman's work amongst the heathen, are we not behind our American friends?

DISTRESS IN SOUTH WALES.

Dear Sir,—Allow me to thank your readers who have so kindly rendered us assistance to mitigate the suffering and relieve distress in this district from time to time. There are hundreds of colliers, miners, and ironworkers out of employment here at the present time, and have been so for the last ten or twelve weeks, through the depression in trade, failure of firms, and the closing of works. The earnings of these men are very small, even when regularly employed. I fear that few think, as they sit by their firesides, that these poor colliers, exposed to innumerable dangers, cut the coal for the small sum of from 10¾d. to 1s. 10d. per ton, out of which the helper has to be paid, candles or oil for light and tools bought. The earnings of ironworkers average about the same as the colliers. It must, therefore, be apparent to all that these poor people, when working full time, are barely able to earn the necessaries of life, and now that they are unemployed their condition is most pitiful, especially the little children.

We have fitted up two soup-kitchens in the most affected parts of the Pontypool Valley, worked by voluntary helpers, who know and visit each case. And, while we endeavour to supply the temporal need, we also seek to lead them to Him who said, "It is written, Man shall not live by bread alone."—Yours gratefully,

Thos. M. Wintle.

YOUNG MEN and MISSIONARY WORK.

Young men are to the fore just now, and the element which through them is being introduced into the Church, is one full of promise and strength. To look upon a large assemblage of bright, earnest young faces, as has been our privilege of late in many a home of the Y.M.C.A. is most inspiriting, and we do not wonder that more than one of those, already past middle age, who from time to time have addressed the audience have averred their intention of remaining Young Men to the end of the chapter. As a member of the Y.M.C.A., one said he must always be a young man; to be much with young men is necessarily to catch something of their glow and enthusiasm, and these are good evidences of youthfulness of heart, a great desideratum in these days.

Young men now are making missionary work their own, and have themselves established a Foreign Missionary Society at 186, Aldersgate-street. This, as Mr. Burn told us, at a united meeting of the Church Missionary Society Lay Workers' Union and of the Society just referred to, on Friday evening last, has, in the three-and-a-half years since its formation, sent forth eight of its members into the foreign mission-field, and has ten more in training, hoping to go forth as the Lord shall open the way. The object of the Society is to facilitate the passage of young men from a business life into the mission-field, and this is done in several ways: By cultivating the missionary spirit in the hearts of young men by means of public weekly prayer-meetings; by helping those who are in training by grants of books, &c.; by evangelising foreigners in London. In this way much good has already been done, several of their number being engaged in visiting the opium dens in the East of London, one result of this being that ten or twelve Chinamen now meet together every week, in a little room that had been hired for the purpose, to listen to the Gospel message. Young men have thus had an opportunity of coming in contact with representatives of the people amongst whom they hope ultimately to labour. Another feature of the Society's work is represented by the fact that twelve deputations were last year sent to Glasgow, Liverpool, and other towns. Mr. Burn, in reference to the subject of the evening, "The Responsibility of Young Men," said this was not half realised. He also pointed out that it was by the individual effort of each one that great results would be accomplished.

In the early part of the evening, after a few words of hearty greeting from the chairman, Mr. F. W. Lawrence, an interesting address was given by Rev. C. F. Warren, who has been ten years in Japan. He sketched the progress of Christianity in that country, more especially during the period named. He concluded by asking, as he was prevented from going out again, "Are there any who will go in my stead?"

The Conference on "The Responsibility of Young Men with regard to Foreign Missions" was opened by Rev. H. P. Grubb, one of the members of the C.M.S. Lay Workers' Union, who laid it down as essential that they should look upon the world lying in darkness, as Christ did. Some spoke of missionary work as though it were of secondary interest, coming after the building of churches and the evangelising of people at home. But the Lord did not thus distinguish between home and foreign work, and their object should be to be like Him.

A number of young men followed with brief addresses, amongst which were some practical suggestions of value. Of this kind was one to devote money now spent upon things not necessary, to mission work, and for large Associations, such as that at Aldersgate-street and Exeter Hall each to support its own missionary, smaller associations to combine together with this object. This was expanded into the suggestion that each church should send out its own missionary, supporting him and receiving reports direct from him; they would thus keep in touch with efforts amongst the heathen to an extent

THE OPIUM INIQUITY

By Rev. GOODEVE MABBS.

In these days when missionary zeal grows, and deeds of mercy are multiplied, will you permit me to call the attention of your readers to obligations of another kind, resting upon Christian people with regard to a great national sin? However imperative the call may be to engage in works of Christian charity, in the method of God's government righteousness is the indispensable foundation of truly Christian conduct. In God's word, before the admonition "love mercy," stands the obligation, "do justly;" and justice and judgment are more acceptable to Him than sacrifice. Neither Christian activities at home, nor missionary works abroad, can absolve Christ's disciples from the duty of redressing injustice and iniquity done in their name, even though it be committed on the other side of the globe. The Master would say, "These ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone." It was to a people of whom God said, "Yet they seek me daily, and delight to know my ways," that the prophet was bidden, "Cry aloud, spare not, lift up thy voice like a trumpet, and declare unto my people their transgression." He was to warn them that, if they really desired God's favour, not only must they feed the hungry, gather the outcast, and clothe the naked; their first and paramount duty was "to loose the bonds of wickedness, to undo the bands of the yoke, and to let the oppressed go free."

If, trumpet tongued, the prophet of the Lord were among us to day, is there any act of national wrong-doing against which he would cry more loudly than against our opium trade with China? For the sake of the revenues which it yields in India—dependence upon which nevertheless imperils the prosperity of that country—Christian England has too long allowed the British name to be dishonoured, a grievous yoke to be imposed upon China, and a very great stumbling-block to obstruct the progress of Christ's kingdom among 300,000,000 of the human race. Under different phases, but always with gathering force, this great evil has existed for more than a century. How much longer will British Christians suffer it to endure?

If the truth must be told, the upas tree of the opium trade has been nurtured in the soil of British cupidity. But it exists only because of British ignorance. Let the truth about it be known, as it ought to be, and the quickened national conscience will speedily uproot it. Yet how is this to be accomplished unless Christian people exert themselves to bring it about? Permit me, therefore, as briefly as the case will admit, to draw the attention of your readers to some of the objectionable features which characterise this crime against humanity, dealing with the question first upon the Indian side.

Our Connection with the Trade.—In British India the opium trade is a gigantic Government monopoly. Without a Government license no opium can be grown. Government advances enable the cultivator to sow the seed. Government agents inspect the growth. To the Government officials the crude opium is delivered up, at the price which the Government fixes. In the at a profit of about 300 per cent., to be carried to China. The proceeds, amounting to some five millions sterling, are put into the Government Treasury. Could our connection with the trade be closer, or our responsibility for it more complete?

Opium is also grown in Malwa, and one or two other native States, and sent to Bombay for shipment to China. As it crosses British territory, a tax equal to half its value, is levied upon it by British officials. From this source a further sum of about two and a half millions sterling passes into the Government coffers. In proportion as we have made a market for opium in China, so this branch of the trade has grown.

Our Stake in the Trade.—Altogether some 7½ millions sterling of revenue per annum have been derived in India from the opium trade, although the amount is variable. Practically, this goes to pay the salaries of Indian officials who administer the Government. Are the benefits of British administration in India only obtainable by means of a trade which deals in misery and death?

Opium withheld from India.—In most parts of India the consumption of opium is discouraged as much as possible, in order to protect the natives from its effects. Nevertheless, a good deal is secreted by the cultivators, and where it is grown its baneful influence has increasingly prevailed. On this account the Government of Bombay declined the request of the Government of India, that opium might be grown in that presidency. But if its use is harmful to India, what conduct can be more reprehensible than, for the sake of profit, to promote its consumption elsewhere?

The Bitter Cry of the Burmese.—After its conquest by Great Britain, opium was introduced by us into British Burmah. It wrought so much mischief that the bitter cry of the inhabitants compelled our Indian Government to institute official inquiries respecting the grounds of complaint. The Chief Commissioner of the province thus summed up the evidence obtained:—

> The papers now submitted for consideration present a painful picture of the demoralisation, misery, and ruin produced among the Burmese by opium smoking. . . . These show that, among the Burmans, the habitual use of the drug saps the physical and mental energies, destroys the nerves, and emaciates the body, predisposes to disease, induces indolent and filthy habits of life, destroys self-respect, is one of the most fertile sources of misery, destitution, and crime; fills the jails with men of relaxed frame, predisposes to dysentery and cholera; prevents the due extension of cultivation and the development of the land revenue, checks the natural growth of the population, and enfeebles the constitution of succeeding generations.

In consequence of this testimony the Government of India closed fifty out of sixty licensed shops, and raised the price of the drug. Yet, so insatiable is the opium craving when once it has been established, that, from an area so greatly diminished, the revenue derived from opium has increased. Who shall tell how greatly the results of our selfish opium policy in the past may have contributed to create the resistance with which we are now somewhat unexpectedly meeting in Upper Burmah? And if self-interest has compelled us, at least in part, to listen to the cry of the Burmese whom we govern, must it not be cruelly wicked to close our ears against the long-continued wailing of China, where the mischief is so much more widely diffused, and to insist that she shall

THE SECRET OF THE SAINTS.

To play through life a perfect part,
  Unnoticed and unknown;
To seek no rest in any heart,
  Save only God's alone.
In little things to own no will,
  To have no share in great,
To find the labour ready still,
  And for the crown to wait.

Upon the brow to bear no trace
  Of more than common care,
To write no secret in the face
  For men to read it there.
The daily cross to clasp and bless,
  With such familiar zeal,
As hides from all that not the less
  The daily weight you feel.

In toils that praise will never pay
  To see your life go past;
To meet in every coming day,
  Twin sister of the last;
To hear of high, heroic things,
  And yield them reverence due,
But feel life's daily offerings
  Are far more fit for you.

To woo no secret, soft disguise,
  To which self-love is prone,
Unnoticed by all other eyes,
  Unworthy in your own;
To yield with such a happy art
  That no one thinks you care,
And say to your poor bleeding heart,
  "How little can you bear."

Oh! 'tis a pathway hard to choose,
  A struggle hard to share,
For human pride would still refuse
  The nameless trials there.
But since we know the gate is low
  That leads to heavenly bliss,
What higher grace could God bestow
  Than such a life as this?

WORK IN THE WORKHOUSE.

A correspondent, who writes to us from Gateshead-on-Tyne, calls the attention, especially of the young, to the visitation of workhouses and infirmaries. There are many towns (she says) where no systematic visitation by ladies takes place, and there are many young Christians anxious to be doing something. Having herself been led some five years ago to visit the workhouse in her neighbourhood, all hesitation was at once dispelled by seeing "how the poor, dull faces brightened at our entrance, and how eager all were for sympathy. The monotony of the life struck me as dreadful, and familiarity with it in no wise lessens the first impression. I think the brightest examples of patient suffering and bright Christian testimony amid much discouragement that I have met with have been in that workhouse."

After describing the glad welcome given to the visitors, and referring to the many ways in which these poor people may be helped, our correspondent gives an illustration of the kind thoughtfulness of one of the young lady visitors. "During last summer, on her birthday, she hired a phaeton, and, with the permission of the master of the workhouse, conveyed in detachments literally the maimed, the halt, and the blind, to her mother's garden, only a small one, but like heaven to these poor things. There they were tenderly cared for, arm chairs and sofas set on the grass, and they sat and enjoyed the balmy air and partook of a bountiful tea. I was never at such a birthday party. One woman said, 'It is like the marriage supper of the Lamb;' and another, 'I cannot eat for weeping to think anyone would take all this trouble for us.'" Our correspondent is anxious to in-

THE STORY OF JACOB RE-TOLD.

XIV.—REST, AND THE REST-GIVER.

Genesis XLIX.

There is much of interest in these dying words of Jacob, through which Israel the Prince shines so conspicuously. We can but touch them as we pass, as the sea-bird touches the wave, for higher themes allure us.

It would, for instance, be interesting to mark their accuracy. Reuben, though the firstborn, never excelled, no judge, prophet, or ruler sprang from his tribe. Simeon was almost absorbed in the nomad tribes of Southern Palestine. The cities in which the sons of Levi dwelt were scattered throughout all the tribes. Vestiges of terraced vineyards still attest how well the hilly province assigned to Judah suited the culture of the vine. Zebulon embosomed the lake of Galilee, and stretched away toward the coast of the blue Mediterranean. Esdraelon, the battlefield of Palestine, where Assyria from the North and Egypt from the South often met in deadly feud, lay within the limits of Issachar. Dan was small as an adder, but, like it, could inflict dangerous wounds on any invader who had to pass by it towards the heart of the country. Gad, much pressed by border war; Asher, notable for fertility; Naphtali, famous for eloquence; Benjamin, cruel as a wolf; all these justified the prophecy of their dying ancestor, whilst the mighty tribes of Ephraim and Manasseh, sprung from the sons of Joseph, inherited to the full "the blessings of heaven above, blessings of the deep that lieth under, blessings of the breasts and of the womb, blessings to the utmost bound of the everlasting hills."

It would be interesting, also, to mark their beauty. They abound in observation and description of animal nature, indicating the habits of the shepherd's life, with which, from his earliest days, Jacob must have been familiar. The lion's whelp, couching in his lair, refusing to be roused up, because satisfied with a sufficient meal. The ass and her colt browsing on the young grapes of the vine. The serpent lurking in the sand, and springing out as the horse passes him, with venomous sting. The wolf, with stealthy tread, seeking his prey at night. The slender, gentle hind. Then, too, the vineyards, rich with grapes, that stain the garments of the peasants with blood-red juice, as they stamp them in the vats. The boughs running over the vineyard walls, in rich bounty, and giving refreshment to weary passers by. The bubbling waters of the spring. The beach of the distant sea. The blue outline of the everlasting hills in the far distance. All these bespeak a mind that loved natural beauty.

It would be interesting, also, to mark the close connection between the awards and the character of the bearded sons who stood around the withered, propped-up body of that dying man, whilst his spirit was flaming out in one last splendid outburst of prophetic and princelike glory, too much for the frail tenement to endure. Take, for example, the case of Reuben; he had committed a nameless sin years before; he might have hoped that it was all long since forgotten; but, no, here it re-appears, dragged into inevitable light, as ours must be, unless hidden beneath the Blood of Jesus. That sin deprived him of the primacy, that one sin. Was not this arbitrary? Not so, since it was the index of his character, and was the unerring evidence of an unstable nature, for sensuality and instability are one. As sensual indulgence palsies the nerves of the body, so it paralyses the strength and decision of the spirit. And there was this further dread effect of Reuben's sin. He not only entailed a loss of position and prestige on his descendants, but he transmitted to them his own character. On the threshold of Canaan they asked for land east of Jordan; they couldn't wait, they showed all the characteristics of the man of appetite, who places the present above the future, the seen above the

But amidst all this change of character, condition, and estate, there comes, in these dying words, the announcement of a personality, mysterious, ineffable, sublime, which dwarfs all others, as Mont Blanc the lesser elevations of his mountain realm, and before which that aged spirit bows in worship, illumining the withered face with a light not born of earth. What does he mean by those mystic words, describing the Shiloh, and his coming, and the gathering of the peoples to Him? There is a power in them that strangely stirs our spirits. We feel instinctively that we are face to face with Him before whom angels bow, veiling their faces with their wings. Again the words ring in our hearts: "The sceptre shall not depart from Judah, nor a lawgiver from between his feet, until Shiloh come; and unto Him shall the gathering of the peoples be."

I.—Let us try to understand them. The primacy of Israel, forfeited by Reuben, was transferred to Judah. The sceptre, or staff, surely indicates legislative authority; the lawgiver some kind of legislator; and the drift of meaning in the verse is that Judah should retain the primacy of the tribes, and should not fail to have some kind of government and some kind of governor until One came, of whom Jacob spoke as Shiloh.

And who is this Shiloh? The greatest modern Hebrew critics tell us that it is like the German Frederick—Rich in Peace, the Rest-giver, the Man of Rest. And of whom can this be true, but of One? Amid the vice and crimes of their times, an aged pair gave to their new-born son the name of Noah—Rest; and hoped that he would live to comfort them. It was, alas! a vain hope; the waters of the deluge were destined to sweep over their home and world. No man can give us rest. He, who shall give rest to the toiling populations of earth, must be more than man, and must be superior to those changes that toss us on their tumultuous billows. The true Shiloh can be none other than the Son of God, who, standing amongst earth's toiling millions, said, "Come unto Me, all ye that labour, and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

I have sometimes wondered where Jacob learnt this most sweet and true name of our Lord Jesus. Was it flashed into his heart, at that moment, for the first time? It may have been. But there is another supposition, which has often pleased me. You will remember that, at Peniel, Jacob asked the mysterious combatant his name. What answer did he receive? When Manoah asked a similar question, the angel of the Lord told him it was secret. But no such negative was spoken to Jacob. The angel simply said: "Wherefore is it that thou dost ask after my name? And He blessed him there." I have sometimes thought that, as He blessed him, He whispered in his ears this lovely title, which lingered in the old man's mind, as the years went on, and became invested with ever fuller and richer meaning, as he felt to need more urgently the balm and strength which it contained. To him that overcometh Christ promises to give a white stone, and in that stone a new name written, which is only known to him that receiveth it. Why should He not have done as much for that old-world patriarch, who had overcome in his defeat, and had gone from wrestling in full strength to halting on shrunken thigh? And it would be only natural that, at the moment of full surrender, He should teach him the secret of rest. This is the universal order of Christian living, first the resistance, then the shrunken sinew, then the yielding and clinging, and finally rest.

Jacob, then, believed that the Rest-giver would come at length, and that, when He came, people would be gathered to Him, not driven, as He had seen long strings of Nubian slaves driven, through the streets of Egyptian towns, but gathered as a hen gathers her chickens beneath her wing, or as the magnet attracts steel-filings to itself.

II.—Let us note, also, their Literal Fulfilment. For long centuries, Judah held the proud position assigned by the dying chieftain. The lion of the tribe of Judah brooked no rival.

are told, when Cyrus issued the proclamation that gave them liberty, "there arose up the chief of the fathers of Judah, and numbered unto them Sheshbazzar, the prince of Judah." It was Judah that returned from the captivity and gave the title Jew to every member of the race, and even up to the times of our Lord there were vestiges of the ancient government, in the council before which He was arraigned.

But the system had become decrepit and showed signs of passing away. We are told, for instance that when the Idumæan Herod was placed upon the throne, all Jewish patriots were in deep consternation. Men with wild and haggard looks, their garments rent, and ashes on their heads, went about the streets crying, "Woe unto us! woe unto us! for the sceptre is departed from Judah, and a lawgiver from between his feet." Still the complex machinery of inferior and superior courts lingered on, until that mighty explosion burst beneath the Jewish State, leaving not a single Jew within fifty miles of Bethlehem, and making it utterly impossible for Shiloh to come out of Judah.

Before this entire break-up of the Jewish system, the Shiloh came. When they were expecting Him at the front door, He stole in at the back. Whilst they were expecting Him with outward show, He came as the spring comes and as day breaks. He had rest in Himself. What else could have kept Him so calm, amid the tumult at Nazareth, and the raging of the storm on the lake of Galilee, and the mob in Gethsemane? And He gave rest; rest from weary years of pain, rest from tears and heartache, rest from sin.

And as He has spoken through the centuries, his still small voice has been heard above the fevered throb and pulse of human life, saying, "Come unto Me, come unto Me!" and spirits have arisen and gone forth to Him, drawn to Him as the publicans and sinners were of old, gathering to Him as the oppressed in the old kingdom of Saul gathered to David in Adullam's cave, furnishing material for a host, which was to carry everything before its victorious arms. "Thy people shall be free-will offerings in the day of thy power."

III.—Let us realise their Truth. What a variety of weary eyes will read these words; weary eyes, aching heads, tired bodies, breaking hearts. Tired of sitting at the task, which barely suffices to get bread for hungry little ones; tired of waiting for one who never comes; tired of bearing the slow torture of never-ceasing pain; tired of the strain of competition, ever waxing keener and more merciless; tired of the conflict against the evil around; tired of the war with self and sin within; tired of life—

> "Lord, oftentimes I am aweary quite
> Of my own self, my sin, my vanity;
> Yet be not Thou (or I am lost outright)
> Weary of me."

Would to God that each of these could understand that Jesus Christ, the true Shiloh, is able to give them, now and for evermore, rest! "Come unto Me all ye that are weary, and I will give you rest."

It is a royal word. If this were the only scrap of his words, we should feel Him to have been the royallest man that ever trod our world. He knows exactly what men want, and He feels that He has the secret, and is Himself the universal and unfailing reservoir of rest. What must not be the ocean-fulness of his heart, which can fill up every void and vacancy in all human spirits, as the tides of the Pacific, the stormless, restful ocean, fill up all the myriad indentations of every continent, and coral reef, and emerald isle, washed by their waves! What certainty is here; no doubt, or question, or fear of failure; no faltering in that clear voice, no hesitancy in that decisive accent. We may trust Him, brothers and sisters. He at least has learnt the law of equilibrium. He speaks that which He knows. He has Himself the rest He promises. Put yourselves into his hand. It will not take Him longer to give you rest, than it took Him to still the waves; they did not even need to rock themselves to rest: "immediately there was a great

We should not find it Hereafter, if we did not first find it Here. "We which believe do enter into rest." The rest remaineth, only in the sense of being unexhausted by all who have gone before. It awaits us in unstinted abundance.

The Shiloh-rest is not in Circumstances. That thought lies at the root of the teaching of the Epicurean, the Stoic, the worldly philosopher. But circumstances will never bring it, any more than change of posture will bring permanent relief to the pain-racked body. Here is a truer science, rest within, rest within the heart, while storms, and perplexities, and trials are swirling through the world; as the ocean depths are still enough to permit of perpetual deposits, while hurricanes sweep the surface; and as there is a point of calm in the midst of the fiercest whirlwind that ever marched across the desert sands.

The Shiloh-rest is not in Inaction. He invites us to no bank of roses, to no Elysian plain, to no parade-ground. In heaven, though they rest, yet they rest not. They rest in their blessed service. They serve without breaking their rest.

There is the strenuous putting forth of energy, but no strain, no effort, no sense of fatigue. And such is the rest He gives. Does He not speak of a burden and a yoke in the same breath as He speaks of Rest?

And it is not hard to get it. See! He gives it, and it does not need much effort to take a gift. He shows just where to look for it, and it is easy enough to find a thing if we know just where it lies. There seem to me but three conditions to be fulfilled by us.

(1) Surrender all to Him. As long as you try to wield that sceptre, or permit your will to be the lawgiver of your life, the Shiloh cannot come to you. You must give up your own efforts to save yourself, your own ideas of getting right with God, your own choice, your own way, your own will. You must as absolutely cease from your own works as God did from his on the Sabbath of his rest. You must hand over your sinful spirit to be saved by Him, you must surrender the keys of every room in your heart, you must be willing for Him to be supreme monarch of every province of your being, you must lie naked and open to Him as the victim before the priest. So only can you expect rest. And if you cannot bring your nature into this posture, ask Him to do it for you. Let your will crown Him, as our own Alfred was crowned, when the most of England was still ravaged by the Danes. He will not fail nor be discouraged, till He have put down all rule and authority and power, and made Himself supreme throughout heart and life.

(2) Trust Him by handing over all to Him. Hand over to Him all your sins and all your sorrows. He taketh away the sin of the world. Do not wait till sins have accumulated into a cloud or a mountain. Do not tarry till the time has come for evening prayer. Do not delay till you are alone. But as swiftly as you are conscious of any burden, pass it on to Jesus, cast all your care upon Him, for He careth for you, his eye is quick to see each effort to believe, and his heart is large enough to hold the troubles of the world. So soon as you give, He takes, and what He takes He also undertakes, and will see it made right for you, to your rejoicing and to his glory. This is the Blessed Rest of Faith; the Land of Promise into which our Joshua waits to lead all who trust Him.

(3) Take his yoke and learn of Him—i.e., do as He did. What did He do? What was his yoke? A yoke means submission. To whom did He submit? Not to man, not even to his mother, not to the suggestions of Satan, but to the Father's will. Whenever He saw the handwriting of that will He meekly yielded submission. This was the secret of his rest. To live in the will of God, this is rest. Be ever on the outlook for it, in every event, in every kindness or insult, in every letter, in every new friendship, in every discipline of Providence, and in every text of Scripture. And whenever you see it, take it. Do not wait for it to be forced on you, as a yoke on a heifer unaccustomed to it, which struggles till a deep wound is

The language which best befits such an one is that wonderful sentence, in which simplicity and sublimity struggle for mastery: "Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight."

A gentleman once visited a school of deaf and dumb children, and was asked to write them a question on the black-board, and he wrote, "Why did God make you deaf and dumb, while I can hear and speak?" Tears filled their eyes, and after a slight pause, a little boy stepped forward, and took the chalk and wrote beneath, "Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight." If you can say that, you have learnt the secret of rest, and Shiloh has already come to you, and you are one of those that are being gathered to Him through the long weary ages to share his ultimate triumph and reign.

RESCUE WORK.

At the January meeting of the Association of Female Workers at Mildmay, Miss Heath (one of the Mildmay workers) gave a touching account of a quiet, persevering, and successful effort in South London, for the rescue of some of the poor girls and women on the streets. This work, needing tact and the deep Christian sympathy of loving hearts, is truly a going down into the depths to deliver souls. It is computed that between Westminster and London Bridge there are 9000 of these fallen ones—some so young that the very mention of their age strikes a shudder through the frame—who are being ruined in body and soul. A few beds are provided in a sheltering Home, that has been roughly adapted for the purpose; midnight meetings are held and teas provided. Those willing to yield to better influences are taken away from temptation, and, whenever possible, restored to their friends, or put in a way of getting an honest livelihood. From instances mentioned, it was seen how innocent girls, decoyed by means of advertisements, are brought to the very brink of peril, and how needful it is that protective, as well as remedial agencies, should be as sentinels, ever on the watch in the work of rescue.

The following incident must not be omitted—it is such a beautiful illustration of true, manly chivalry. A young woman, in a self-willed fit, left the home which was sheltering her, and wandered aimlessly along the London streets till, late at night, she found herself, penniless and alone, in the neighbourhood of Westminster. Whilst hanging about at one of the corners, not knowing what to do, a gentleman came up to her, and, struck by her appearance, asked why she was there at that hour? He gathered from her evasive reply that she was in danger, and asked her if she would allow him to take her to some Refuge for the night. This she distinctly refused. "Then," said her kind deliverer, "you must come to my house, for I know you ought not to be here, and I cannot leave you here." He took her safely to his own rooms (he was but a lodger), left her in charge of the landlady, went out and got a bedroom for himself elsewhere, and next morning sent her back to the home she had left, under the care of a lady friend. Oh, that all the "sons and brothers" in England would go and do likewise!—Woman's Work.

BRITISH SYRIAN SCHOOLS.—The report of these schools, founded by Mrs. Bowen Thompson in 1860, shows how wonderfully the seed of the Word is sinking into the hearts of the little ones, and bringing forth fruit both in their own and their parents' lives. In the schools mentioned in the Quarterly Paper just issued, there are nine native teachers, and many illustrations they give of the loving faith and beautiful simplicity of the little ones under their charge, both Jews and Christians. The answers to the prayer of faith of these young disciples will gladden all who read. And the feeling of the people with reference to these schools is well expressed in the remark of one of the parents: "We think the English school the best of all the schools here." A Maronite soldier, to whom a Bible had been given three years previously, said that during a three months' illness he had read it through twice, and that

TWO MISSIONARY BIOGRAPHIES.*

The life of such a missionary as Dr. Stern, of one, too, who has left behind him such valuable notes of the varied scenes and trials through which he passed, must necessarily be of more than ordinary interest. For over forty years, from 1844, when he was appointed to his first missionary post at Bussorah, to the time of his death, in 1885, he was actively engaged in various parts of the great missionary field. In this volume, then, we have accounts of missionary labours in lands the mere mention of which awakens emotion in all lovers of the Bible.

The quiet, happy days of missionary labour, from which we get many a beautiful picture of Eastern life and scenery, were, however, interrupted by the discord and savagery of the Crimean war, and again by the terrible sufferings of the Abyssinian imprisonment. It seems but a short time since Dr. Stern's name was on every lip in connection with this painful episode. And now, though he is at rest, in this book we have such a presentment of what God's servants can accomplish and endure, when fully trusting in and upheld by Him, that again this heroic missionary lives and speaks before us. Surely there can be no better example than that afforded by the story of such a life of consecration to God's service as was Dr. Stern's.

The first portion of M. Waldmeier's autobiography is occupied with a history of the ten years during which the author was in Abyssinia. This is interesting ground, inasmuch as it covers the period which terminated in the Abyssinian war and the death of King Theodore. It is rather curious that at the same moment two books giving an account of the events and the terrible sufferings of this period should issue from the Press, and that these should be described at such length as they are by two missionaries. At this distance of time, there would be little use in a discussion as to the causes of the war, or rather of the imprisonment of our Consul and so many missionaries, which at length led to the sending out of an expedition which happily resulted in their release. Yet it is not a little discouraging that the story, as given by Dr. Stern, is essentially different to that vouched for by M. Waldmeier, and that there is no likeness whatever in the portrait of King Theodore sketched by the one to that presented by the other. We have, however, in addition, a description of sixteen years' missionary labours in Syria, and on such classic ground, with Mount Lebanon as its centre, we could fain linger. These have been fruitful years—fruitful in the establishment of the British Syrian Mission Schools, of others now in full working at Brummana, and in the establishment of the Protestant faith among an intensely fanatical people. There is much else, besides a full account of the Druse religion, that gives this volume a special claim on the attention.

THE INSPIRATION OF THE BIBLE.—Mr. H. L. Hastings, of Boston, has recently delivered his lecture before large audiences at Liverpool and Dublin. At the close of the lecture at the former place, Canon Woodward said, "I never heard a lecture, for so limited a period, embracing so many subjects, with greater clearness, greater accuracy, greater penetration, greater truthfulness, more forcible, vigorous, eloquent, logical, and powerful." Rev. J. H. Honeyburne also spoke of the lecture as "both wise and witty." Lord Shaftesbury said of it, "It is the best thing I ever saw." The lecture is published at 1d. by Messrs. S. Bagster & Sons. Our good friend, Mr. Albert R. Fenn, of Madrid, has translated it into Spanish, and it is now being circulated there. It would be a useful service to help forward its free distribution.

METROPOLITAN CONVALESCENT INSTITUTION.—At the annual general meeting of the governors of this Institution, whose Homes are situated at Walton-on-Thames, Kingston-hill, and Bexhill-on-Sea, it was stated that 4725 poor convalescent patients had been received into the three Homes during the past year, entirely free of charge, being the greatest number ever admitted into the Institution in any one year. A large proportion of these patients were thoroughly restored to health, after about three weeks' residence in the Institution. The board stated in their report that the Homes were not utilised to their full capacity during the autumn and winter months, and suggested that the governors should authorise them to BESETTING SINS.

Alice Gray leaned over the fire, her chin resting in her hands, and a pensive look in her brown eyes. It was Sunday, and that morning, in church, she had listened to Mr. Bentley's sermon with rather a curious interest as he spoke of the "sin which doth so easily beset us." Now she was quietly wondering what could be her own besetting sin.

"I am sure," said she to the fire, "it is not ill-temper; and it can't be acting deceitfully, and speaking horrid untruths; for I should despise myself if I did that. I don't hate anybody, or take what does not belong to me, and no one can say that I——"

"Alice," called Aunt Mary, gently, from her seat in the adjoining room, "if you have finished with my pencil, will you get it for me? I need it for a few moments."

"Why, Aunt Mary! didn't I return it yesterday?" began the little girl, when, catching herself up, she said hastily, "Oh! I remember. I was in a hurry, so I just slipped it into my pocket when I went to Kitty Blake's. I'll run and get it."

But, in a short time, Alice walked into the room with a face which was very long indeed. The gold pencil, which she knew her aunt prized highly, was gone from the pocket—lost, probably, on the way to her friend's house.

"O my child! why did you not give it to me as soon as you had finished? You would then have saved all this trouble," exclaimed Aunt Mary, trying not to be too severe on her little niece, who looked really penitent, though she only said, as so many little girls have said before, "I didn't think."

While she stood with downcast eyes, clasping and unclasping her fingers, her father walked into the room, saying, with the air of one who expects a satisfactory reply, "Alice, did you mail my letter yesterday?"

"Oh!" and Alice's heart gave a great thump. "Papa, I forgot it!"

Mr. Gray stopped in his complacent march up and down, and hastily turned to look at her. "My daughter," said he, "that letter is an important one, which should have gone, by all means, yesterday; bring it to me at once." Papa spoke sternly, and Alice quickly obeyed.

"I see, Alice, that you are not to be trusted," said Mr. Gray, as he took the letter from her trembling hands.

This last bitter thrust was more than the little girl could bear, and she hastily left the room, while hot tears rained down her cheeks; for we are never so unhappy as when we have no one but ourselves to blame as the cause of our trouble.

It was not many days later that Alice met with a trial which cost her a great many sighs. A cousin, travelling abroad, had sent her as a gift a beautiful lace handkerchief, which was the pride of her heart. This she carried into the parlour to exhibit to some friends, and after the handkerchief had been duly admired, it was placed on the corner of a table. Of course, nobody could explain just how it came about, but an ink-bottle which had been placed on the table was overturned, and the hendkerchief was ruined.

Alice? Oh, yes! Alice remembered, in the midst of her grief, that it was she who had put the ink-bottle in the unsafe place.

Ah, my child! has not this week shown you the "sin which doth so easily beset you?" Do you know now what is your chief fault? I think so; for, as Sunday again drew near, she whispered to Aunt Mary: "I believe I have learned my besetting sin. Don't you think it is carelessness?"

"Yes, dear; carelessness, leading to a long train of evils which end in selfishness; for do as one little girl has been during the past week?"

Alice's face flushed painfully, as she said: "I never knew I was so selfish."

So Alice is taking her lesson to heart, and striving bravely to overcome her own "besetting sin." I wonder whether other little ones cannot do likewise!—Sunday-school Times.

OBEYING GOD'S CALL.

With God's call there always comes grace to obey it, if only you use it. There was an apprentice in London once who made an appointment with another boy to spend a particular Sunday evening in folly. He was hurrying along to meet his companion, and at the turning of the street he met his master's wife. "William," said she, "where are you going?" And William told her. Then she said to the lad, "That would be a wrong way to spend the Sunday. Come to chapel with me." And the lad went. And that night Jesus, who has the hearts of all men in his keeping, caused the minister to choose for his text, "What will it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" And that word came like a loud call to the heart of William, and it kept calling to him; and the lad heard the voice of his Saviour in the words, and he became a Christian, and then a student of the Bible, and in the end the great South Sea missionary-martyr Williams. Dear children, see that you do not despise God's calls.—British Weekly.

A Word to Mothers.

One Sunday evening I was staying at home with a little maiden of some six or seven years, and as we sat cosily over the fire, I began to tell her some of the Old Testament stories; then I talked about Jesus, and, looking into her fair little face, I said, "Mamma tells you about Him, does she not, darling?" She answered quickly, "No, she has no time to tell me."

I thought of other busy mothers, and wondered if they too had "no time" to tell of Jesus. Dear busy mothers! do the little garments take so much making, and the little mouths so much feeding, that you have "no time" to let the children nestle round you and tell them about Jesus? Talk to them while they are young—make time to do it. Then, when they grow older, there will not be that painful reserve between you and your grown-up sons and daughters in everything touching their spiritual life; but, better still, I believe you will have the joy of leading your little children to the Saviour.

"THE LANTERN," the monthly paper of the East London Tract Society and Christian Mission, gives accounts of how the poor have been helped through its instrumentality during the past month. Two hundred fatherless children were entertained at tea, and a "Robin" dinner was given to two hundred more at the beginning of the month. On two occasions about two hundred mechanics out of work had a substantial dinner given them; and yet, again, over one hundred poor widows were entertained at tea. In connection with this Mission, of which Mr. J. Fuller, 1, Follett-street, Poplar, is the secretary, there is a fund for CHRISTIANITY AND THE MASSES.

SPECIAL THEATRE SERVICES.

That the masses of the people are not averse to hearing the Gospel has been abundantly evidenced by the success which has attended the preaching in theatres, halls, and mission-rooms. They come in crowds to these, and listen eagerly and gladly to God's message. Should not this fact arouse ministers to a consideration of the question whether or not the means employed by the ordinary church services are well adapted to the end in view?

In the report lately issued by the Committee of these Special Theatre Services it is stated that during the past season 782 services were held, the attendance amounting to 465,000 persons. There are reports, mostly by the City Missionaries managing the services, from East and West, in regard to this work, and it is evident that much of the preaching has been in the power of the Spirit. The seed has been faithfully sown, and what will be the ultimate harvest none can say. But there has been also the joy of reaping—of winning many from paths of sin, of restoring others, and sending them forward to life's grand work, with glad hearts, of gathering and folding, and of seeing some enter into rest, their faces already radiant with heaven's light.

Many illustrations of the power of the Gospel are given. Husbands and wives restored to peace, and living now in true union with each other, bringing up their families in the fear of God; drunken men and women led to Christ; young men who had praying parents led back to the paths of righteousness which they had long forsaken; old people made happy as they had never been before. These are some of the results of preaching in season and out of season, in all sorts of places, the unsearchable riches of Christ. Such facts should stimulate Christians to greater devotion in making known the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. We were struck by a remark recently made by a missionary going out to China. He had never been in London before, and employed the Sunday in visiting Petticoat-lane. Said he, as a result of his observation: "If you Christians were alive, a hundred or more would go every Sunday to such places; you would not rest until you had shed abroad in the midst of that darkness the clear light of the Gospel." This is what is being done through the agency of the Special Religious Services for the People in theatres, halls, and mission-rooms. The Secretary is Mr. Sawell, 3, Bridewell-place, New Bridge-street, E.C.

The Queen's Jubilee and the Blind

Among the many schemes for celebrating Her Majesty's Jubilee is a proposal by the committee of the Homes for Aged Christian Blind Men and Women at Crouch-hill to secure three adjoining freehold houses as additional Homes, and to erect a hall capable of seating 400 persons, to be known as the Victoria Jubilee Hall for the Blind. One of these houses would be appropriated as a home for blind men, the others being adapted as an extension of the present Home for women, which is now full.

There is great necessity for such a Home for men, many of whom lose their sight late in life, and are thereby rendered destitute, and it is believed there is none in existence at the present time. The new Home, to be opened in March, will provide for sixty aged sufferers, and will therefore be a great boon to this class. The estimated cost of the whole scheme is £4000. Rev. Henry and Mrs. Bright (Mansion House, Hanley-road, Crouch-hill) are the founders and hon. superintendents.

LIFE IN CENTRAL AFRICA.

Seldom have we had such vivid descriptions of life in the African Continent as were presented at a meeting held at Harley House, Bow, on Monday evening last week, when a number of friends assembled to take leave of missionaries about to return to the Congo. The party consist of Dr. Sims, Mr. and Mrs. Ingham (all of whom are returning), and Mr. J. B. Murphy, who goes out for the first time, and will be associated with Dr. Sims on the upper river.

Dr. Sims' holiday at home has not been a resting time, but one of varied and busy work. Soon after his return he had a dangerous attack of the severest form of African fever, and was brought very low, but raised up in answer to much prayer—spared, we trust, for much future usefulness. He was no sooner convalescent than he sailed for the United States, where for months he was travelling and pleading the cause of Central Africa with the Baptist Mission, who are now responsible for its support. Since his return he has been studying in the Vienna schools of medicine certain specialties in connection with his profession, till within the last few weeks.

Dr. Sims said he realised the necessity of entire dependence upon the Lord in reference to the work to which he is returning. He spoke of three great evils which are the cause of the wretchedness of the Congo people, illustrating each by a number of incidents, showing us the people as they are. The first evil specified was strong drink. At one place he visited, around the grave of a lad recently buried, were two rows of gin bottles. Farther on was another grave with four or five rows of gin bottles around it, and a demijohn on the top. In the house of the king he had seen eight or nine gin bottles under the king's bed. Even at Stanley Pool 25 per cent. of what is brought by the caravans is gin. And this sort of thing is going on right away far into the interior. It is a common thing, in going from place to place to find nearly all the people in a state of intoxication quite early in the day. Strong drink is ruining the people body and soul.

Slavery is the next great evil with which missionaries have to contend. One night when on board the steamer, he was startled by seeing a great light, and then by floating articles bumping against the sides of the vessel. The morning revealed that a native town, containing 6000 inhabitants, had been utterly destroyed by fire, and at first not a native was to be seen. After some time one man told him that the Arabs were there, on the look out for slaves, and this was the result. Farther up the river they passed several villages and towns of 2000 inhabitants, and upwards, which had all been destroyed by fire. At one place some of the poor people, who had been hiding, pointed to where the Arabs were on the other side of the river, and begged him to go over and drive them away. Crossing to the other side, the Arabs when they saw the English flag prepared to fight, but this of course was not his intention. He asked them why they were burning the towns and robbing the people. "Oh," they replied, "our intentions are perfectly honest; we came to trade in a fair way, to buy ivory, &c.; but no sooner had we commenced trading with the people than a quarrel arose." This is always the case. There were about 750 Arab traders at this point, and he saw a number of slaves handcuffed together. Not less than 40,000 people had been rendered homeless by the destruction of towns which he then witnessed. A boy in the Mission at Stanley Pool told him that his father's town had been burnt down four times by these Arabs, and at last he with his mother were separated from their father and carried off as slaves. And then he was sold for forty yards of calico. One of Mr. Stanley's engineers, being attracted by a little slave girl who smiled at him, intimated to the trader that he should like to save her, and the bargain was completed for six red pocket handkerchiefs, or about fifteen pence.

Having spoken in some detail of the disregard paid in too many cases to human life, Dr. Sims referred to the helps to mission work on the Congo. The magnificent river system is navigable altogether for a distance of seven thousand miles. For a thousand miles into the interior, and a thousand miles east or west of Stanley Pool, they could from the bow of the steamer preach the Gospel in perfect security. Notwithstanding the savage ways of the people, they are in many cases tender-hearted and loving. Then they have no religion of their own, and missionaries have only to tell them of the love of the Lord Jesus Christ, to endeavour by living amongst them, by kindness and by consistency of life, to show them what the Gospel really is, in order soon to bring multitudes to accept the Saviour.

Mr. Ingham, who, with his wife, is returning to Lukungu Station, said he was going back to a country which he liked a great deal better than England. They were returning to a people who would welcome them with open arms. Speaking of the schools, he showed how necessary was this work, and what good results had already rewarded their efforts. Mrs. Ingham, Mr. J. B. Murphy, and Mr. Petersen also spoke.

Mrs. Guinness gave some information with reference to Mr. Stanley's expedition for the relief of Emin Bey, pointing out that the great interest attending the route which there is little doubt Mr. Stanley will take lies in the fact that a vast portion of the Soudan country will have been entered by Europeans, and opened up for the first time. If that expedition succeeds a highway will be opened up from London to the very heart of the Southern Equatorial Soudan, containing a population, it is believed, of at least fifty million souls. Hitherto the Gospel has been shut out by insuperable barriers from all that region, but now at length we may expect the door is to be opened. As one result of the missionary conferences recently held, a little association has been formed to consider the best way by which the Gospel can be carried into the Soudan. In all this opening of doors long closed, who fails to see the hand of God? But how great the responsibility thus laid upon the Church of Christ. In warm and stirring words (followed by addresses from Mr. Barfield and Rev. J. Morris) Mrs. Guinness commended the departing missionaries to the care of that God who went before his people in the pillar of cloud, showing them when they were to go forward and when to remain still. This interesting gathering was closed with prayer on behalf of those going forth to unknown dangers. They left London next day, and are now on the deep.

THE RATCLIFF WELCOME HOME.—Some Christian working lads and young men belonging to a lady's Bible-class in a London suburb, hearing of the distress in the East-end, and of the soup suppers at the Welcome Home, Ratcliff Highway, had their hearts stirred to send help. Several evenings lately they were themselves present, and assisted in ministering to the wants of the poor unemployed men. On Friday week they gave a supper, paying for it with the money given to them as carol singers. This was all the more touching, as several of themselves might almost be reckoned amongst the unemployed, having had but one or two days' work for several weeks. It was heart-stirring to hear their earnest words of entreaty to the invited guests that they would come over on the Lord's side.

JEWS IN AMERICA.—At the first Hebrew-Christian Church in America, established by Rev. Jacob Freshman, of the Hebrew Mission, 17, St. Mark's-place, New York, there was on December 27 a festival attended by over 200 Jewish children. The evening was a delightful one. A responsive service, varied with songs and recitations, was followed by the repetition, by a boy of fourteen, of Isaiah liii.; and very beautiful it was to hear the sweet voices of the little Hebrew Americans in the prayer-song written by Martin Luther for his own children. This church is the result of the prayerful and earnest efforts of Mr. Freshman and his wife during the last five years. Mr. Freshman seems to be doing amongst the Jews in New York a similar work to that which the Mildmay Mission has been accomplishing in London.

CHRISTIAN LADS' CONFERENCE.

On Saturday week, the fifth annual Conference for Lads was held at the East-street Mission-rooms, East Greenwich. The afternoon meeting, which was reserved as far as practicable for boys who had given evidence of conversion, was opened with singing, and prayer by Mr. Thomas Stone; between one and two hundred attended. In dealing with the subject, "Daniel, a type of Christ, and an example for a Christian youth," all points of comparison had to be supported by quotations, in the first case from the Gospels, and in the second from the Epistles. The quick production of these Scriptural references was very gratifying, and implied some diligent Bible study since the announcement of the subject on Christmas Day. One of Dr. Barnardo's lads had fortified himself with a manuscript giving his texts in extenso, the work of hours; the answers of some of Mr. Fegan's boys evinced much intelligence; and various members of smaller parties were evidently no strangers to the Word of God.

After a substantial tea, to which about one hundred other boys had been invited, an opportunity was given for short testimonies, and some thirty or more of the Christian boys told out the joy they had found in Christ. A marked attention was manifest, and it is hoped that more than one or two of the youthful audience will have to trace their first step towards eternal happiness back to that evening.

The meeting was fairly representative, as, besides important contingents from the Homes above referred to, tickets were accepted on behalf of boys from the Railway Mission, Miss Macpherson's Home, the Carter Home for Boys at Clapham, Messrs. Young's Working Men's Mission at Collingwood-street, Peek, Frean & Co.'s Boys' Institute, the West Greenwich Ragged School Institute, and other Missions at Greenwich, Deptford, Blackheath, Bermondsey, Rotherhithe, Peckham and Victoria Park.

CHRISTIAN WORK IN PARIS.

Mr. Weylland, the London Secretary of the Paris City Mission, recently delivered an address on mission work amongst the poor in Paris, to a large meeting of the workers in connection with St. Jude's Church, Mildmay. The dominant religion of the country, he said, is Roman Catholicism, which has walked hand in hand with ignorance and superstition, followed closely by the ghastly shapes of indifference and atheism. Such is the oppression thus engendered, that it has become a penal offence to give away a tract in the street; actually on one occasion Lord Loughborough was arrested for this very offence, and only released upon the personal intervention of the British Ambassador.

In dealing with the difficulties of the work, Mr. Weylland said that much tact is required. The working man came from his wretched poverty-stricken home, into magnificent boulevards, where wealth was everywhere visible, and was looked down upon by the wealthy upper classes, by whom no sympathy or compassion was shown—what wonder then if he became a socialist? Deprived of the benefit of the Sabbath, what wonder also if he grew an atheist?

Work in Paris requires pluck and good humour. He was once invited by a friend to address some English jockeys in a theatre in the suburbs of Paris, but when he arrived he found his friend in the custody of two gendarmes, by whom they were both walked off to the neighbouring mayor. They were charged with two serious offences, the first being that they had got up a public meeting without the mayor's consent, the second, that they had actually had handbills printed in black ink on white paper, an honour reserved alone for official documents! They were ultimately discharged on their promising not to repeat the offence. The meeting was held after all, and a responsive chord awakened in the breasts of the hardened men by recalling Sunday-school times and hymns to them.

"NOT WHERE."

By EINAN.

I am a distant relative of Mr. Moneyful's, and reside at No. 7, Grandison-square, as a kind of companion or housekeeper, Mrs. Moneyful not being very strong, and needing assistance in the supervision of her large establishment. Miss Moneyful is a very busy young lady, is hon. sec. of a Girls' Improvement Society, of a Zenana Mission Working Society, and is on four or five committees for the advancement of the Church and the world. Mr. Moneyful is a wealthy man, with a decidedly Christian reputation. The eldest son (the only one at home) is following in his father's steps, in the commercial as well as in the religious world. I, left alone and without a penny, am considered very fortunate to occupy a position of confidence and esteem in such a model family. I am fortunate, and thank God for pleasant house-room, fifty pounds a year, and the health and strength which He gives me.

"Pleasant house-room is something to be thankful for," I thought, as I entered the dining-room on a cold, raw morning about the middle of January. The fire burned brightly in the handsome tiled grate; the thick Wilton carpet, heavy curtains, leather-covered, stuffed-backed chairs, handsome "Queen Anne" sideboard, oil paintings, and luxurious appointments of a modern fashionable dining-room, looked very pleasant and comfortable. I went to the side window, which looked down Grandison-street; the wind blew the sleet in blinding gusts, and the poor woman who carried her husband's tea in a small black can could scarcely hold the ragged shawl over her head. I turned away with a sigh, and answered, "Good morning, Mr. Moneyful," as my cousin and employer's "Good morning, Alicia," interrupted my thoughts.

"Why are we breakfasting here?" he asked.

"Because the breakfast-parlour is being re-carpeted," I replied, absently, seating myself behind the coffee-urn, and wondering if that poor woman had eaten her breakfast, or if she had anything more than dry bread! In a few minutes we were joined by Mrs. Moneyful and Lillian, a little later by Charlie.

"Has the post not come yet?" asked Mr. Moneyful, as the butler placed a fowl cutlet before him.

"No, sir; it's early, sir."

"So it is; I thought it was later! What are you going to do about that new settee, Elinor? Will you have it upholstered in crimson plush, to match the other settee, or will you have it in 'terra-cotta' and dark green, to match the new easy chairs?"

"I do not know, really—it is hard to decide! What do you think, Lillian?"

"I cannot say, either. Let us go into the drawing-room after breakfast, and we can form an idea as to which will look best."

"Very well," said Mr. Moneyful; "will you drive to the City yourself and give orders, Elinor?"

"I suppose so; or Lillian can go."

"Yes," said Lillian. "I want to order a new evening dress; I am wearing that black velvet constantly, and my grey poplin is beginning to look old-fashioned. Christian people should not be dowdy. I want some other little things, too. Charlie, you could get me some gloves on your way home; you will pass Messrs. Dainty & Co.'s. Get me a pair of cream-coloured kid, and a pair of tan Suede, twelve buttons, No. 6."

"Very well, your ladyship. Anything else?"

"I don't know; shall be out myself; I have to be at two meetings this afternoon."

"Then, shall I get tickets for the concert to-morrow night?" asked Charlie.

"Oh, certainly! four tickets; they will cost £1," replied Lillian.

"I do not care to go, so please do not get a ticket for me," I said.

"Why?" asked Charlie "you are so fond of music! Some new crotchet, I suppose!" and he laughed good-naturedly.

"Ah, here are the letters!" and Mr. Moneyful took them off the salver, read the addresses, handed a few to Mrs. Moneyful, five or six to Lillian, and began to read his own. "What numbers of begging letters one gets!" said he, with a shade of annoyance crossing his face. Here is another—and another! Mrs. Hollart wants some help towards the half-price breakfasts, writes of the poverty and suffering which prevail at present, and that "no doubt those whom God has prospered will feel it to be a privilege, as well as a duty, to assist the poor;" hopes that I will send them a couple of pounds. And here—Fordham wants ten pounds to furnish the dormitory at the Mission Hall. He is a noble fellow, and deserves to be helped. Has spent a hatful of money on the place himself; but, dear me! where is one to stop? I gave a pound to the 'Jews' yesterday, a pound to an Orphan Home the day before, and three pounds last week to other charities. One cannot give to everything!"

"No, indeed," said Mrs. Moneyful; "but it looks ungenerous to refuse, and it might discourage these good people. Send Mr. Fordham a pound, and Mrs. Hollart ten shillings; we Christians ought to support charitable objects, but we have so many expenses, and, as you say, we 'cannot give to everything.'"

"Yes," said Charlie, "but we ought to give what we can spare!"

I ate my breakfast in silence. Lillian and Charlie tattled about the concert, last night's dinner party, and the drawing-room meeting yesterday afternoon, while Mr. and Mrs. Moneyful went back to the subject of new furniture for the drawing-room.

"Those couches are so old-fashioned; only fit for bedrooms now! We'll put one in the blue-room, Charlie can have the other in his dressing-room. Brown & Co. say that they will 'do' one to match the chairs at a reasonable price; will give the three for forty guineas," said Mrs. Moneyful.

"Well, perhaps we had better have the settee to match the chairs," said Mr. Moneyful. "Ring the bell for prayers, James."

The servants entered and sat near the door. I opened the Bible (I always read at morning prayers) and began to read the chapter for the day. It was the eighth of Matthew. I read on, mechanically, scarcely thinking of the words, for my heart had been stirred with thoughts of the poor woman who carried her husband's breakfast through the storm; of the half-price breakfasts which would be so much better and more comfortable for them both, and of other matters; but when I came to the twentieth verse, I started involuntarily, paused for a second, and read: "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head."

"Not where to lay his head" rang in my ears through every remaining verse of the chapter, and during Mr. Moneyful's prayer. "Not where" was on my lips as I passed through the stove-heated hall and up to my room. "How unlike our Master we are in character, and in surroundings!" I thought. "God did not give what He could spare. He gave his best. Jesus did not give what He could spare. He gave everything, and became poor, more like the people for whom the dormitory is intended than like us." Softly I sang:—

"But thy couch was the sod, O Thou Son of God.

He had an old-fashioned couch, surely!" I went to my purse; it contained one pound and a few shillings. I had intended to buy new flannel for my own use, and had reserved the pound for it. "This shall go to Mrs. Hollart," I decided at once. "I am not cold and hungry; a pound will not do very much, but shall I withhold my little because it is only a little?" Sitting at my table, I began to write, still singing softly, "But thy couch was the sod," when Lillian knocked at the door.

"Come in," I said; and she stood beside me, looking curiously at the bank-note and the paper, on which I had written, "A mite for the breakfasts."

"Mother wants you to arrange the menu for dinner. Colonel and Mrs. Twickenham are coming, and Charlie will probably bring Captain Synge."

"Very well," I said, rising; but she still stood in a hesitating manner.

"Alicia, why—why did you stop at that verse? You know what I mean. 'The foxes have holes.' And now—why are you singing those lines?"

I felt confused, and was silent for a moment, then lifted my heart to my Master, asking that He would give me the words which He wished me to speak.

"Tell me, Alicia, if you please."

"I had been thinking of the sufferings of the poor in this weather," I replied; "of the dormitory, and the half-price breakfasts; other thoughts came also, and the verse seemed a finale to the thoughts. It startled me, and the pause was involuntary."

"Other thoughts! What were they?" she asked.

"You may be vexed if I tell you those that concerned you!"

"No, I shall not."

"A new evening dress would cost you twenty pounds, at least. Ten pounds is the needed sum for the dormitory; the other ten would give such a number of poor men and women comfortable breakfasts for the rest of the winter; but if you gave away the money you would have to wear your old dresses," I said.

"You do not think that Christians should be careless in dress," she asked, her face flushing. "You are particular about yours; though, of course, you cannot spend much money on yourself. Do you think that I ought to wear an old-fashioned dress for the rest of the season?"

"I think that Christians should dress becomingly, and according to means and station; but, Lillian," I added, "your dresses are good and becoming, and not really old-fashioned." As she looked thoughtful, and was not displeased, I went on, "If you give the money to God someone may say, 'I wonder why Miss Moneyful wears that dress for two seasons;' but you will not mind, dear, if Someone in heaven says, 'Inasmuch as ye did unto these, ye did unto Me,'" and I went to Mrs. Moneyful.

Half an hour later, as I was passing Lillian's room, she called to me, and I entered. She sat beside her "davenport," and there were traces of tears on her face as she looked up and said gently—

"Thank you, Alicia, for giving me the message. I want you to know that—that I believe it to be God's orders."

She took up a sheet of paper, wrote on it:—

"For the dormitory; because He 'had not where,' £10," and putting a ten-pound note with it, into an envelope, addressed it to "George Fordham, Esq."

"The other ten shall go to Mrs. Hollart," she said, writing:—

"For the breakfasts; because He was 'an hungered,' £10."

"I am glad, dear," I whispered, and went with a thankful heart to my light duties, wondering if Mr. or Mrs. Moneyful had noticed the verse, and if they would take it as God's message.

Mr. and Mrs. Moneyful, will you?

MORAVIAN MISSIONS.—The Quarterly Magazine of this body is, as usual, full of interest. It contains the latest news from several mission stations. From Leh, in Central Asia, and from Cape Town, South Africa, we have tidings of church building, and from Alaska, of preparations for the second Moravian station. Turning to South America, in sketches of three native helpers, whose hearts, like that of Lydia, the Lord had prepared to receive the message of the missionaries, we see the leaders of the 1450 men and women who have since come forward on the Lord's side, and are now actively engaged as helpers. The cheering news from Labrador is in delightful contrast with the sensational news of disaster involving the whole of the region, given in the newspapers at the end of July last. CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY.

RESCUE ALL-NIGHT WORK.

This is the third year that we have opened for a Night Shelter our Mission Hall, Thrawl-street, Spitalfields, for destitute and homeless men; with an average picked up from the streets of from 100 to 150 each night, when open. The men were given a good breakfast, and a religious service held in the morning, when they have been faithfully dealt with. Work has been secured for some, and a great deal of other help given in deserving cases.

Besides this, lodgings for destitute women and children. Bread and tea tickets are given to several every week, to meet the terrible distress of this severe season.

To sustain this heavy work, besides the general expenses, help is urgently needed, and asked for. Donations in money or articles suitable for relief, will be gratefully received by the Secretary, as under. The Editor of THE CHRISTIAN will also receive donations.

CASE AT DUNDEE (N.B.).

A little more than two years ago, Rev. W. Johnstone, Chaplain of the East Poor House, Dundee, came up to consult me on his case.

Various relatives had died of decline. He had broken down in health two years before this. On examination there was no positive disease, but great weakness of the chest and lungs with excitable heart. He had taken my medicine at various times before, and found much benefit. He came again about 15 months afterwards.

About 36 letters were written during the time he was under my treatment. This year his son became a patient, and in a letter a few weeks before the time I am writing this, he says:—"I am glad that my boy is much stronger. You will be glad to hear that I myself am well, and feel stronger and better than I have done for the last six years."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

YOUNG MEN AT EXETER HALL.

NEW YEAR'S RECEPTION.

Forward! was the keynote of the soul-stirring address given by Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston to the young men who, at the invitation of Mr. S. Gurney Sheppard, gathered in large numbers in Exeter Hall on Tuesday evening, last week. "Forward!" will doubtless ring in their ears for many a day. Premising, he said the Y.M.C.A. was the school of hope. Everyone should cultivate hope, and never under any circumstances give up hope. If any had begun to despair, let him then give himself to God, and start with new capital. Then he gave them these words: "Forward! Onward!" Forward is the word for every Christian soldier. They should go forward because they had made a decision. But had all chosen sides? It is great cowardice not to choose sides in the tremendous conflict going on between Christ and the devil. Go forward also in self-conquest. Everyone needs more of self-discipline, there is some old tyrant of evil habit to be overcome. Go forward in knowledge of the Bible. His hope for England, amid all that is discouraging, was that there is being trained up a body of young men who read their Bibles. Go forward also in doing good. He could not believe in a selfish Christianity. In contrast with the love of alcohol, and money, and other vices, which grow upon the worldly man, is the hunger of doing good which begins to grow the moment a man does anything for Christ. He finds opportunities, and God gives opportunities. Go forward, again, in the knowledge of Christ, and then would the likeness to Christ be more seen, more of his holiness, more of his gentleness. His last word was: Don't talk about this, but do it.

"Be Earnest!" was Dr. H. G. Guinness's text, illustrated by the example of Paul. When on the wrong side, Paul was tremendously in earnest. We admire a man who is thoroughly in earnest, even if on the wrong side, for when he comes over to the right side he will be earnest for that too. Two or three illustrations from his Australian experiences were given of men who, in their conversion, proved their earnestness. A deep impression was apparently made on many by Dr. Guinness's fervent appeals, some being moved to tears as they came forward to testify their determination henceforward to live for Christ. Dr. Guinness again proved himself wonderfully apt in giving each a word and a text especially applicable to his individual case.

The meeting will surely be a memorable one for many. Emotions caused by such stirring appeals to all that is manly and most noble cannot be forgotten any more than the warm words of welcome with which Mr. Gurney Sheppard had already greeted them, and which he capped by saying that he hoped those who were there for the first time would find their way again to a place where they could enjoy so many advantages, most of all that of Christian counsel and fellowship.

Mr. Kennedy (the secretary), in speaking of those advantages, mentioned that there are no less than sixty-one educational classes, and that in almost any part of the world a member of the Y.M.C.A. would find a kindly greeting from those who were anxious to give him a helping hand. Whilst setting forth these advantages, however, he did not forget also to state that the chief object in view was to lead them to Christ.

WORKING MEN'S MISSION, NEW-CUT.—On January 26, a meeting of the Loan Tract Society was held. Mr. T. Young, in a short address, urged the importance of the work of visiting from house to house. Mr. Gamson, secretary, reported that the Society, since its commencement, has distributed 100,000 books and tracts, and visits 639 houses every week. Many incidents in connection with tract distribution were narrated by the various speakers. Books and tracts will be gratefully received by Mr. T. Young, 39, Oswin-street, St George's-road, Southwark, S.E.

CHRISTIAN SOCIALISTS and the POOR

For three solid hours the condition of the unemployed poor was discussed at a meeting in Essex Hall, Essex-street, Strand, on Tuesday evening last week. Two resolutions were passed, one calling on the authorities to commence works of public utility, and the other declaring it to be the duty of all "to work for the reconstitution of society on a basis of justice." Whether the gathering will have any outcome of a practical kind we do not undertake to say; but, judging from the evident lack of public interest in the subject, we are not hopeful.

No one who was present could doubt the real earnestness of the members of the Christian Socialist Society who convened the meeting; and it was not their fault if the numbers of those who responded were comparatively small and uninfluential from a society point of view. We were informed that they had invited by circular "eleven hundred parsons;" as far as we could judge there were not more than half a dozen in the room. Clearly, therefore, the great bulk of our religious leaders either do not recognise the existence of the crisis, or they have no faith in the proposals of the Christian Socialists. We do not know if any of our Christian legislators and governors were invited, but there were many things said in the course of the evening that might have been of service to these gentlemen, as well as to the ministers of the Gospel who did not think it worth their pains to be present.

Though not a member of the Christian Socialist Society, Rev. H. C. Shuttleworth said he was glad to preside, because he believed the condition of the unemployed poor could only be permanently bettered on the principles and in the Spirit of Jesus Christ. He threw much scorn on the statistics quoted by comfortable optimists to prove that there is no exceptional distress. Tens of thousands of men are unemployed and starving, and there seems little hope of a better day for them. Every Christian, of course, believes he has got a duty to perform towards those about him. The day is gone by when it can be said that these are matters with which religion has no concern. If there be any who say so, they have not mastered the A B C of the New Testament. Christ, during his public ministry, spent the best part of his time in relieving just such distress and poverty. Turning to the proposed remedies, he said that charity is good and beautiful in its way; but these people want justice, not charity. Labour does not receive the proportion of the fruits of its work to which it is entitled. It is said that the labouring classes are drunken and improvident. Is not society to blame for this, to some extent, in giving them such a miserable environment and so poor an education, that they have little chance of being anything else than what they are? The elevation of individuals here and there is good, but we must alter the conditions under which they all have to live. Mr. Shuttleworth emphatically declared that he had no faith in Mansion House Funds; judging from past experience they do as much harm as good. Emigration, too, he pronounced against, and compared it to the exploded method of bleeding a patient to cure him of a disease. The people of a country are its true wealth, and you cannot increase a nation's prosperity by depleting it of its population. An earnest protest was entered against the destructive methods of the "Socialists." Revolution by violence brings about as many and as grave evils as those it seeks to cure. It is like casting out devils by Beelzebub. Neither is Malthusianism a true remedy. There is enough for all, if it were properly distributed. Co-operation is urged by some, but that can only be a partial remedy at the best. This Christian Socialist Society believes, as I do, said the speaker, that the only answer to the great problem of the time is to be found in the New Testament—upon which it is sometimes said the prosperity of England rests—in the precepts of Jesus Christ. Let us fearlessly and loyally apply the principles He laid down, to the social needs of our nation and our day. Let us recognise that these principles are binding, not only upon individuals, but upon nations in dealing with nations, and upon classes in dealing with classes, so long as classes exist.

Mr. Shuttleworth spoke with a vehement earnestness of speech and gesture that gained for him the close hearing and appreciative consent of the meeting. His speech was more concise and pointed than most of those that followed. Mr. Alfred Howard moved the first resolution, asking the Government to cope with the present distress by instituting such public works as would provide varied, useful, and reproductive employment. This would be far better than any Jubilee schemes, or Imperial institutions. It is folly to treat all the unemployed alike, and set a sculptor to break stones in the workhouse yard. The wages given must be "reasonable," not such as that given to match-box makers of the East-end, who cannot keep body and soul together without resorting to prostitution. As a Christian he cited Christ's parable of those waiting to be hired in the market-place, to show that all men have a right to a fair subsistence. Mr. Bolas, the seconder, rather touched on the ground covered by the next resolution, and argued that in a true socialist state of society the labourer would be sufficiently paid; no voluntary idler would make any gain out of his idleness, while all who were necessarily idle would be well cared for.

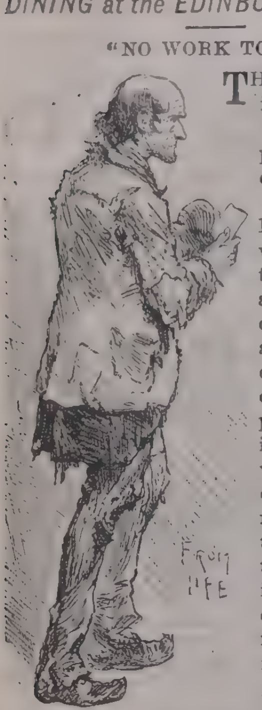
An amendment, which was subsequently passed in preference to the resolution (the latter being made a rider), was moved by Rev. Herbert Mills, an intellectual-looking young minister from Liverpool, who urged that the present poor-law system is false, and ought to be supplanted by a system of industrial villages, at which the poor can be trained to become honourable workers in the varied branches of agricultural and other profitable pursuits. He told something about such a village at Frederiksoord in the Netherlands, which is a great success. He described the horrors of the casual ward, with its long spell of painful and useless oakum-picking, which caused justifiable revulsion of spirit among the unfortunate men who were condemned to it. A valuable book on this subject, by Mr. Mills, has been published by Messrs. Kegan Paul & Co., entitled "Poverty and the State." A number of speakers followed, among them being Rev. J. Lawson Foster, of Chelsea, who urged emigration to Canada as one effective means of meeting the needs of the times. He declared, from his experience as a poor-law guardian, that there are many men who will not work, and for whom nothing can be done. It is useless, he said, to blink the fact that all men are not alike in character and desert, and therefore they cannot be treated alike.

CLARENDON CHAPEL, CAMBERWELL NEW-ROAD.—In the short time, since the iron building in which the members of this church worship was erected, it has had to be altered twice in order to accommodate increasing numbers. It has therefore been determined to make an effort to erect a permanent building to hold 1200 persons, at an inclusive cost of £3000. Mr. John Creer (late of the London Evangelisation Society) is the minister. His address is 76, Stamford-street, Blackfriars, S.E.

THE CHRISTIAN BLIND RELIEF SOCIETY gave its twenty-fourth annual entertainment to the blind of the Metropolis last week at the East London Tabernacle. About 500 of these afflicted ones attended, with as many guides. Tea was thoroughly enjoyed, and afterwards "Hold the Fort" was sung with great heartiness, this being chosen by the people themselves, at the request of Rev. Archibald Brown, who then gave an earnest and comforting address, dwelling on the compassion manifested by Christ for the suffering and afflicted. "Beulah Land," evidently a great favourite, was next sung, and Mr. Clarke, the Hon. Secretary of the Mission, who was deeply affected, spoke on the comfort of having a firm faith in Christ. During the evening a concert was given, much of the delight of these poor suffering ones.

DINING at the EDINBURGH CASTLE.

"NO WORK TO DO."



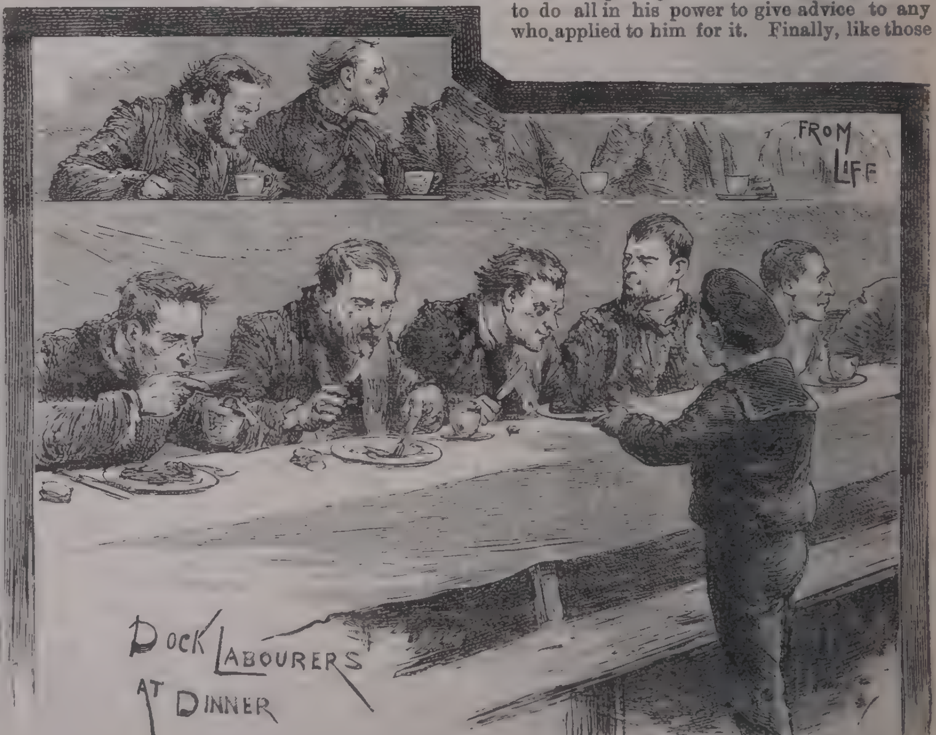
THIS is the complaining cry that goes up to-day from all our populous towns and cities—most loudly of all from mighty London. And nowhere in London is the cry so great as around the gates of our riverside docks and wharves. At each of these is daily enacted the parable of the men in the market-place, who stood all the day idle because no man had hired them. Dr. Barnardo, therefore, did well in inviting some 1400 of these unfortunates to one of the feasts he has been giving, through the kindly benevolence of Hon. Thomas Holt, late of Sydney.

The spectacle that presented itself in the Edinburgh Castle on Wednesday last week, when the long array of comely tables, completely covering area and amphitheatre, had their full complement of guests, was one worth going a good way to see. We observed several Christian workers present who had come from distant parts of the metropolis, probably to pick up some hints, as well as to receive some inspiration in providing similar relief for the unemployed poor around them. More pathetic even than the scene in the hall, was that at the entrance gates. Around these there clustered a clamorous crowd of hungry fellows, probably as deserving as any who were admitted; but they had the fatal disqualification of being without the needful passport. The tickets, 1400 in number, had all been distributed that day outside the various docks, among those who had failed to find employment. The fortunate possessors of these square bits of pasteboard had to fight their way through the mob that surrounded the entrance, and that was buoyed up evidently by the forlorn hope of getting in somehow. Hunger sharpens the wits, and there were sundry attempts to pass in with false credentials; but the lynx-eyed collectors at the portals were not to be caught in that way, and the impostors got nothing for their pains, but the signal for ignominious retreat, which they had to effect amidst the jeers of the seething crowd. Dr. Barnardo, in stating to the guests that nearly a thousand of their fellows had been excluded, said his friend Mr. Holt would willingly have provided a dinner for all, but they had to limit admission according to the capacity of the building.

We are accustomed to hear strange tales about the many "broken-down gentlemen" who have fallen so low in the social scale as to be glad of some precarious employment at our docks. Misfortune is a great leveller; and, if inquisition had been possible, many would doubtless have been discovered who had seen better days. But the vast proportion of those who crowded the tables appeared to be able-bodied men of the rougher labouring class. Here and there was an old man, whose working days were nearly done. Several of these shuffled along as if tottering on the very brink of the grave. A thousand of the guests at least were comparatively young men, and this fact lent an added pathos to the thought that so much strength and energy were running to waste because of the scarcity of work. All the more important and timely were the earnest words on emigration spoken during the evening by Dr. Guinness and Dr. Barnardo.

But the dinner came before the speeches, and a thoroughly substantial meal it was. One could hardly tell whether the serving or the eating was got through with the greater celerity. There was no hitch visible in either; and the pleasure of the Misses Holt, who were present as representing their father, must have been as great in seeing how his generous fare was enjoyed, as was that of those who partook of it.

It would have been a worthy deed to gather these men together if only to give them a nourishing meal, but of course Dr. Barnardo acts on the Divine principle that "life is more than meat;" so he had arranged that after dinner there should be "singing and short addresses." As a truthful chronicler, the writer is not prepared to certify to the shortness of all of the addresses; but he can certify to the fact that the motley audience seemed to have as huge an appetite for the singing as for the roast beef and plum-pudding. They showed an appreciation that was most gratifying; but, considering the quality of the song, the result could scarcely have been otherwise. The two ladies whose kind services Dr. Barnardo had secured could not have sung in a more delightful and thrilling way if they had appeared at Windsor by Royal command. Miss Goodhew is gifted with a soprano voice quite rare in its sympathetic power, and it would have rejoiced the heart of Mr. Sankey to have heard with what judgment and feeling she rang out the jubilant measures of his song, "When the mists have rolled away." An encore, of course, was inevitable, and, following the same theme, she carried her rapt audience away to the "beautiful city," of whose glories "the half has never been told." Miss Rich, whose full round alto voice would be the envy of many a high-class professional, discoursed most enchantingly of "The Better Land," and later in the evening sang, with true pathos, those divinely exquisite strains of Handel that never fail to stir the Christian heart to its uttermost depths, "He was despised and rejected of men, a Man of sorrows and acquainted with grief." Let us pray that these sermons in song may linger in the memories and hearts of the men who listened so well, even after the fair singers themselves may be forgotten.



Mr. J. Bennett Anderson was earnest and hearty in his address, but long and rambling. Captain Brenton's talk about God's incessant care was brief and breezy, as became a man of the sea, from which he borrowed most of his similes. Dr. Harry Guinness was eminently practical, and secured the interested attention of all as he spoke of emigration prospects at the Antipodes—how those who were industrious, sober, and God-fearing were certain to succeed, and how those who loafed and idled and drank were equally sure to fail. He caused quite a sensation by exhibiting a lump of solid gold, weighing about four ounces, given to him by a Christian working-man in Australia, to be devoted to mission purposes in the East-end. "Fling it over here!" cried one, to the accompaniment of much laughter; but the modest request was not complied with. Dr. Guinness told of another man near Melbourne, who had saved some money by industry and judicious investment, and who entrusted him with six £10 notes, half the amount to go to Jewish Missions and half to Christian work in East London.

Dr. Barnardo himself spoke several times, and always with such pointedness and weight that he commanded the most patient hearing. He was practical to a degree. In a delicate and yet unmistakable way, he warned his hearers not to be led astray by the revolutionary fallacies of certain so-called Socialists, who aim at setting class against class. The richer portion of the community, he contended, had never shown a more eager and sympathetic interest in the poor than they do at present. There is danger lest this sympathy be alienated by unwise agitation. He had much to say, too, about the advantages of emigration to the Colonies for those who are not too far advanced in years, and are really anxious to do well.

The sight of the spruce-looking youths from the Labour House who had so smartly served at dinner and were afterwards arrayed on the platform, and the Doctor's account of what awaited these lads in Canada, must surely have awakened in many, an earnest desire to relinquish the painful struggle with poverty in which they seem to be getting the worst of it. He promised to do all in his power to give advice to any who applied to him for it. Finally, like those who preceded him, he dwelt strongly on the power of Jesus Christ, when received into the heart, to save, to lift up, and to keep. This contingent of the great army of the unemployed must have got a good deal more that evening than they reckoned on. One could but hope that these four hours in the Edinburgh Castle would afford much material for profitable rumination in future days of enforced idleness and want.

"PITY THE POOR BLIND."

On Friday afternoon another company assembled at the Castle, appealing with pathetic power to the sympathies, on other grounds than the vast gathering of unemployed men a couple of days before. To an excellent repast there sat down not fewer than 1200 of the indigent blind, with their guides. From all parts of the metropolis, in response to Mr. Holt's generous invitation, the army of guests began to converge shortly after midday, and as two o'clock approached there was hardly a street or alley within range of the Castle through which one or more sightless persons were not being guided to the welcome dinner. As they filed into the hall, bright and festive-looking, there were many strange groups among them. Boys and girls could be seen guiding their grey-haired father or mother to their seats. Bright eyed babies were reposing in the arms of blind mothers. Here and there a little boy or girl, with all the world a blank of darkness about them, was being tenderly placed at the board. A husband, wife, and child—all blind—came in one group. Another consisted of two aged sisters, who had been companions in the dark for thirty years and more.

The meal was enjoyed in a leisurely manner, organ and hand-bells and choir music being all available during the time. Some of the deaconesses and the lads of the Youths' Labour House acted most efficiently as waiters. At the close of the meal the meeting resolved itself into a conversational and musical "free and easy," if the succession of tender little talks by Dr. Barnardo, Mr. J. Bennett Anderson, Mr. Wm. Mead, Rev. Walter Bradbury, and Rev. Henry Bright can be so designated. The East London Blind Choir sang several solos and choruses with much power and feeling, and the little hand-bell ringers were an inexhaustible attraction. Votes of thanks to all concerned were accorded with great enthusiasm by the blind people, whose appreciation of such a rare festival was delightfully hearty. As each blind person passed out he was presented by Miss Holt, on behalf of her father, with a new shilling to pay for the services of a guide, and the guide was given an illustrated "Message of Life."

RATCLIFF "BRIDGE OF HOPE."

A series of meetings for women and girls have lately been held here, when a large number of the lowest and most degraded of their sex were entertained to tea. Previous to the gatherings Miss Steer and her lady helpers visited houses, taverns, and gin-palaces in the vicinity, and distributed invitations. The poor girls no longer laugh at and treat with scorn those who attempt to help them, and the work of the Mission, Miss Steer states, was never more hopeful than at present.

At intervals, on the two days mentioned, the guests were received in groups in the Mission-hall adjoining the Refuge. The words of Christian sympathy and comfort spoken created a deep impression among many of the women, who acknowledged the folly and terrible sin of their life, and asked God to help them out of it. During Christmas week, between forty and fifty girls who had been inmates of the Refuge, and who are now doing well in situations in and near London, were entertained at the "Bridge of Hope."

UNION HALL MISSION.—During the past few weeks our free teas have been largely attended by the most needy that could be found by our staff of visitors. We have also been enabled to distribute blankets and other clothing. Soup has been given twice a week. It would melt the hardest heart to witness the scenes we see. Many come after all has been distributed, and it is touching to hear their pleadings. We hope to continue to render such help as we have the means. Our hearts are much encouraged, in all the halls of the Mission, by many evidences of God's blessing upon the work. Robert Bilke.

THE AGAPEMONE HERESY.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF MR. PRINCE'S DOCTRINES.

(1) The day of grace is passed, and the day of judgment has begun, Christ being no longer seated on his Father's throne, but on his own throne.

(2) That He has given to "Brother Prince" to sit there with Him as the great overcomer in the Gospel dispensation (Rev. iii. 21).

(3) That "Brother Prince" is the covenant head of this dispensation of Judgment, and that he is made ruler over all Christ's goods (Matt. xxiv. 47).

(4) That "Brother Prince" has been fitted for this high position by being given to drink of the cup which Christ Himself drank of, and to be baptized with the baptism of suffering and trial that He was baptized with, in a manner and to an extent that has been appointed to none other on earth.

(5) "Brother Prince" has been raised from the dead.

(6) That, as the day of grace is passed, and the day of judgment begun, we must have the Holy Ghost as given during the day of judgment, in order to understand the Scriptures bearing upon it—that is, bearing upon our own times and duties; and, in order to obtain the Spirit thus, we must receive "Brother Prince's" teaching and go to the Agapemone.

(7) The deliverance of man from sin is not by Christ's death; for, in the teaching of the tract entitled "The Parable of the School-boys who Stole the Apples," the sufferings of the Son left the boys as much under the power of the enemy as ever. This tract also teaches the blasphemous doctrine that the Son was chastised by mistake, as though God did not know who was the author of evil.

(8) The Holy Ghost, as the Spirit of the Lord in judgment, detected that the real cause of all the evil in the church was the devil.

(9) This manifestation of Satan being the real cause of all the evil, and his condemnation and expulsion took place at the Agapemone, where the Son of Man was revealed in judgment.

(10) That the life of the body, since the Fall, is sustained by the devil, who is hid in man's flesh—that is, the flesh of man's body.

(11) The devil is the real sinner—[Note: man's responsibility is thus denied]—and deliverance is obtained by his being cast out.

(12) Though Christ is said to have died for our sins, no one can get any benefit from his death but those who receive Mr. Prince's testimony.

(13) The Dispensation of Glory having commenced, natural relationships are not to be acknowledged.

(14) Mr. Prince is the Bride of Christ, and filled with all the fulness of God.

A SOLEMN WARNING.

As the truth of the above summary of Mr. Prince's doctrines is, I understand, denied by Messrs. Fox and Kerr, and said to be libellous, I affirm that it is a true, though inadequate, summary of the awful and blasphemous doctrines propagated by Mr. Prince and his deluded followers.

In my summary there are fourteen statements altogether.

The first six are almost verbal quotations from a document sent out by "The Residents of the Agapemone," in 1873. The next three give the distinctive teaching of "The Parable of the School-boys who Stole the Apples," which is dated "The Agapemone, June 18, 1877." The next three give the teaching of Mr. Fox's own pamphlet, "The Secret of the Lord in Judgment," published by Starkey, of Reading.

Mr. Fox also teaches that Prince is the Bride of Christ.

In result, there are only two statements in my summary that I have not black and white for. Firstly—That natural relationships are denied. I can only say that this was the teaching of the Prince-ites the early part of last year in this town. Secondly—That Mr. Prince is filled with all the fulness of God. As to this, it was taught in this town that all that Paul was desiring and stretching out after, as in Philippians iii. and in the prayers of Ephesians i. and iii., Mr. Prince had attained—and it is in the prayer of Ephesians iii. that the expression "Filled with all the fulness of God" appears. [This statement is made in Brother Prince's Diary at the end.—Ed.]

As the above delusions are connected with a professed deliverance from sin, their great text being Zephaniah iii. 15, "Thou shalt not see evil any more," I add from the Apostle John himself, "If we say we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us," 1st Epistle of John i. 8; and here the Apostle himself says, "If we say," even if an Apostle should say such a thing, he was to be held as self-deceived. And again I would give another word from the same beloved Apostle of our Lord Jesus Christ: "We are of God: he that knoweth God heareth us; he that is not of God heareth not us. Hereby know we the spirit of truth, and the spirit of error," 1st Epistle of John iv. 6. And here we see that one test of the Spirit that is at work in any movement is—Are we listening to the Apostles? "He that knoweth God, heareth us."

May the Lord in his mercy give those who are beguiled by the enemy of souls, to listen to the teaching of that very Apostle who tells us so plainly that "If we say we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us." I would close by warning people that the testimony of Mr. Prince is not of God.

MISS VON FINKELSTEIN.

This lady has been delivering her addresses in various leading provincial towns. At Manchester, Darlington, Carlisle, and other places, large audiences came to hear her vivid presentations of Palestine life, that throw so much added light on the pages of the sacred record.

On Sunday week she gave an address in Edinburgh on "The Footsteps of Jesus," which so greatly interested the people that she was induced to return and lecture last Saturday evening, which she did to a splendid gathering in the Music Hall, the Lord Provost presiding. Many ministers and other prominent members of the community were present. The Scottish people are proverbial lovers of the Bible. Miss von Finkelstein's graphic portraiture of the scenes and surroundings of our Lord's ministry were therefore most acceptable and highly appreciated.

She is lecturing in the South of England this week.

CONTINENTAL and FOREIGN NOTES.

At Berlin a thousand journeymen carpenters and joiners have petitioned the Government to protect them from Sunday labour, while at Dresden the directors of some large glass-works have dismissed all their men—about a thousand—on account of their refusal to work on Sundays.

Corsica.—A British and Foreign Bible Society's Colporteur writes, in a private letter that has been published in the Evangéliste, that the Gospel is being preached and attentively listened to in Ajaccio. The priests bitterly oppose the work, writing many articles against it in a clerical Bonapartist organ; but God is giving blessing.

Belgium.—A successful anti-alcohol meeting was recently held in Liège, presided over by M. de Lavaleye. He stated that owing to the restricted resources of the country the wages of the Belgian workmen were insufficient to support life properly, and yet the working-class spent annually from 140 to 150 million francs in spirits. Belgium, unfortunately, heads the list of imbibers of strong drink.

Tunis.—Mr. Hocart, of the French Mission, gives some impressions of what he has seen in Bougie during a short stay there. The school for native girls promises much happy change to those who are doomed to pass their lives between four walls without even a window, and who serve their husbands as slaves do their masters. The Gospel alone can break these chains. Faith in Mahommedanism is declining, without, however, being always replaced by faith in Christ. It remains to be seen whether they will be more easily won from indifference than from a false religion.—Evangéliste.

Romanists and the Scripture.—There has appeared in Paris a new translation of the Gospels by Henri Lasserre, a fervent Roman Catholic. He says: "It is an astonishing and sorrowful fact that, while continuing to be the most illustrious book in the world, the Gospels are yet an ignored book." "With profound astonishment," he observes that, "out of one hundred persons who practise all the sacraments there is not one who looks at the Gospels except by chance; the great majority of his Church's children know the Divine book only in fragments, without any logical or chronological order." This translation has been in preparation about twelve years, and has received the imprimatur of the Archbishop of Paris. The translation has been made, as might be expected, to accord with the dogmas of the Romish Church, and is dedicated to "Our Lady of Lourdes."—Chrétien Belge.

Notes and Comments.

OUR portrait and sketch for next week will be those of Rev. J. Fordyce, of the Anglo-Indian Evangelisation Society, and late of Simla, India.

Mr. William Noble returned to London on Monday last, after an absence in America and Australia of eighteen months.

The latest intelligence we have received of Earl Cavan is that he was a trifle better, giving hope of a little prolongation of life, but that the doctors cannot give any hope of a permanent recovery.

We are glad |to learn that in Bath and Sheffield conferences have been arranged for, similar to the recent Conference at Hastings of Congregational pastors, which was marked by such manifest blessing.

Our readers will hear with much regret that our venerable friend Mr. George Holland, of the George-yard Mission, has had a serious attack of illness. We are glad to say that he is in a measure restored, though still suffering from the effects of his indisposition.

We are glad to be able to state that, though Mr. Weaver was prevented by ill-health from commencing his mission at the chapel in Little Wild-street, on the 23rd ult., as announced, he is now much better. On Sunday last he conducted the services both morning and evening, preaching with much power. We earnestly trust his mission may be greatly blessed.

A correspondent writes to us as follows :—

> Some weeks ago three of the Nonconformist churches in South London arranged for a New Year's united missionary prayer-meeting. It was accordingly held in one of their school-rooms on the first Monday evening in the year. The three churches have an average congregation of one thousand persons, including sixteen office-bearers. At this special meeting there were present the astounding number of thirty, all told, which number included one pastor, two deacons, and two chapel-keepers. Had it been a concert or bazaar, with a few "lucky" tubs and the like, I suppose the number would have been very much augmented. Alas! for the practical sympathy manifested on behalf of the missionary, and the heathen in far-off lands.

We must yet be an appreciable distance from that unity for which so many loving Christian hearts are praying and longing, when a contemporary, in a notice of the death of a clergyman, can refer to the fact, apparently as being remarkable, that "he sometimes associated with ministers of other communions in support of general religious societies, like the Bible Society." Surely it ought, day by day, to become easier for all who love our Lord Jesus Christ to agree to differ about non-essentials, if differ they must, and to be united in every movement having for its aim and object the spread of the common Gospel.

A correspondence appears in The Times of Thursday, between the Bishop of Oxford and Canon Wilberforce, in relation to the preaching of the latter, in a Nonconformist Chapel, to a congregation gathered by special effort from those not in the habit of attending any place of worship. There has been no attempt to make capital out of it. The tone of the letters has been admirable. The effect on candid readers is to show that the ecclesiastical narrowness of a former age cannot be made to fit in with this. The struggle of good men against an exclusive and sectarian spirit among Christians is hopeful, if nothing more.

The Bishop relies on the opinion of two very eminent barristers (Sir James Stephen and the late Mr. Benjamin Shaw) "that it is not legal for a clergyman of the Church of England to take part as an officiating minister in a service of Nonconformists, wherever held." The Bishop, however, lays less emphasis on the non-legality than on the non-expediency of doing so. The Record does not think the opinion above quoted is sound, and adds:—

> As the chapel in which Canon Wilberforce appeared was in his own parish, it is by no means clear that the Bishop could have inhibited him... We venture to predict that if the matter is taken, as is suggested, before the Courts, it will be found to depend not on any Nonconformist disability or any disciplinary law of the clergy, but simply on the powers of the Bishop and the incumbent to inhibit a clergyman, if they think fit, from ministering in someone else's parish.

Canon Wilberforce, however, goes beyond this in courteous deference to the Bishop, and thus concludes the correspondence :—

> In the meantime one obligation is clearly on me —namely, the law of obedience to the plain command of my Bishop, and if I understand your Lordship not to remonstrate merely, but distinctly and authoritatively as my Bishop to forbid my preaching to my parishioners within the walls of a Nonconformist chapel, I shall, pending the decision of a court of law, loyally and unhesitatingly obey you.

No doubt the Canon has, in consequence of his action, suffered not a little from some who are "Churchmen" and nothing more. In this he has the sympathy of all large-hearted Christians, whether Conformist or Nonconformist. An important question has been raised, which must be settled sooner or later; but an unspeakable advantage has been gained in the brotherly-kindness and Christian love which have characterised the correspondence; if these be maintained throughout this, and can be secured in other controversies, it will command the approval of God and the respect of men.

We beg to draw the special attention of our readers to the advertisement announcing the remarkable series of meetings to be held in London next week in connection with the Church Missionary Society. Such an event is unparalleled in the religious history of the Metropolis, and will, we trust, bring down an unparalleled blessing on the heathen world.

An article in the current number of The Quarterly Review, on the subject of "Church Patronage," will well repay thoughtful perusal. The writer states that there are no fewer than 6230 "legally saleable livings" in the Established Church, and 6930 livings which cannot legally be put into the market. Advowsons, however, are stated to be of much less value than they were a few years ago, the author of the paper attributing the steady depreciation to the agitation respecting the sale of livings which has been growing for some time past. Few will deplore the fact; for sale and purchase upon ground which ought to be deeply sacred, cannot be defended upon any but the very lowest basis.

Mr. Edward Hurditch, who has successfully laboured in the Gospel for some years at Central Hall, Swindon, has failed in health, and a sea voyage has been prescribed for him. He is now on the way to Australia, where, if strength be granted him, he hopes to evangelise for a year, afterwards returning to his loved work in Swindon. Before his departure, some of the ministers in the town sent a warm brotherly letter of sympathy, commending him to God during his absence, and praying for his safe return amongst them.

In the House of Commons, last week, the First Lord of the Treasury stated it as his opinion that the English occupation of Egypt had been of great benefit to that country. Not so thinks Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., who, having lately returned from a sojourn in the East, said, in an interview reported in The Pall Mall Gazette of January 27 :—

> When we went to Egypt we were going to establish the civil, moral, and Christian influences of our country on the banks of the Nile. What we have done has been to establish an enormous number of grog-shops and brothels. That is the most conspicuous sign of our civilising mission in the land of the Pharaohs.

Of this tremendous indictment, Mr. Caine proceeds to give ample proof, and his statement altogether is one that ought to make every Christian Englishman, and most of all our governing authorities, blush for shame. As The Pall Mall Gazette properly remarks, in commenting on Mr. Caine's revelations: "It is the duty of all who wish to clear England's name and England's fame from this foulest of blots, to take prompt, effective, and concerted action." But the worst feature of the case is that probably no action will be able to eliminate the evil, now it has taken root.

It would appear as if the closing years of this century were destined to witness a conspiracy, not so much against Christian faith as against Christian morals. When Socialists in Marylebone Parish Church hiss at the reading of the Eighth Commandment; when a Positivist of literary fame, Mr. Cotter Morison, argues for another moral code than the Christian one; when Mr. John Morley tells the age that the least important thing about Burns was that he drank too much, and was incontinent (Miscellanies, vol. i. p. 183); when a school of artists are fighting against our Christian usages of decency—we may learn from these things, and much beside, that, instead of the rule of the Ten Commandments, the setting up of that of the self-will of man is to be the combined aim of our literary and socialistic sceptics.

We are glad to see that the last Fernley Lecture of the Wesleyan Methodists by Rev. W. L. Watkinson (Woolmer, 1s. 6d.) deals with the question of "The Influence of Scepticism on Character." The book is one of remarkable vigour. We need not fear these assaults on our Christianity in the attempt to bring in a new method of conduct, but we must be prepared for it. Meanwhile, let us set ourselves against the habit into which Christians fall, of landing great sceptics because they have a literary celebrity. Few things have worked graver

The following brief letter is somewhat forestalled by the statements in our last two issues, but we give it nevertheless, trusting that it may carry a message to some who may be led to respond to its appeal :—

> Sir,—In this vast land there are hundreds and thousands of towns and villages, and a large number of important cities, perfectly accessible to us, which are without any living witness for Christ. In very many of them it would be a comparatively easy thing to effect a permanent settlement, were that thought desirable; but, in any case, to travel through them, and spend a longer or shorter time in each—a day, a week, a month—would present no difficulty whatever, if there were only the men and the women to do it. But, alas! there are not. A band of members of the China Inland Mission, stirred up by these great needs, are daily praying for one hundred new missionaries for our own Mission by the end of 1887. Will your readers join us in this daily prayer?
> I purpose returning to England in about a month, and hope to be in London about the end of Febuary; and I shall be so glad to see personally, or to hear from, any on whose hearts the Lord may lay the great needs of China.
> Yours faithfully in Christ,
> J. Hudson Taylor.
> Ta-ku-tang, Kiang-si Province, China, Dec. 10.

The condition of the poor question requires much patience. With great destitution there is a conflict of voices. Mr. Hyndman's letter to The Times, describing a state of distress in the West-end bordering on despair, has led to an announcement from the Secretary of the Mansion House Committee of a very searching investigation. But Mr. Hyndman, in another letter to The Times, protests against this, as an unauthorised, inquisitorial examination. It would appear right to ordinary persons that when on such a matter appalling figures are published, their accuracy should be tested.

No one can fail to be struck with this: Let a man bent on some benevolent errand go through the streets of any town on a Sunday afternoon. He will meet scores of young workmen with short pipes in their mouths. This mostly means drinking when the taverns are open at night. It means repugnance to work on Monday, and the repugnance grows with the wrong courses, till at forty years of age all energy is gone, and in times of slackness such workmen are dismissed. In this hard problem of meeting distress we have as a nation to go to the roots of very much of it.

Few matters in connection with the "Knights of Labour" movement in America have been more noteworthy than the issue of an address to all such associations, Trades Unions, and Labour organisations by the American Women's Christian Temperance Union. The little paper contains some plain truths which deserve the attention of Trades Unions nearer home; such, for instance, as that the central question of labour reform is not so much how to get higher wages as how to turn present wages to better account, as waste harms most those who can least afford it. We quite agree with our practical sisters across the Atlantic in the opinion that it is not so much over-production as under-consumption that grinds the faces of the working men, and that the money spent in drink means less flour in the barrel. But, unfortunately, it is difficult to get the working people to see what a powerful lever for the social elevation of their class they would have in total absti-

Any appeal such as this must, of course, have our sympathy, but this one, addressed to "all working men and women—brothers and sisters of a common hope," goes to higher ground. It pleads for "pure language and a pure life," for the observance of the Sabbath, for the daily study of his blessed words, who "spake as never man spake," for the adoption of the New Testament as "the text-book of political economy;" and it concludes by beseeching those who read it to "go forward to work out his golden precepts into the world's life and law by making first of all his law and life our own." That these pleadings may be responded to practically in myriads of lives, all those who read the noble words will, we trust, heartily pray.

The Roman Catholic Bishop of Newport, in a pastoral on the "beatification" of the English Martyrs (The Universe, January 22), and Father Davis in preaching on "The Christian Family" (Catholic Times, January 22) unite in taking a gloomy view of the prospects of Romanism in England. The first has this remarkable passage, which we hardly need say would have been contradicted in all the Roman Catholic journals in the land if a Protestant had written it :—

> The Catholic Church in England has lived, and she lives. If there is still much to do—if our comparatively few conversions are more than balanced by the daily and hourly loss of our poor boys and girls: if the solid English millions are as much untouched by the spirit of faith as ever they have been at any period of history, and if numbers of our own people are terribly indifferent to Mass and Sacraments—have we not a right to hope that the blood of the martyrs may now at length begin to work its wonders?

Father Davis is still more desponding :—

> They heard much, nowadays, of "the conversion of England." They had not much time for that. They could hardly believe in the conversion of England, because, while on the one hand they saw a comparative few coming into the Church of God, on the other hand, they saw a dark stream issuing from it, a multitude of Catholic children going out from the Catholic Church in the vast cities, like blood flowing from the wounded side of the Church. ...Before hope of converting England could be consummated, they must staunch that gaping wound by which so many souls were annually lost to their Church and to religion.

This bleeding process would appear to be in full operation in the United States, as well as in England, judging from the following, which appears in the New York Independent :—

> Out of less than sixty members received on confession of faith at a Protestant Church near this city, at its last communion, three had been Roman Catholics, but were brought under the prevailing religious interest. This is only an illustration of the constant, almost unobserved current by which those brought up under other conditions are assimilated into our religious life. We believe that the drift from the Catholic to the Protestant Church here, and the world over, is greater than that in the opposite direction. Catholics often lament that they lose great numbers of their people, and the enormous growth of the Catholic Church is chiefly through immigration.

The kind friend who a few weeks ago subscribed for twenty-five copies of The Christian, to be sent to as many foreign missionaries, has repeated his order, making fifty. Another has ordered six for the same purpose. We are adding 150 to our free list, and shall be much obliged if those who are sending their own copies to missionaries abroad will give us the names, that we may not duplicate them.

The Ceylon Observer of December 15 has a leading article warmly condemning the conduct of the Governor, Sir Arthur Gordon, who, with the Government, would seem to be pursuing an anti-Christian policy. Not only has recognition and aid been afforded to Buddhism and its professors by the vote of public money for dagobas, but the Governor is charged with "summoning an array of Buddhist priests to a public levée, and of giving them a position and recognition far above that accorded to Christian ministers." We are glad to see that our contemporary has made so faithful a stand against such conduct, and that it calls upon the Bishop of Colombo and the heads of the different branches of the Christian Church and missions, to memorialise the Queen on the subject.

THE RAPTURE OF THE CHURCH.

We have received many replies to Mr. Shackleton's appeal for one plain text affirming the theory of the Secret Rapture of the Church. Not one claims to have found such a text, though each infers his particular view from various passages. All the writers agree that the Lord will come previously to the Millennium, and that there will be a period of "great tribulation" at the close of this age. But beyond this they differ. Some think that the Lord will not return until the end of the tribulation, and that, therefore, the Church will pass through it. Others, that the Church will be secretly caught up to meet the Lord in the air before "the great tribulation" begins. Others, that this removal will not be secret. Others, that only the faithful, the watchful, the ready ones, will be caught up, and the rest be left to go through the tribulation. One brother thinks that during the tribulation on earth, the saints will appear before the judgment-seat of Christ in several successive companies: and that he can count seven such raptures in the Apocalypse. Another objects to the word "rapture" as not occurring in A.V. or R.V. and not intelligible, as used in this discussion, to a large proportion of believers.

All the above views are held by good men who have spent many years in studying them. There are periodicals devoted to this kind of research, but this one cannot be so occupied. We think it very undesirable to be engaged in such an interminable discussion, and must decline to encourage it among our readers. It was a happy release when, thirty years ago, we saw that no uninspired man could have correctly anticipated the order of the events of the Lord's first coming, and concluded that this was equally true of his second coming. We earnestly desire that our readers may enjoy the same freedom from those vexed and vexing questions. "And the Lord direct your hearts into the love of God and the patient waiting for Christ."

Good-morrow, World!

BY JOSEPH A. TORREY.

The world is cold, it is true;
Cruel and sordid, too;
Full of sorrow for me and for you.

What then? We must face the world—
Not with the proud lip curled,
Not with love's banners furled.

Meet it and greet it with smiles,
(Not with cunning and wiles),
With eyes turned to heaven the whiles.

PERFECTIONISM.

Dear Sir,—The warning contained in your issue of January 20 is much needed. The fact is that the error of perfectionism, or believing that "the flesh," is extracted out of the believer, saps the very ground of his communion with God. The only ground upon which a perfectly holy God can have fellowship, must be a perfectly holy one. God cannot look upon any sin, and "how can two walk together except they are agreed?"

According to the word of truth that ground is provided by the continual application of the blood of Christ; it "cleanseth us" (not has cleansed) from all sin. The perfectionist on the other hand bases his supposed communion on the perfect holiness of his walk. Like every other heresy, this one is founded upon an extract of Scripture. One of the most deplorable results of this delusion is that the deluded one gets out of communion with God, and thus ceases to grow into the likeness of Christ. Sooner or later the grace and lowliness of mind, which is one of the chief beauties of a child of God, gives way to a steely hardness, imperceptible it may be to himself, but most painfully apparent to his fellows. The above is an awful proof of the dreadful power of Satan, and his ability to frustrate the grace of God.

I am the more concerned about this matter because many of God's children, in the present day, are being stirred up to seek that fuller and more glorious life which it is their undoubted privilege to enjoy, and it seems to me that this perfectionist error is just the devil's travesty of true Scriptural holiness, of which he has so much reason to be afraid.

COTTAGE HOMES FOR WORKING-MEN.

Sir,—Your remarks on this subject in a recent issue induce me to invite, through your columns, the attention of Christian capitalists to a system of providing homes for workmen that I have pursued for some years on a small scale. This system, if carried out extensively, would enable a large number of workmen, earning only moderate wages, to rent a whole cottage, and greatly help to reduce that over-crowding in our metropolis which all feel to be so great an evil.

The principal features of this system are:—

(1) Well-built cottages, with four rooms and a good garden to each, at five shillings per week, including all rates and taxes.

(2) The opportunity for each tenant to purchase the freehold of the cottage he dwells in, by a small additional payment beyond the rent, on simple, but well-considered (by counsel), terms.

(3) The removal out of the crowded parts of London of thousands of families, thus enabling those families, the nature of whose occupation prevents their leaving, to obtain increased accommodation without increase of rent.

(4) The spiritual, moral, and physical improvement, possible upon removal from the foul air and moral contagion of the over-crowded districts.

(5) A fair rate of interest on the capital expended. To go into this matter to the extent that would be necessary to prove the above propositions to be practical would require too great a demand upon your space; but I have proofs far better than any words could convey, having had built several blocks of cottages to test the system, and proved it a success.

To any persons, therefore, taking an interest in the subject of suitable dwellings for the working class, I am willing to show the proof in working order, and to go into the whole matter fully.—Yours faithfully, Pascoe Fenwick.

THE JAPANESE EXHIBITION.

Sir,—With reference to the letter by Miss M. McLean, in a recent issue, the Japanese Village and the villagers have been taken over by a new company, viz., the Japanese Village and Oriental Trading Company (Limited), as you will see by the enclosed extract from The Globe,* and it is the intention of the company at once to re-decorate the Village and introduce the electric light, and in every way make the place a great centre of attraction to the public; meanwhile the Village will be open and the entertainments continue as usual. The company have arranged to house the whole of the villagers in cottages adjoining (where they will have every comfort and attention), as it is considered more beneficial for their health, than to be continually sleeping in the houses of the Village. Trusting to your courtesy to insert this letter in your next issue, yours faithfully,

John Green,
Secretary of the New Company.
Hyde-park (near Top of Sloane-street, S. W.)

---

* The Japanese Village at Albert Gate, Hyde Park, has been purchased by a new company, viz., the Japanese Village and Oriental Trading Company (Limited), and the village is now to become the central market of the Japanese trade in London. Goods will be consigned from houses and buyers in various parts of Japan direct to the Village at Albert Gate, and there unpacked and at once offered for sale. More native artificers are being brought over, and will continue to work all day at their various trades in the Village, which is literally peopled with Japanese men, women, girls, and little children.

THE HEATHEN AND SPIRITUAL WORK.

Sir,—My attention has been called to a statement in a letter by Prof. Drummond, in your issue of January 20, which I cannot allow to go unchallenged. He says, with reference to mission work amongst uncivilised peoples, such as are to be found in the region of Lake Nyassa, that a "purely spiritual work is impossible; the principles of the New Testament must be taught practically, by men at work, by building and planting, by buying and selling, as well as through preaching and healing."

It is to the first part of the statement, "that a purely spiritual work is impossible," I take exception. I see no warrant for it in the Word of God. The command of the Master is clear and definite, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel," and such was the weapon wielded by Peter at Pentecost and the other Apostles elsewhere. To my own experience of many and varied forms of mission work during a residence of sixteen years in India, the same objection may be urged, as the Hindoos, though idolaters, have a civilisation, so I must take you to another region of the globe.

Will your readers kindly refer to a narrative of missionary enterprises in the South Seas by John Williams, published in 1837; it is easily procured, and there, for the sake of being definite, I will ask them to read his account of the introduction of the Gospel to the island of Aitutaki, in 1821. Mr. Williams went there in that year with two native preachers from another island, and left them on Aitutaki. He found "the natives on Aitutaki exceedingly noisy, and presented in their persons and manners all the wild features of savage life. Some were tattooed from head to foot; some were painted most fantastically with pipe-clay and yellow and red ochre; others were smeared all over with charcoal, and in this state were dancing, shouting, and exhibiting the most frantic gestures……they were constantly killing, and even eating each other, for they were cannibals."

In 1822, only eighteen months after leaving these two native evangelists on the island, he visited it again, and, before reaching the land, canoes crowded round the boat in which he was, and saluted him gratefully, some of the natives crying out, "Good is the Word of the Lord, it is now well at Aitutaki! the good Word has taken root at Aitutaki!" On landing, he expressed to the chief and people his joy at their having embraced the Gospel, and preached himself to a congregation of from 1500 to 2000 in a church which they had built 180 feet long by 30 feet wide, from what he may well call "one of the most delightful texts in the Bible, John iii. 16, 'For God so loved the world;'" and he adds, "at all the islands I have visited from that time to the present, my first address has invariably been founded upon that passage or upon 1 Tim. i. 15, 'This a faithful saying.'"

Away with the thought that the Gospel needs any of the acts of man to commend it to the most barbarous and degraded! It is, as ever, the power of God unto salvation, and stands not in the wisdom of men. What we want to propagate this blessed Gospel is a Church at home not carried about with every wind of doctrine, but on its knees crying to God for a mighty outpouring of the Holy Ghost.

Yours faithfully, Robert Paton.

EVANGELICAL TEACHING.

Dear Sir,—You rightly attribute the fact that false teachers so easily find disciples, to "the lack of definite teaching of foundation truths" (The Christian, January 20). May I add to this another reason, viz., that so many who hold Scriptural truth have not learned it from the Scripture itself, but from some human authority?

Is it not probable that numbers of persons, both old and young, who have been all their lives under evangelical teaching, would be quite at a loss if they were called upon to give Scriptural proof of some fundamental doctrine of the Christian faith? They have not acquired their religious convictions from personal study of the Scripture, but at second hand from the uninspired authority of preachers, teachers, and writers. Hence their faith, having human authority for its basis, is easily overturned by the force of some other human authority.

Is not this state of things, moreover, to be accounted for by the want of more abundant reference to Scripture on the part of preachers and teachers, who are, too often, themselves very superficially acquainted with the sacred page? It is not enough for the preacher to set sound doctrine before his hearers. His business is to give them chapter and verse for what he says. Like Paul, he should say, "Say I these things as a man, or saith not the law the same also?" Like Paul at Thessalonica, he should "reason with them out of the Scriptures;" and should aim at making his hearers like the Beræans, who "searched the Scriptures daily, whether those things were so," and not like the multitudes who indolently accept whatever their favourite preacher tells them.

He should make a point, also, of preaching on the great doctrinal texts of Scripture, and should think no pains too great in seeking to make the meaning of them clear to the minds of his audience, and in making them see for themselves that this, and nothing else, is the meaning; so that the truth may not afterwards be wrested from them by someone who explains away the passages on which it is founded. Not that he should be content to make of his flock an assemblage of mere theologians, but he should seek to reach their hearts and conciences through the medium of their understandings—always in dependence on the Spirit's operation, whose method is to sanctify by the truth (John xvii. 17). It was a weighty counsel given by David Brainerd, in dying, to his brother, never to encourage heat without light.

This is not the way, perhaps, to become a popular preacher (unless it be in Scotland). If popularity is the preacher's object, let him deal in poetry, oratory, and sentiment, rather than solid instruction. But it is the way to build up the people of God in their holy faith, and guard them against being carried away with every wind of doctrine, and present them perfect in Christ when He appears.—Truly yours,

Woking. H. N

Spiritual Teaching at Cambridge.

As much study is a weariness to the flesh, so much theology oftentimes becomes a weariness to the spirit. The religious instruction imparted at the Universities is, generally speaking, calculated to reach the intellect rather than the heart. All recognise the importance of such knowledge from an educational standpoint, but college lectures contain little to satisfy the longings of the soul.

Consequently, multitudes of men pass through this curriculum learning nothing of the spiritual truths of the Word of God, nor of those doctrines to which the believer delights to cling. They are well up, for instance, in the arguments pro and con as to who wrote the Epistle to the Hebrews, but they know little or nothing of what the Epistle is really about, or for what object the writer penned it.

True, this intellectual knowledge suffices for examination purposes, but it does not meet the sterner needs of practical religious life, especially in the cases of those to whose lot it falls to be the spiritual teachers of others. Consequently the student is left to form what religious conclusions his own judgment may dictate or his private study of the Scripture may suggest. If such judgment or personal acquaintance with the Word of God be wanting in any case, the mind is open to receive any errors which may be presented, and these are plentiful now-a-days.

But, happily, at this point the breach has been filled by Rev. Handley C. G. Moule, and Rev. J. Barton, who, by more or less private and informal means, strive to impart spiritual knowledge and advice, as occasion requires and opportunity offers.

With a view to lay before successive generations of undergraduates, the Scriptural teaching upon the subject of Holiness, they periodically convene special meetings, addressed by such well-known speakers as those who lead the Keswick Convention.

On Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, of last week, Rev. Evan Hopkins, Rev. C. A. Fox, Mr. H. F. Bowker, and other gentlemen delivered very helpful addresses in the Hall of the Y.M.C.A. At the evening meetings about one hundred and fifty undergraduates were present, the rest of the space being occupied by townsfolk. Each evening a number rose to testify their desire to lead a more consecrated life. There was no excitement, no undue prominence given to "experience," but quietly and earnestly the speakers pointed out what God was able and willing to do in drawing souls nearer to Himself.

The principles strongly urged were these: That the Scriptures are the supreme authority to which all "experience" must be subordinate; that the flesh is "not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be;" that its tendency to evil may be counteracted by the indwelling Spirit of God, but is not eliminated; that holiness is not an attainment, but an attitude, which it requires continuous faith in God to maintain.

It is a fitting subject of prayer in these perilous times that God will greatly bless all such efforts to build up the educated youth of our land in their most holy faith; that being rooted and grounded, and holding fast the form of sound words, they may be preserved from error, and stand as heroes for the truth of God and of his Word.

HEBREW CHRISTIANS.—A social gathering of Jews who have embraced Christianity was held recently at the hall of the London City Mission, Old Montague-street, Whitechapel. About 150 were present, and after the tea, kindly provided by Mrs. Erlich, the Scripture was read, in Hebrew, German, and English. Besides visitation, Bible-classes, night-school, &c., special meetings and services for the instruction of Jews are conducted in factories in the neighbourhood. The missionary states that, instead of rebuke and maltreatment, as in former years, he and his fellow workers often get a kindly greeting, and that "many a son and daughter of Abraham have been brought to a knowledge and love of the Lord Jesus Christ."

Belleville, Paris.

A RECENT incident connected with Miss de Broen's work, in Belleville, Paris, may interest your readers. The attention of one of the speakers in the Mission-hall in Belleville was attracted lately to a strong, fine-looking young man, whose place is never vacant at the evening meetings. Entering into conversation with him on one occasion after the service, he invited the speaker to come and see him. Undeterred by the distance, at Montmartre, this was agreed to, when his history was found to be as follows:—

As a butcher's assistant, he first earned his living, but his fine physique, and longing for a free life, led him to be a hanger-on at fairs. There he soon entered on a congenial career as a wrestler, or lutteur de foires, as it is called. All went well, till, in an unlucky moment, one of his ribs was broken. Some one directed him to Miss de Broen's Medical Mission—that place of which so many have said, "I have found healing for soul and body there." Was he to do so too? Yes, for he heard what he had never known before, and he received Christ's forgiveness, as well as his healing of the body. Now he follows an honest trade, and one that allows him to keep Sunday, a rarity in the life of a working man in Paris, but to which he strongly holds. Thus does the old remedy repeatedly show its efficacy.

The great need of unrelaxed efforts was brought to light by The Pall Mall Gazette, of January 19, when the case was related of an Anarchist in Paris, taken up for burglary and for attempting the life of a policeman, and these acts he justified on principle. After sentence was passed, one of the Anarchist papers proclaimed him a hero and a martyr. The Pall Mall says: "We have here a startling and novel fact. Burglary and murder have appeared as the logical result of Socialistic propagandism, and are nakedly defended." England has the light. Let her send it near and far among the nations, and in so doing she will obtain the needed blessing for herself. ALEXINA KER.

The Latter House of Israel.

IN its issue of January 21, The British Weekly has a special account of the strange community at Chatham, who are building what will be the largest church in Great Britain, accommodating more people than St. Paul's Cathedral or the Metropolitan Tabernacle. It is being built at a cost of £50,000 for a company who do not at present number a hundred, but who claim when gathered they will be 144,000, as mentioned in the Book of Revelation. The main doctrine taught is that there is a remnant of 144,000 who are to be saved from death, and who without natural decay pass into the enjoyment of the first resurrection.

Unfortunately for this theory, the leader of the community, who called himself James J. Jezreel (but whose real name was White), died some time since. This caused a division, but Mrs. Jezreel assumed the headship and excommunicated those who differed from her. When the building is completed, ships are to be built, it is stated, which will bring in the remnant from all parts of the earth. Then the end of this dispensation will be at hand. Meantime missionaries are said to be busy all over the world making converts.

MISSION TO DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.—Mr. Mather, the founder and director of this Mission, writes in correction of a statement in our last week's report, that there are constantly employed in the North Sea alone 12,000 fishermen, and that the case referred to in which the men were at work without stopping from three o'clock in the morning till five next evening, was a solitary and special one. The number of cases medically or surgically treated by the staff of the Mission fleet during last year was 3633. This good work among these lonely toilers on the stormy and distant deep is well advocated in articles this month in Old Jonathan and in Woman's Work.

Homes of Hope.

THE Committee and friends of the Homes of Hope, 4, 5, and 6, Regent-square, met together on Tuesday evening, 25th ult., to offer united praise for the mercies of the past year, and to seek Divine guidance in the further and increasing work of the Homes. All the matrons and inmates were present, and counsel and encouragement were given to them by several friends.

A very pleasing and touching incident occurred during the evening. Among those present was a young woman, who five years before had been an inmate of the Homes. She left their shelter for domestic service, was married, and now has a family. She has been instrumental in introducing to the Homes several young women, and last year, 1886, induced five more whom she met, to relinquish their course of sin and enter the Homes of Hope. By permission of the Secretary she spoke a few words to the inmates assembled, urging them from her own example and experience to accept Christ as their Friend and Saviour. Her words told; they were a simple testimony, yet there was no uncertain sound about them; they came from her heart, and though the words trembled on her lips, they found an echo in many a heart. Her testimony was most cheering, especially to those who are carrying on the work of the Homes. May the Holy Spirit increase and bless such helpful testimony, to the praise and glory of his grace, who loved us, and gave Himself for us.

Feeding Hungry Children.

REV. JAMES CHADBURN, Trinity Parsonage, Poplar, writes to us:—Ever since the first week in November a simple but substantial breakfast of hot milk and bread has been provided for poor children in the Mission Hall, Augusta-street. At first the meals were only provided on four days a week, but since Christmas the pressure of hard times has caused the numbers of children to be increased and the meals to be given daily, Sunday excepted. Last week 1254 hot breakfasts were given.

The children belong to the dock labourers of the neighbourhood chiefly, and the sad condition of the shipping industry is partly the cause of the meals being given. But apart from bad trade, wages are so low amongst these men and rents are so high, that where the family numbers six children it is impossible for the father, when in full work, to earn as much as leaves one penny per head for three meals a day. This calculation leaves nothing for fire, light, and clothing. About the poverty there can be no question, nor can there be a question of its being legitimate poverty. The cause of the suffering is simply that there are too many mouths for the wages to feed.

The breakfasts are given at 8 a.m., and about 200 children attend daily. A few volunteer workers manage the work, so that expenses are kept down to 1s. 6d. per diem, and by arrangement with local tradesmen food is so bought that £5 give 1000 meals. Without this help many of the children, perhaps most, would go unfed to school. If funds are supplied the meals will be given every day, except Sunday, until May.

NEW GUINEA.—On Sunday week, at New Court Chapel, Tollington Park, N., Rev. James Chalmers, of Port Moresby, New Guinea, gave some very interesting reminiscences of his twenty years' mission work in that land. Many times have the lives of Mr Chalmers and his companions been in peril from the wild and treacherous natives, and many discouragements have they had to put up with; but light gradually dawned on their horizon. At present there are on the mainland of New Guinea about seventy mission stations, extending from near the East Cape to the West. Mr. Chalmers said that every native savage won for Christ would preach Christ. They had been told to take civilisation first, and then Christianity, but he had travelled east and west in the South Pacific, and had never seen so-called "civilisation" civilise men: it is Christianity only that can civilise them. We hope to give a portrait and sketch of Mr. Chalmers in an early issue.

THE MORAVIANS.

Dear Sir,—Some time ago a number of your readers very kindly assisted a party of emigrants who were obliged to leave Schadura, in the province of Volhynia, in Russia, and seek a home in South Brazil where they might enjoy religious liberty. Of this little band of Christian pilgrims connected with the Church of the United Brethren (or Moravians), numbering 116, 115 reached the land of their choice in safety; one of them died on the passage and was buried at sea. Our friends will, no doubt, be asking, What tidings of the emigrants? They arrived at Joinville, a town in the colony of Dona Franziska, in the province of Santa Catharina, on June 29, last year.

Their first quarters ashore were in the long low range of buildings, provided by the Government for the accommodation of emigrants, until they had decided on the piece of land they wished to reclaim from the great forests. There is no lack of land to choose from, but owing to the mountainous nature of the country, it can only be purchased in long strips in the valleys, and care must be taken to fix the site as near an existing road as possible. Road-making in the primeval forest is very difficult and expensive Mr. Lange, the pastor and energetic leader of the band of emigrants, soon decided on the best piece of land they could get under the circumstances, and they have called it Brüderthal (Brethren's Valley). It contains about 2500 acres, and is within reach of Joinville, whence they obtain their supplies. Unfortunately the road is not yet completed to that part of the forest, but some of the men are engaged in making it at the expense of the Brazilian Government, which has dealt very fairly with our colonists. When last we heard from them there was some sickness among them, owing to the hot climate.

May I take this opportunity of expressing our thanks to all the kind friends who send help from time to time for the Moravian Mission work, through the medium of The Christian. Again and again we feel it a glorious privilege to be associated with such a devoted band of men and women, such as we know the beloved Moravian missionaries to be. When bringing different subjects for remembrance at the throne of grace, please do not forget the 285 Europeans and 41 native Moravian missionaries, as well as the 1600 native helpers, and 82,500 members now gathered from amongst the heathen.

One of the missionaries, writing from the Barbados, West Indies, tells us of a grand field he has there for tract distribution. He says, "If anyone would supply me with a thousand tracts a week I could easily dispose of them."

Yours faithfully, James Henry.

The Revised New Testament.

In the February issue of The Expositor Canon Westcott begins a series of papers on the Revised Version of the New Testament; being himself one of the learned Revisers, his views will be followed with much interest. In this introductory article he says:—

"The claim which the Revisers confidently make – the claim which alone could justify their labours—is that they have placed the English reader far more nearly than before in the position of the Greek scholar; that they have made it possible for him to trace out innumerable subtleties of harmonious correspondence between different parts of the New Testament, which were hitherto obscured; that they have given him a copy of the original which is marked by a faithfulness unapproached, I will venture to say, by any other ecclesiastical version. And while they have done this, they have at the same time given him the strongest possible assurance of the substantial soundness of the familiar rendering, which they have reviewed with the most candid and unreserved criticism."

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. Henry Varley has been conducting special mission services in Sittingbourne with marked success.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes will commence a six days' mission in the Roupell Park Wesleyan Chapel on Sunday next.

Succcessful Evangelistic Services have been conducted at Long Clawson, near Melton Mowbray, by Mr. Walker, of Derby, and at Barton-on Humber, by Mr. J. Flanagan, of Nottingham.

Rev. G. Vipond Byles has just concluded a ten days' mission in Poplar Wesleyan Chapel. The Bible-readings have been well attended, and there has been great blessing. After one of the services about seventy of the Sunday-school children came forward to give themselves to Christ.

Buxton Y.W.C.A.—Mrs. W. E. Legg hasconducted a week's mission here. The Bible-readings for Christians, and the evening evangelistic meetings have all been well attended. Many have professed conversion, young girls and others going home and confessing Christ to their relations and friends.

Tottenham.—Mr. Henry S. Lidstone, of the Children's Special Service Mission, held three days' services amongst the children at St. Paul's School-room, Tottenham, January 17 to 19. There were large attendances, and good numbers remained after each meeting for conversation. It is hoped that many were led to intelligent trust in the Saviour.

Mr. George Clarke has lately had much blessing in his labours at Dr. Elder Cumming's Church, Glasgow. He is now in Greenock, where many among the wealthier families have come out very brightly for Christ. A good time was experienced during his second visit to Kirkcaldy. Prayer is asked for Aberdeen, where Mr. Clarke goes on the 2nd to the 16th.

Y.M.C.A., Shrewsbury.—Mr. Henry Thorne conducted a third mission in this town, January 9 to 17, which from the first was not only attended by large numbers, but was, under God, accompanied by the power of the Holy Ghost. Every meeting was fruitful, so that numbers have professed to find peace through believing in Jesus Christ. Daily noon prayer-meetings were held, and many special requests sent in. The Bible-readings were much valued by those who attended. special interest attaching to one on the Lord's Second Coming. The mission was closed with a bright and happy praise-meeting.

Y.M.C.A., Plymouth.—We lately asked prayer for blessing to rest upon a mission for men, to be conducted by Mr. T. Shuldham Henry. Will you kindly now ask for praise. The Lord has given us many souls. The meetings extended over a week; goodly numbers of men attended, and listened eagerly to the "words of life," solemnly and earnestly spoken by Mr. Henry. Each night, at the close of the address, an after-meeting was held, and many inquirers remained. A testimony meeting was held on Saturday week, and many stood up for the first time to confess Christ. Our hearts are full of praise.

Wm. H. Roberts, Gen. Sec.

Dr. L. W. Munhall, assisted by Prof. D. B. Towner and Mrs. Towner, has been conducting Gospel meetings at Dr. Talmage's Tabernacle in Brooklyn with marked success. The Brooklyn papers make very favourable mention of the services, one of them saying that "Dr. Munhall is the most notable and effective evangelist" who has laboured in their city. The second Sunday was a red letter day, even in the history of Dr. Talmage's church. Some 500 adults, the most of them being young men, publicly professed faith in Christ, and nearly 130 were received into the fellowship of the church. The meetings were to be continued as long as the prevailing interest seemed to demand. Before going to Brooklyn Dr. Munhall held successful missions in Chattanooga and Knoxville.

During this month the following evangelists in connection with the Children's Special Service Mission are at work: Mr. E. Arrowsmith, at Vestry Hall, Hampstead; Mr. G. Banaster, at Gateshead; Mr. Martin J. Hall, at Wandsworth-road Mission Hall; Mr. F. Pitts, at King's Cross; Messrs. E. and C. H. Collier, at Lower Tooting; Mr. T. Sayer, at Hatfield-street Schools, Goswell-road; Mr. H. W. Pewtress, at Deptford Ragged Schools.

Y.M.C.A., EUSTON ROAD.—On January 27, an interesting and instructive lecture on "The Influence of Social Habits on Health and Character," was delivered by Dr. Paramore.

"A ROYAL PRIESTHOOD."

1 Peter ii. 9.

O teach us, Saviour, what Thou art,
  That all our life may be
The outflow of that hidden life,
  Thy people share with Thee.

Reveal to us thy loving will;
  Thy purposes make known;
And grant us faith to claim the best
  Thou givest to thine own.

"A royal priesthood," may we bring
  The sacrifice of praise;
And may the pure anointing oil
  Be on us all our days.

Teach us, through good report or ill,
  To glorify thy name:
To tell the wonders of thy love,
  And glory in thy shame.

Though "principalities and powers"
  Encompass us around,
Thine, Saviour, are the only bonds
  Wherewith we will be bound.

Help us within the holy place
  Continually to dwell;
To keep our priestly garments white,
  And wear our mitre well.

And since Thou ever livest still,
  Pleading "within the veil,"
May intercession blend with thine,
  Nor one petition fail.

Lucy A. Bennett.

Y.M.C.A., PLYMOUTH.—The foundation stone of the new building to be erected for this body at the corner of Bedford and Westwell-streets, was laid on Tuesday, last week, by the Bishop of Exeter. The building will be a handsome one, with spacious reading and lecture rooms, library, gymnasium, and other accommodation. The cost of building and furnishing is estimated at £7500, of which about £1800 remains to be contributed.

WORK IN MADRID.—Pastor Fliedner, of this city, requests us to state that the work of relief, to which we recently referred as being carried on by him, was originated by Mr. Palmer and Mr. Jameson last winter. He also asks prayer on an effort to establish a branch of the British and Continental Federation. Such an effort to stem the tide of immorality is very necessary, "the moral misery being all the greater because very few think much of it."

SOLDIERS AT SHORNCLIFFE.—Mr. H. Hull writes:—A pleasing feature in the work at our Sandgate Institute is the forming of a Mission Band of Christian soldiers to visit the Barrack-rooms on Sundays with tracts, and invite their comrades to the meetings. I would ask your readers for help in this matter in the way of Gospel books and tracts. Parcels should be addressed (carriage paid) to me, at Soldiers' Institute, Sandgate, Kent.

BLOOMSBURY.—The report of the winter work in connection with the Domestic Mission, now removed from Moor-street, Five Dials, to Meard's-court, Soho, as given by Mr. W. Harrison, is exceedingly interesting and encouraging. It shows that the warm-hearted Christian workers of Bloomsbury know and practice the Christ-like method of adapting their supplies, as well as their sympathies, to all the varied wants of these extremely needy times and conditions.

BOURNEMOUTH.—The first Bible Clock Competition has just taken place in Bournemouth, and the prizes were distributed on Saturday, Jan. 22, at the Holy Trinity Schools. The proceedings commenced by the Collect for the second Sunday in Advent; after which the Hon. Mrs. Eliot gave an address on the advantages of such a competition as encouraging neatness, perseverance, and Bible study, which must result in greater love for the Word of God. Miss Beaver then stated the rules by which the marks had been given. Correctness, neatness, variety, and completeness were the principal points, allowance being made for age, and extra marks given if the clock was done without help. The Hon. Mrs. Eliot then distributed the prizes, which were in money, and the Doxology was sung at the conclusion.

THE CLAIMS OF THE HEATHEN AND MOHAMMEDAN WORLD ON THE CHURCH OF CHRIST.

SPECIAL SIMULTANEOUS MEETINGS, FEB. 7—11,

PROMOTED BY

THE CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

These Meetings have been arranged to be held all over London and the immediate suburbs; not as ordinary Missionary Meetings, but simply to set forth plainly and solemnly the claims of the unevangelized Heathen and Mohammedan World upon the Church of Christ; to emphasize the risen Saviour's one great last command; to describe the world's need of the Gospel; to illustrate the blessings which God has already given to the poor, and the inadequate efforts hitherto put forth; and to press home the obligation of all Christians to take their share in the work by personal service or liberal gifts; by endeavours to make the claims felt by others; and, above all, by earnest, continual, systematic prayer.

The following have consented to take part:—Bishops of London, Rochester, Norwich, Salisbury, Exeter, Cork, Sodor and Man, Bedford, Mid China, and Rupert's Land; Bishops Alford, Cheetham, Hellmuth, and Titcomb; Archdeacons Farrar, Hessey, Bardsley, Perowne; The Earl of Northbrook; Mr. Baron Pollock; Sir A. Rollit, M.P.; Mr. Sidney Gedge, M.P.; Mr. C. A. Whitmore, M.P.; Sir T. Fowell Buxton, Sir John Coode, Sir Douglas Fox; Generals Brownlow, Field, G. Hutchinson, and Noble; Colonels Clarke, Morton, Stewart, H. C. McGrigor, Von Heythuysen; Majors Hay, Seton Churchill, Messrs. S. A. Blackwood and G. Williams, and about one hundred other clergymen and laymen.

LIFE OF RICHARD WEAVER.

(Cheap Edition.)

BY R. C. MORGAN,

Author of "At Jesus' Feet;" &c.

"In these pages we have evidence of what one man can do for the glory of God, and the salvation of his fellow-men, when the heart is right before God. When Mr. Weaver found pardon, his tongue was set at liberty; his heart was joyous; and he began to gather poor sinners around him to tell them his joys, and how he obtained them. The account of his labours for the good of others, as related by Mr. Morgan, will astonish many."—Wesleyan Times.

The Book World.

Changed Scenes; or, The Castle and the Cottage. By Lady Hope. 2s. 6d. T. Nelson & Sons. A very attractive story, written with an earnest purpose. The varying fortunes and the early joys and sorrows of the little hermits will interest the young readers, and many holy lessons are taught in a charming and impressive manner that will ensure them ready access to the heart and an abiding-place in the memory.

Will and Work: an Encouragement for Young Christians. By Emily P. Leakey. 1s. 6d. & 2s. 6d. W. Mack. Young Christians, especially young workers, will do well to read this little book both carefully and prayerfully. There is a ring of holy triumph in it that will encourage the timid and stimulate the faint-hearted. The chapters on "Altars" and on "Something to do for Jesus" are, perhaps, the best, though all are good.

The Valleys and Villages of the Bible. By Joseph Viney. Elliot Stock. Contains a store of information about places mentioned in the Bible. Good description of oriental customs and sacred lessons, well and pithily put. The book is full of illustrations, and will be a great help to Bible-class teachers as well as to young readers. To those who cannot visit the scenes of Bible story it is a real boon to have them so graphically depicted.

Forbidden Fruit for Young Men, by Major Seton Churchill (2s. 6d. Nisbet & Co.), on the Christian aspect of the Social Purity question, should be in the hands of all interested in the welfare of young men. Major Churchill's wide experience in different parts of the world, combined with his knowledge of the Scriptures and deep spiritual experience, peculiarly fits him to be the author of such a book as this. We trust that every Y.M.C.A. Librarian will order copies.

The issue of a second edition of Rifted Clouds: the life experiences of Mrs. Bella Cooke (5s. Hodder & Stoughton) enables us to repeat our heartiest commendations of the book. The mystery of suffering is one that can never be fully solved by finite minds, but such a record as this does much to gild life's darkest hours with the glory from beyond the grave. This story of Mrs. Cooke's active benefactions, planned and executed from a couch of pain, ought to be in the hands of all who are graduating in the same school of sorrow.

The Patriarchal Times. By Rev. Thomas Whitelaw, D.D. 6s. Nisbet & Co. Dr. Whitelaw is widely read in the literature of Genesis, but he does not slavishly follow the conclusions reached by other writers. He can think for himself, and he has the courage of his convictions. These are valuable qualities in the man who would re-tell the oft-told stories of the first book in the Bible. We like his reverent handling of sacred themes, and his earnest desire to help us to understand the life and doings of the Patriarchs. Ministers and Sabbath-school teachers will find this book worthy of study.

Our Lord's Healing Office. By Rev. George Morris, A.K.C. 2s. Elliot Stock. This is a clergyman's testimony, written expressly "to bring the Divine claims of the subject to the attention of the clergy and laity of the Church of England." It is calm and temperate in its tone, strong in its argumentative force, and well worthy of thoughtful perusal. The author appeals to the continuity of Bible teaching, and deals ably with objections brought against the tenets he advocates. His chapter on Paul's thorn in the flesh contains much that is original and striking. Whether the reader agrees or not with the doctrine taught, he will find it a profitable exercise to follow the writer in his earnest endeavour to elucidate Bible teaching on the real character of our Lord as Jehovah-Rophi.

Present Day Tracts on Subjects of Christian Evidence, Doctrine, and Morals. By various writers. Vol. viii. 2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. We have already noticed some of the tracts which make up this volume, but that should not, and will not, keep us from extending a cordial welcome to them in their collected form. The names of their writers are a guarantee of the soundness of their views and the breadth of their information. Dr. Stoughton's masterly statement of the doctrine, and vigorous defence of the truth, is by itself worth the price of the book. In addition to it we have papers on the Resurrection of Christ, Buddhism, Comtism, and the Ethics of Evolution. These are topics which engage the attention of thoughtful minds, and they are discussed here in the right spirit.

Temperance Progress. Elliot Stock, 62, Paternoster-row. Under this title we have again brought before us, now in a solid volume, the facts and figures anent the great temperance work presented in course of the exhaustive discussion at the Croydon Congress last year. If by the process of reasoning one is to be brought to adopt principles the truth of which is pretty generally recognised, he certainly need go no further than this book, containing the weighty arguments put forward by so many speakers of note. But conviction as to the evil of strong drink will continue the ruling motive for the determination of action, and this conviction, backed by such facts and figures as we have here, will make the position of the total abstainer irresistibly strong.

The Children for Christ. By Rev. Andrew Murray. 3s. 6d. Nisbet & Co. This is a golden book, full of holy wisdom and impulse, which cannot fail to stir the hearts of parents. Its aim may be seen in the following extracts:—"In the threefold cord of home, school, and Church instruction, the home has the first place. If the Church would do her work successfully, she must direct to the training of parents her first and best efforts...Let the minister make it his special object to guide the parents of his congregation; he will stir and strengthen one of the mightiest agencies in the service of God's kingdom." We commend the book thus warmly in spite of the, to our view, unscriptural doctrine of baptism which permeates it, and which rests on a mistaken conception of the analogy between circumcision and baptism.

The Temple of Solomon. Notes of Addresses, by Thomas Newberry. 1s. 6d. Nisbet & Co. A highly edifying little work upon a subject which cannot fail to be of interest to the Bible student. The author's position is that the Bible is not only God's Holy Word, inspired in every jot and tittle, but that it is given us in a form vivid and concrete. Revelation, as it has come from God, is in the form of an illustrated Bible. Prominent, if not actually foremost, amongst those illustrations are "the Tabernacle in the Wilderness" and "the Temple in the Land." Mr. Newberry's notes furnish an admirable exposition of the pictorial teaching that Solomon's Temple was designed to convey. After what appeared in our pages on January 6, under the heading of "Help to Bible Study," it will not be needful now to do more than remind our readers that for a full statement of the author's views on this subject, and things akin, they cannot do better than consult the Large Print Edition of the "Englishman's Bible," which contains a supplement, giving full description of the Temple, its courts, &c., together with plates and maps.

The History of Israel. By Heinrich Ewald, late Professor of the University of Göttingen. Vol. viii. The Sub-Apostolic Age. Translated from the German by J. Frederick Smith. 18s. Longmans, Green & Co. A scholarly work in some respects, evidencing great research, yet not exempt from the conspicuous faults of the German style. The thought is not sufficiently evolved, and the logical faculty is in but slender exercise. In reading this work we have been forcibly reminded of Fichte's definition of faith—"the resolution of the will to admit the validity of knowledge." Dr. Ewald shines chiefly in hypothesis. The reader's faculty of faith is kept by our author in continual tension, so much so that Dr. Ewald's power to edify depends mainly on the resolution of the reader's will to admit the validity of the instruction given. Unfortunately our faith kept breaking down all along the line. It is vain expecting from any rationalistic critic of the Scriptural canon a tittle of rational evidence. Dr. Ewald's work is a gigantic proof that "the higher school of criticism" shines in a light of its own, and is hopelessly dominated by a vigorous fancy. We are free, however, to confess that this work bears sundry marks of excellence. Much that is said on the subject of Gnosis and of Allegorical Interpretation is instructive, while there are passages, such as that describing the cause and character of the martyrdom of Ignatius, of singular beauty. We mourn that Dr. Ewald should rank as a Rationalistic historian, and that sentiment and fancy should be such extensive contributors to the data he provides.

The Authoritative Inspiration of Holy Scripture. By Rev. C. H. Waller, M.A., with an introduction by the Bishop of Liverpool. 4s. 6d. Blackie & Son. This work is written by a clear and profound thinker, who has looked at the subject on every side, and who favours the inquirer with an original contribution towards the elucidation and settlement of this great subject, for which we must feel deeply thankful. Mr. Waller's object is to show that there is a deeper question than the inspiration of the sacred writers, and that is the inspiration of the Scriptures themselves. All makers of Scripture are prophets, by what they either produce or attest in the name of the Lord. Howbeit it is not every exercise of the prophetic function that takes rank as Scripture; the reason being that it needs the express signification of the will of God to give the prophetic product such a character.

We feel about this work that it is timely, fresh, and conclusive. Such a book was loudly called for; on no subject in the present day is there a greater multitude of pretentious and erring voices to be heard. Faith in verbal inspiration has been rapidly dying out, until now the great danger of the Church, as Mr. Bardsley remarks, "is not from the denial of revelation, but from the belief in the partial character of its inspiration." The Church of to-day has, in Mr. Waller, a redoubtable champion. He not only maintains verbal inspiration, but shows by a chain of rigorous reasoning that it is a conclusion from which there is no escape. We earnestly trust Mr. Waller's book, enriched as it is by an able introduction from the pen of Bishop Ryle, may speedily pass through many editions.

The Parousia; or, Our Lord's Second Coming, by J. Stuart Russell, M.A., New Edition, 7s. 6d. (T. Fisher Unwin), is by far the ablest work emanating from the Preterist School of Prophecy that has come under our notice. Mr. Russell does nobly for his client. We are only sorry that his excellent gifts have not been used in a better cause. The radical error in this work is that it all but makes the fall of Jerusalem answer prophetically to all things. To this, as to a focus, the lines of prophetic truth converge, and receive fulfilment. That the author works out his design with elaborate skill there is no gainsaying. Mr. Russell is himself a scholar, and his book has already received, he tells us, "a gratifying reception at the hands of many able and competent scholars," among whom may be named Archdeacon Farrar.

We cannot think, however, that the work will really weigh with those who are versed in the inspired Word. No doubt the mind of the Baptist was filled with presages of coming wrath impending over his nation; and no doubt, also, Christ, in terms of vivid description portrayed the overthrow of the Holy City. But the Parousia has a fulness of meaning that utterly defies restriction to such an issue—e.g., the main feature of the Second Coming with respect to Israel is not judgment, but deliverance: "And so all Israel shall be saved: as it is written, There shall come out of Sion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob" (Rom. xi. 26). Did this take place when the Romans levelled Jerusalem?

Then, again, the Parousia involves judgment upon the nations. "Before Him shall be gathered all nations" (Matt. xxv. 32). It would be utter trifling to regard the judgment of the nations as coincident with the fall of the Holy City. Besides, if in the Parable of the tares the field is the world, how can the Jews be the only tares that are bound up for the burning when the harvest is reaped at the end of the age? And this they must be, if our author's theory is correct, and the fall of Jerusalem fulfils prophecy. Furthermore, the Master tells us that "Jerusalem is to be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles are fulfilled." It seems obvious from this that the fall of Jerusalem is a starting-point, rather than a terminus, and that the real literal Parousia is at the end, and not at the beginning of those times.

But while we join issue with the author, we willingly admit the literary excellence of his work, and doubt not that in certain quarters his system of interpretation will be as acceptable as in others it will be distasteful, and even repugnant.

Life of the Earl of Iddesleigh. By Chas. Worthy. Hamilton, Adams & Co. A very full and complete sketch of the history of this lamented statesman, whose true worth, here well brought out, has been recognised by all parties.

The present issue of the New Biographical Series (1d.), published by the Religious Tract Society, gives the life, with portrait, of George Berder, its founder. As illustrating a period of great importance in our religious history it is most valuable.

Like Him, from Him, with Him. 1d. Simpson & Storey, Richmond. In this sermon Rev. J. J. Ellis clearly demonstrates the necessity of a holy heart for sacred service, a humble mind for the highest success, and a heavenly pattern for human happiness.

Approaching Fall of "Babylon the Great." By John Jack, M.A. Aberdeen: John Rae Smith. 1s. As an exposition of prophetic truth we fail to find any value in this treatise on Rev. xvi.—xix.; like many other publications of the same class, it gives the writer's own theory, but throws no light upon the actual teaching of the Word. The author's premises and conclusions alike rest upon human speculation rather than Divine assertion.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, FEB. 6.—PSALM I.

1.—Blessed is the man, &c.—It were better to render this, as does the Hebrew, "Happy is the man." Dr. Kay remarks that the last utterance of Moses (Deut. xxxiii. 29) was: "Happy art thou, O Israel." The Psalter links itself on to the law by this word, as also does the Gospel, for our Lord begins his teaching with "Happy are the poor in spirit" (Matt. v. 3, Greek).

2.—But his delight is in the law of the Lord.—Compare Joshua i. 8: "This book of the law shall not depart out of thy mouth; but thou shalt meditate therein day and night." From this and other passages (Deut. xvii. 18; Ps. cxix. 97) we gather that what is meant here by the law is Holy Scripture, which was divided into three divisions (Luke xxiv. 44) of the Law, the Prophets, and the Psalms; but was spoken of generally as the Law. Mark, that though the happiness of the righteous, described negatively, consists in not consorting with the ungodly, the contrast is not the companionship of the godly, but making the Word of God one's companion.

3.—He shall be like a tree planted by the rivers of water.—The word for "planted" is "properly used of a transplanted tree."—Kay. The figure is the more significant as it represents the transplantation of a soul from a state of nature to a state of grace. The "rivers of water" represent the Spirit of God. See John vii. 38, 39.

5.—The congregation of the righteous.—The parallel, "stand in the judgment," identifies these two classes. Those who "stand in the judgment" form "the congregation of the righteous." Compare Rom. v. 1, 2: "Being justified by faith…we have access into this grace wherein we stand."

MONDAY, FEB. 7.—PSALM II.

The second Psalm has a close connection with the first. Ancient Jewish tradition regarded them as one, and "said that the first Psalm begins and ends with 'O happy' (i. 1, ii. 12). The first treats of the written Word, and the second of the living Word. See a similar transition from one to the other in Heb. iv. 12, 13.

2.—Against his anointed.—In Greek "Christ." The two chief titles of the Saviour, "Christ" and "Son of God," are both found in this Psalm. See the initial fulfilment of this opposition to Christ (Acts iv. 25—28), and the final fulfilment at his coming (Rev. xix. 19).

3.—Let us break their bands asunder, and cast away their cords from us.—This contemplates a professed subjection to Christ, from which the nations or heathen (i.e. Gentiles) desire to break away. "So that they are insurgents shaking off their allegiance."—Kay. To break away from the restraints of Scripture is the spirit of the present age.

7.—Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten Thee.—We learn from Acts xiii. 33 that these words refer to the day of Christ's resurrection.

8.—Ask of Me, and I will give Thee the heathen for thy inheritance.—Not fulfilled as many suppose in mission work in this dispensation, but to be fulfilled hereafter in Christ's personal reign over the earth, as his own words (Rev. ii. 26, 27) declare, for He promises to him that overcometh that he shall share this "power over the nations" with Him—yet not in this dispensation, but in resurrection.

9.—Thou shalt break them.—The Hebrew for "break," by the alteration of one letter, becomes "rule," and this was evidently what the LXX. read, who so render it; if it be remembered that the rule is with a rod or sceptre of iron (meaning governmental power of the strongest kind), there is not much difference between the two.

12.—Kiss the Son.—I.e., as a sign of homage (see 1 Sam. x. 1).—Kay.—Blessed are all they that put their trust in Him.—The Anointed One, who is the subject of this Psalm, is both Prophet, Priest, and King. His anointing as Prophet draws forth the command "Hear Him," as Priest "Trust Him," and as King "Serve Him."

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 8.—PSALM III.

"The structure is regular, four divisions, each with two verses. Three are distinctly marked with Selah. From the fifth verse, and from the general tenour of the Psalm, it is inferred that it was composed for a morning song. The Hebrew word for Psalm in the inscription, and the frequent use of the musical term 'Selah' (meaning 'pause') may imply that it was used in the liturgical service of the Temple."—S.C. "All the leading features of the Psalm accord with the traditional inscription, 'When he fled before Absalom his son,' viz., the mockery of one who is rejected of God (2 Sam. xvi. 7); the danger by night (2 Sam. xvii. 1); the multitudes of the people (2 Sam. xv. 13, xvii. 11); and the high position of honour held by the Psalmist."—Delitzsch.

"The word Selah (verse 2) is found seventy-three times in the Psalms, and three times in Habakkuk. It is best derived from the verb 'Salah,' to rest, of frequent use in Hebrew. Primarily it is a music-mark. But, as the pause in music always comes in where the feeling requires a resting-place, it is of equal importance as regards the sense. It generally appears where a pause is quite suitable. Luther says, 'It tells us to pause and carefully reflect on the words going before.'"—Hengstenberg.

2.—Many there be which say of my soul, no help for him in God.—Amongst these "many" may have been accusing thoughts springing from a burdened conscience, for Delitzsch points out that from the time of David's sin in the matter of Uriah the Hittite broke forth a series of calamities, of which Absalom's rebellion was one.

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 9.—PSALM IV.

"The morning hymn is now followed by an evening hymn. It is evident that they go together from the mutual relation of iv. 6 with iii. 2, and iii. 5 with iv. 8."—Delitzsch.

1.—O God of my righteousness.—As the expression, "God of my salvation" (xviii. 46, xxv. 5, xxvii. 9) means the God from whom cometh my salvation, so this expression means the God from whom cometh my righteousness. It is an anticipation of the New Testament doctrine of the righteousness of God, i.e., the righteousness provided by God, which is "unto and upon all them that believe."

3.—Him that is godly.—The word in Hebrew literally means one who is loved or receives mercy, and so it implies that such a one is an object of God's mercy. The word "godly" is misleading, as tending to make one think more of what the man brings to God than of what he receives from Him.

4.—Stand in awe, and sin not.—R.V. gives in margin, "Be ye angry," which is better, and accords with the LXX. as quoted, Eph. iv. 26: "David's warning to his companions, not to let indignation against Absalom's unnatural rebellion hurry them into sinful anger."—Kay.

5.—Commune with your own heart and be still.—Compare John viii. 7—11. A sense of their own guilt would lead them to silence (Rom. iii. 19)

THURSDAY, FEB. 10.—PSALM V.

The words in the title of this Psalm, "Upon Nehiloth," are regarded by many as merely referring to the musical instrument designed to accompany it. Hengstenberg, following Luther and supported by the LXX. and Vulgate Versions, derives the word Nehiloth from the Hebrew verb "to possess or inherit," and takes the word to mean "the possessions, the lots." "Now the whole Psalm is taken up with a double destiny, that of the righteous and that of the wicked, to describe which no more suitable single word could be found than that there used, 'upon the lots.'"

3.—My voice shalt thou hear in the morning, O Lord.—Different views are advanced as to the structure of this Psalm. The most satisfactory is that of Hengstenberg, who says, "After an introduction of two verses in which the Psalmist entreats the Lord to hear his prayer, the prayer itself follows in two strophes of equal length, each consisting of five verses." In the Hebrew each of these divisions (3—7 and 8—12) begins with the word "Jehovah" (O Lord).

7.—But as for me, I will come into thy house in the multitude of thy mercy.—Though David states strongly God's hatred of wickedness and the wicked, he does not claim acceptance for himself on the ground of his not being a sinner, but rather because that as a sinner he had "found mercy."

8.—Lead me, O Lord, in thy righteousness, because of mine enemies.—For "enemies," R.V. gives in margin, "Them that lie in wait for me," which is more accurate. The ungodly are contemplated not so much as his personal enemies, as enemies of God and godliness.

9.—There is no faithfulness in their mouth.—The Hebrew is, "in his mouth," which Hengstenberg says, "is to be explained by the entire mass of enemies being represented by the Psalmist as one person, as a personified ungodliness." It is better still to see in this "one person" the head of the ungodly. Comp. John viii. 44: "Ye are of your father the devil." Compare also the striking rendering of the latter part of the verse, R.V. (margin): "When one speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own; for his father also is a liar."

FRIDAY, FEB. 11.—PSALM VI.

"This is the first of the penitential Psalms."—S. C. The expression in the title "Upon Sheminith" may have, as is supposed, a musical reference, but Hengstenberg points out that in accordance with the meaning of the word "Upon the eighth," the name of Jehovah occurs in it precisely eight times. It is interesting to observe how this eightfold calling upon God affords eight steps, as it were, by which the Psalmist rises from the lowest depths in which he begins, to the full confidence of faith with which he closes. These steps are: "rebuke me not," "have mercy upon me," "heal me," "how long?" "return, deliver my soul," "the Lord hath heard the voice of my weeping;" "the Lord hath heard my supplication;" "the Lord will receive my prayer."

5.—In the grave who shall give Thee thanks?—"The prayer for deliverance is grounded on the fact of one's not being able to praise God in death, as the praise of God was the Psalmist's most blessed employment, to be deprived of which would be to him the heaviest loss. Understood thus, the words afford a deep, and for us humiliating, insight into the heart of pious men under the old covenant. To consider the praise of God as the highest good, as the most essential thing in life, to love life only as furnishing the opportunity for that, is the highest proof of near fellowship with God."—Hengstenberg. If this be true of the pious in Israel, it is pre-eminently true of Christ, who may be seen in such Psalms as these as the substitutional sufferer for sin, though in Himself sinless.

SATURDAY, FEB. 12.—PSALM VII.

The word Shiggaion is mostly explained as a musical term; but Hengstenberg, who insists upon the enigmatical meaning of these obscure expressions in the titles of the Psalms, renders it "erring," i.e., a Psalm which has respect to the erring of the wicked. He also thinks that "Cush the Benjamite" is an enigmatical designation of Saul, who was morally dark as an Ethiopian (the meaning of Cush). Comp. Jer. xiii. 23; Amos ix. 7. Dr. Kay, however, thinks that Shimei is intended, who in 2 Sam. xvi. 7, is called "this Benjamite," and quotes, as confirming this, the false charge of Shimei (2 Sam. xvi.): "The Lord hath returned upon thee all the blood of the house of Saul," which charge he thinks David indignantly denies in 3—5.

7.—For their sakes, therefore, return thou on high.—Better in R.V. "Over them return thou on high." "God is represented as pronouncing this sentence from his throne over the assembly, and then returning on high. Every triumph of right is regarded by David as the result of a personal intervention of the righteous Judge."—S. C.

11.—God is angry with the wicked every day.—The words "with the wicked" are not in the Hebrew. The objects of God's righteous anger probably intended are the impenitent, as the next verse goes on: "If he turn not, He will whet his sword." Comp. Rom. ii. 5.

15.—He made a pit and digged it, and is fallen into the ditch which he made.—Never had this a more striking fulfilment than when Satan "put into the heart of Judas to betray" Jesus, for this pit so dug was the ditch (or destruction) into which Satan himself fell. See Heb. ii. 14, 15.

Among the Churches.

* We shall be happy to receive from our readers brief items of news for this page, respecting Christian work carried on, or progress achieved, in connection with any evangelical church.*

EPISCOPAL.

Rev. W. M. Statham has resigned the pastorate of Harecourt Congregational Chapel, in order to enter the ministry of the Church of England.

It has been resolved to establish an Extension Society in connection with the Established Church for Leeds. It is intended to raise £5000 a year, mainly to provide mission churches, and for the augmentation of poor livings.

The invasion of churches by bands of socialists who indulge in audible criticism, a movement initiated at Battersea, seems to be spreading. In several cases the prayer for the Queen has been hissed, and also the eighth commandment.

BAPTIST.

The Baptist Missionary Society has received an anonymous donation of £1000.

One hundred poor families are supplied with soup every Wednesday at the Baptist Church, Wood Green, N.

Breakfasts of bread and milk are given every morning to about two hundred children at Gipsy-road Baptist Chapel.

A Bible-class, commenced by Mr. Grose fourteen years ago, in connection with the Baptist Church, London-road, Stoke-on-Trent, has increased since that time from nine to about eighty members, consisting of young and old, married and single, from sixteen to seventy-five years of age.

During the two years' pastorate of Rev. P. F. Mulholland, at the Baptist Church, Dalkeith, N.B., there has been an increase in the membership of 50 per cent. Sabbath-school work has been productive of good results, and enlarged liberality has been shown towards Home and Foreign Missions.

CONGREGATIONAL.

New Sunday-schools are to be erected in connection with the Congregational Church at Marden, at a cost of about £500.

During the five years' pastorate of Rev. E. J. Dukes, at Bridgwater Congregational Church, 230 new members have joined, forty-four during the past year.

The congregation of the Congregational Church at Catford (Rev. A. F. Muir, minister), has more than doubled its numbers during the last nine months.

An excellent dinner of soup and pudding is provided every Wednesday at London-road Congregational Church, Derby, for between 100 and 200 young children.

The contributions from Fishergate Congregational Church, Preston, towards Home and Foreign Missions, are about four times what they were seven or eight years ago.

An addition of 105 has been made to the membership of Tynedale Congregational Church, Gloucester, under the pastorate of Rev. W. Tucker, during the last two years.

The ministry of Rev. Charles Leach (Congregational), at Queen's Park, Harrow-road, has been so successful that a church consisting of two hundred members, has been formed.

The Sunday-school of Finsbury-park Congregational Church (Rev. Eynon Davies) has largely increased during the last six months, and now numbers 470 scholars, with about forty teachers and officers.

A party of Congregational ministers, including Revs. Samuel Pearson (Liverpool), W. Spensley (Abney Chapel, Stoke Newington), and H. S. Toms (Enfield), started last week for a tour in Egypt, Palestine, and the East.

The Congregational Church at Dundee has had an accession of sixteen members during the past year, and there is an attendance of from seventy to 100 at Rev. J. Roebuck's Bible-class, while other organisations are in a prosperous condition.

Sale Congregational Church has increased its membership during the past year by twenty-five. In addition to the ordinary income, £292 has been raised for new class-rooms, and the contributions to Home and Foreign Missions amounted to £163.

There is a serious decrease in the attendance at some of the Congregational churches in North and East London. The minister of one of the largest churches at the East-end is said to have had to pay a considerable part of the year's expenses out of his own pocket; and one North London Church, formerly large and influential, although in the midst of a dense population, is nearly empty.

Steady progress and increase in every department of Christian work are evident in the reports presented to the annual meeting at Lewisham High-road Congregational Church; 120 members have been added during 1886, amongst these being a considerable number of young men; and Sunday-schools, Bible-classes, and the mission and philanthropic work of the church show considerable vitality.

A series of special meetings for prayer have been held at Argyle Chapel, Bath. The meetings were one of the results of the recent Hastings Conference. This formed the subject of a discourse by the pastor, Rev. T. Stephens, which was greatly blessed. The church and congregation became anxious for a deeper spiritual life and a baptism of the Spirit. "We were moved," says a correspondent, "to have these meetings. We had grand times.' The earnestness deepened evening after

A substantial tea was recently given to 320 poor children by the Young Men's Association of the Oxford-street Congregational Church, Leicester.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Seventeen cottage meetings are conducted by members of the Hexham Presbyterian congregation.

The Dorcas Society, of Regent-square, London, Presbyterian Church, has celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary.

A large number of Highlanders attended a Gaelic service in Crown-court Church on the third Sunday in January. These services are to be held quarterly.

Rev. A. N. Mackray's ten minute sermonettes to children at the Presbyterian Church, Croydon, are much appreciated. A Thursday morning lecture attracts many outside the congregation.

Dr. Horatius Bonar, with the consent of his congregation at the Grange, Edinburgh, is about to retire from active service, so that the colleague to be appointed will require to undertake the full charge.

The Session of Camden-road Presbyterian congregation have decided to close a mission station which was being worked by about a dozen of their members, and by whom five hundred families were visited weekly.

The deficit of £3000 in the Foreign Mission Fund of the English Presbyterian Synod has been changed into a balance of £250, through the liberal response to the appeal made, stimulated by a contingent offer of £500 on the part of Mr. J. T. Morton.

Various proposals for the division of the London Presbytery are being considered by the committee appointed on the motion of Dr. Donald Fraser. One is to cut off a number of county congregations from the Metropolitan court, and to form a South Coast Presbytery, to meet at Brighton.

METHODIST.

A mission-room has been opened by Wesleyans at Chelston, near Torquay.

Thirty new members have lately been received into Bethesda Church (Methodist New Connexion), Hanley.

New Sunday schools for 350 scholars have just been opened in connection with Pike's-hill Wesleyan Chapel, Falmouth.

A successful conference of all the workers and teachers in Burslem Circuit (Methodist New Connexion) took place at Tunstall recently.

Mission services for the people have been organised at Zion Chapel (Methodist New Connexion), Boston, by the pastor, Rev. G. H. Elvidge.

An important alteration in the management of Wesleyan day-schools is in contemplation, more systematic Bible instruction being considered desirable.

At the quarterly meeting of the Isle of Man Mission (Methodist New Connexion) an increase of thirty full members and eight probationers was reported.

Rev. P. Cook has just closed a delightful mission among Wesleyans, at Willesden. The prejudice at first entertained by some was overcome, the congregations increased, and much blessing was received.

The Second London Circuit of the Methodist New Connexion is in a prosperous condition. There is a promising spiritual work in the Sunday-school, which has a complete staff of converted scholars as teachers.

In ten years, since mission work was commenced by the Primitive Methodists in Walthamstow, five churches have been formed, with five Sunday-schools and five Bands of Hope. In these schools there are over five hundred children.

At the quarterly meeting of the Leeds First Circuit (Methodist New Connexion) a net increase of twenty-one members, with one hundred on trial, was reported. At the Burslem Quarterly Meeting an increase of fourteen members was reported.

A Methodist Convention was held recently in Birmingham, and will be followed by similar meetings in other districts. The claims of the proposed London Mission were specially pleaded by Revs. Mark Guy Pearse, Hugh Price Hughes, and others.

At the suggestion of the chairman of the district (Rev. J. S. Pawlyn), the ministers of the two Plymouth and Devonport Wesleyan circuits invited the members to join them in a three days' Convention. A series of very blessed meetings have been the result.

The Street Mission Band at Greenwich have opened a new mission hall. At a meeting for the deepening of the spiritual life, Rev. W. D. Sarjeant bade the workers think no more of what they were going to do for Christ, but of what He was about to do through them.

There are evident tokens of an increase of the mission spirit in many circuits of the United Methodist Free Church. Rev. J. F. Lawis has been lecturing at Newcastle and Darlington in aid of the Galla Mission, and Rev. G. Thompson is also lecturing in the Hexham Circuit on a "World without the Bible and with it."

There has been earnest mission work at the Westminster Wesleyan Training College for some time past. The students have adopted systematic methods of visitation on Sundays, holding a short service in the afternoon, and inviting the people to attend the service in the evening. In this way some hearts have been reached.

How to stimulate interest in the missionary cause amongst young people was well illustrated recently at a crowded meeting in the Wesleyan Chapel, High-street, Plaistow. The very small attendance last year directed thought to the subject, with the result that a friend offered to give six medals to the collectors who brought in the largest amounts. A quarterly meeting was also instituted and at the annual meeting just held £45 was handed in by seventy collectors. Three youths gave addresses. The whole management is in the hands of [illegible] judging by the results [illegible] have

MISCELLANEOUS.

Mr. P. Neal, of Ratby, has been conducting a series of evangelistic services in the chapel of Gilmorton.

A ten days' mission, conducted by Gipsy Smith, of Hanley, at Brunswick Chapel, St. John's-road, has been greatly blessed.

The Society of Friends have erected new school premises at Dewsbury at a cost of £1000, and extensive new buildings at Manchester costing £3000.

At Paignton, Devon, the Baptist, Congregational, Wesleyan, and Bible Christian denominations have united in a special mission to the young.

A recent visit to the American Friends' Mission in Constantinople showed that there is a school with fifty children, and much active Christian work is on hand.

A service for young people, held after the regular evening service, by Rev. R. D. Cooper, pastor of the "Old Meeting," St. Neots, is much appreciated, the attendance on a recent Sunday numbering about four hundred.

An eight days' mission at Shaw (Oldham) has been greatly blessed. Many unconverted workmates were brought to the services by the members; one night a husband and wife, and the next the man's old father, came forward to the rail, and there were several other cases of conversion. Altogether, sixty names were taken, and the church was roused.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

An American militia regiment, composed exclusive of temperance men, is being organised.

The temperance people in the State of Nebraska hope to carry 100 towns for Prohibition this year.

In India, liquor-shops are being multiplied as rapidly as they can be made to pay, anxiety for revenue is so great.

From 140 to 150 districts, in Wales, persons of position have sent assurances that the Sunday Closing Act is a success.

The coffee-tavern movement in the States has been publicly commended by a large number of prominent Americans.

The Edinburgh University Total Abstinence Society are putting forth vigorous efforts to increase their membership.

There are 3000 British churches in which unfermented wine is used at the Lord's Supper, Mr. Spurgeon's amongst the number.

About four hundred Rural Communes of the Province of St. Petersburg have decided to prohibit the sale of spirits within their jurisdiction.

The Morning Advertiser lately described many of the so-called Working Men's Clubs as nothing better than drinking and gambling "hells."

Dr. Victor Horsley says that on Saturday nights 90 per cent. of the cases of injury admitted into the casualty wards of general hospitals arise through drink.

An organisation of law and order leagues is being formed in the United States for the purpose of prosecuting druggists and others who may violate the liquor laws.

A new hall has been opened in connection with Cowcadden's Free Church Mission, Glasgow. Six thousand persons have become abstainers, and all the officers and workers are teetotallers.

In America it is customary to keep open-house on New Year's day. At Washington, "the absence of liquors from the sideboards in many of the most fashionable houses" was conspicuous.

In a recent article, The Echo compared the poverty of the Jew and Gentile in the East-end of London, to the advantage of the Jew, one reason for the difference being Jewish abstemiousness.

Under the auspices of the United Kingdom Alliance, a United Kingdom Convention in furtherance of early legislation, on the lines of Local Option, is to be held, February 15 and 16, at Exeter Hall.

At a meeting of railway employés at Paddington, recently, Dr. Richardson dwelt on the injurious effect of drink on sight, hearing, and the voice, and urged, railway-men, especially, to avoid it.

"Temperance as Taught in the Revised Bible" is a little book by Rev. J. Compston. It deals with about two hundred passages of Scripture, about half being given in both versions, in parallel columns.

OLD SOUTHGATE.—A church, in connection with the Metropolitan Country Mission, was formed in this place on Wednesday, last week. Two and a half years ago, when Mr. D. Wickerson, of Haverstock-hill, commenced his ministry here, the little congregation met in a small room behind a shop, but since then an iron room has been erected, and twice enlarged, in which now between one and two hundred persons assemble week after week to listen to the Word of Life. A Sunday-school is also carried on, and week-night services are held. Many persons have also been baptized. On Wednesday Mr. Dunn, from Mr. C. H. Spurgeon's Tabernacle, gave to each the right hand of fellowship, accompanying the act with a few well-chosen words. An address was given by Mr. Russell, the minister of the Baptist Chapel at Edmonton, after which a communion service was held, conducted by Mr. A. Goldstone, president of the M.S.C.M., many [illegible] from other churches joining in this.

Forthcoming Meetings.

THE EVANGELISATION SOCIETY will send evangelists to any part of England, Scotland, and Wales on due notice. Hon. Sec., 21, Surrey-street, Strand, W.C.

THE IRISH EVANGELISATION SOCIETY will send evangelists to any part of Ireland on due notice. Apply to Mr. J. Barton, Hon. Sec., Dundalk, Ireland.

THE RISE AND PROGRESS OF THE
HERESY OF REV. H. J. PRINCE.

BY ARTHUR AUGUSTUS REES,

Brother-in-law to Rev. H. J. Prince, and late Minister of Bethesda Free Chapel, Sunderland.

"As soon as the judgment and the Word of God were given up, a wide door was opened for the entrance of the devil; nor did that wicked spirit lose the opportunity thus presented to him, but at once walked in, took charge, and assumed the character of the Holy Ghost. Having thus obtained the complete control of Mr. Prince, he led him on step by step, in mockery of the Blessed Spirit, to do and say the most outrageous things, in the awful name of God; and left him without any means of detecting the delusion, by having first persuaded him to abandon the only test by which he could discover it.

"Thus fell that dear child of God, HENRY JAMES PRINCE; and thus he will remain fallen till Jesus signally interposes to deliver him."—Extract.

They are whistled by the plough-boy, and hummed by the workman at his home or in his shop, in countries which the author has never visited. "I have come to think of Boll, since visiting it, as in many ways one of the most interesting places in Europe—interesting not only for its natural loveliness, its past history, its warm fellowship, and cherished memories, but for its noble testimony to Christian faith, and for the problems in the deepest things of Life and Truth, which it leaves for after years to solve; and certainly no holiday could be better spent than with the little Colony of God's people, who are always to be found gathered round the old Pastor, whose life-work all these years has been this beautiful and mysterious ministry of Prayer.

"The good Pastor himself, alas! since these words were first transcribed from my note-book, has been taken to his rest. He was a remarkable man, and leaves a work behind him too remarkable to cease. And though the visitor now will miss the characteristic figure, he will find there the same spirit and faith."

SECOND EDITION.

THE GOSPEL MALE CHORUS BOOK.

A COLLECTION OF

New Part Songs, Choruses, and Anthems,

Written and Arranged expressly for Male Voices

BY JAMES McGRANAHAN.

Tinted Covers, 1s. 6d.; Cloth Limp, 2s.; Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

To be had in either Tonic Sol-fa or Old Notation.

The GOSPEL MALE CHOIR was, during the last five months of the London Mission, a special feature of the meetings of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. There are, doubtless, many more who would wish to dedicate their voices to the service of the Master; and with the present volume (which is arranged for 1st and 2nd Tenor and 1st and 2nd Bass) in their hands, and the hearty co-operation of a few brethren like-minded, this wish can be easily gratified.

Says Mr. McGranahan:—"Organize a quartet, a double quartet, or better still, a chorus of male voices; and prove the power for good in the harmony of male voices when consecrated to the glory and service of our divine Master."

"In both Notations. Is specially prepared for Male Voices only. We can testify from personal hearing that these choruses are well harmonized and excellently adapted for the rich effect of men's concerted voices."

Literary World.

"An excellent combination of some of our best Christian hymns; with suitable music, and vocal and instrumental arrangements. Seems to us a surpassingly good collection of Hymns and Tunes, in beautiful type and binding."—Irish Baptist Magazine.

"THE GOSPEL MALE CHORUS BOOK indicates a new departure; and one which has proved largely successful. The music in this book is arranged for Male Voices alone. It is too often supposed that there can be no good singing without female voices. This is a mistake. It is possible to have very effective singing with a choir composed only of Male Voices."

New Zealand Christian Record.

"We may say first of the songs—they are full of the Gospel; and of the musical compositions—they are many of them very taking. The idea of A Male Choir is to some extent a novelty, and will commend itself to many circles."—Baptist Messenger.

"We are sure the publishers are rendering a good service to the cause of Christ by the issue, in so remarkably cheap a form, of this book."—King's Highway.

"Mr. SANKEY has taught all the churches how much may be done for Christ by the consecration of the voice to His service. Strange that we should have been so long in laying this to heart! THE MALE CHORUS BOOK is intended for Male Voices. Why should not Christian young men offer themselves willingly for this service? Why should there not be an earnest attempt in all our churches to make the public services more attractive by the singing of these and similar Pieces?"

Irish Congregational Magazine.

"Mr. McGRANAHAN believes largely in the power for good in the harmony of Male Voices when consecrated to the service of our Lord and Master; and he has issued this volume of bright and living sacred song, as a means alike of illustrating and giving effect to this impression. Far more, we are sure, could be done in this way than has yet been done: Christian men have not recognized, in anything like due measure, the noble gift of song which God has bestowed upon them for His service. We wish that this book may have good success."

British Messenger.

"We doubt not that a cordial welcome will be given to the volume of Christian song issued by Messrs. Morgan & Scott, and entitled, 'THE GOSPEL MALE CHORUS BOOK.'"—The Rock.

"The Hymns are many of them beautiful in the words, as well as in the music."—Friends' Quarterly Examiner.

LONDON: MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, PATERNOSTER BUILDINGS; and may be ordered of any Bookseller.

All the Way Home the Good Word will Lead You.
As we Gather at the Harvest Home.
Beloved, now are we the Sons of God.
Come, O my Soul, with Singing!
Come to the Life-Giving Fountain!
Come unto Me!
Following Jesus.
Hearts are Sad and Weary.
I am the Way.
I could not do without Him.
I have Nothing to do with To-morrow.
I Hear a Voice at Dawn of Day.
If we Grow Weary in the Way.
In Thee I trust; on Thee I rest.
Let the Dear Saviour come in!
Let us Work for Jesus.
Like Stars that Fade Away.
Like the Bird with Weary Wing.
Like Wandering Sheep, We Roamed Afar.
Oh that I had Wings!
On Joyful Wings our Spirits Rise.
Only just to-day, dear Pilgrim.
Oppressed with Noonday's Scorching Heat.
Our Fatherland.
Our Hearts are Filled with Joy To-day.
Our Hearts are Thrilled with Joy to-day.
Praise, oh Praise Jehovah!
Rest in Heaven.
Sons of God, Beloved in Jesus.
The Saviour is Waiting at each Sinner's Heart.
The Shadow of the Cross.
Thou art Home at Last!
Waiting to be Gracious.
We have Come in all our Sadness.
We've Sighted the Golden Gate.
When Life's Springtime has Faded
When we get Home.
Why will You do Without Him?

"The various MALE CHOIRS and others who have adopted the GOSPEL MALE CHORUS BOOK will no doubt be glad to welcome these Additional Pieces, many of which are entirely new.

WITH WHICH IS INCORPORATED "THE REVIVAL."

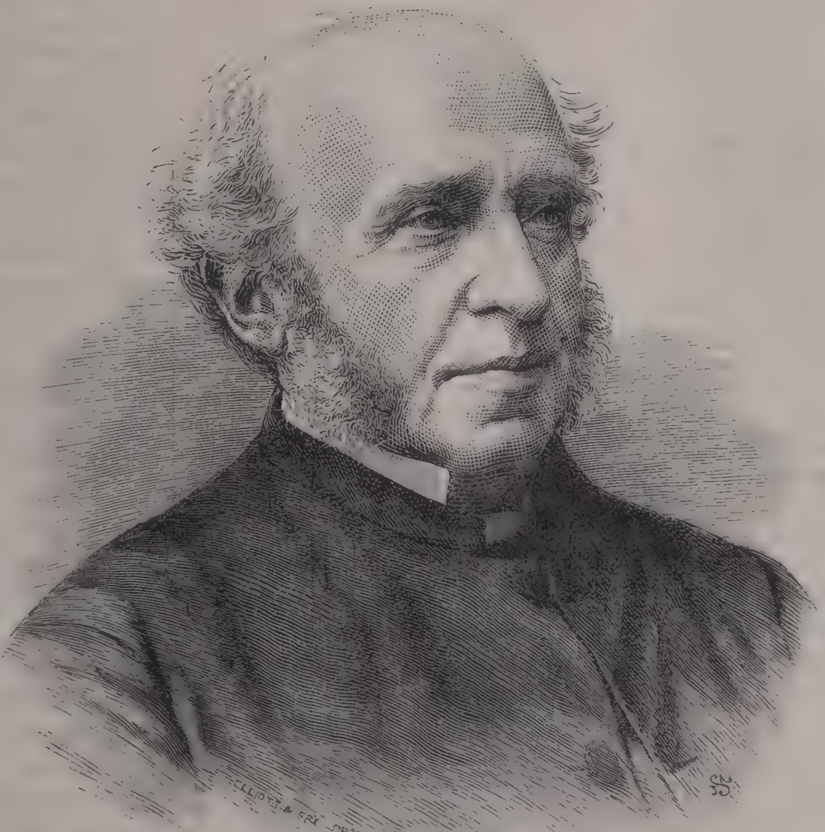
A Weekly Record of Christian Life, Christian Testimony, Christian Work, and of Missionary Enterprise.

No. 889.] LONDON: MORGAN & SCOTT. 12 PATERNOSTER BUILDINGS, E.C. THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 1887. REGISTERED AT THE G.P.O. AS A NEWSPAPER. [ONE PENNY, POST FREE, 1½d.

REV. JOHN FORDYCE, LATE OF SIMLA.

THERE are few Christian men, if indeed there be any, called to occupy important and influential spheres of usefulness in connection with the Kingdom of God who may not discover in their own experience special illustration of the great promise which compasses every believer's life: "I will bring the blind by a way that they knew not; I will lead them in paths that they have not known: I will make darkness light before them, and crooked things straight." A specialty of preparation, a development of fitness in the instrument, invariably precedes the unfolding of new responsibilities, although the purpose of the preliminary discipline may not be realised by its subject until the widening sphere of obligation and effort makes itself apparent, and helps to interpret the past.

Mr. Fordyce has long been honourably known for efficient service in various departments of Christian usefulness, each one of which appears to have been—though lying beyond the scope of his own immediate purpose—a divinely adapted preparation for that which was to follow. He is most widely known from his efforts, more than thirty years ago, for female education in India, and specially in connection with the origin of the Zenana Mission; and from his extensive tours in India and Burmah among our scattered fellow-countrymen, since 1870, as Commissioner of the "Anglo-Indian Evangelisation Society."



(From Photograph by Messrs. Elliott & Fry.)

JOHN FORDYCE was born at Forgue, Aberdeenshire, in 1819. A long illness, in his twelfth year, was, under God, the means of awakening him to serious and earnest inquiry concerning Divine things, which, after a season of deep conviction, happily issued in his conversion to Christ. In these earlier experiences of his spiritual life he was greatly indebted to the example an elder in the parish church, and to his then pastor, who still survives—Rev. Dr. Ramsay Davidson, now of Edinburgh.

When a young man he went to Edinburgh to study, and in 1840 accepted an educational appointment at Kelso, where he continued for six years, intimately associated with Dr. Horatius Bonar, having been elected to the eldership in his twenty-second year. During the whole of these years the earnest and penetrating ministry of Dr. Bonar was distinguished by a deep religious awakening, and a revival of spiritual life throughout the district. In the discharge of his duties as an elder Mr. Fordyce took an active part in evangelistic work, which developed a facility of effective and impressive public utterance, forming an unconscious preparation for the work o his future life.

After the disruption of the Church of Scotland, in 1843, there were more Free Church congregations than ministers in the district. With the authority of the Presbytery Mr. Fordyce often generously supplied vacant pulpits, till 1846, when it became obvious that his gifts were such as would find a more appropriate sphere in the work of the Christian ministry than in that of education. He was accordingly induced to relinquish his position at Kelso, and to proceed to special study at the University, and afterwards at New College, Edinburgh. There he continued for six years, prosecuting his studies, and also doing missionary work in the prison, and elsewhere, which awakened in him an intense interest in Home Missions.

Early in the year 1852 the claims of the foreign field led to a change of purpose. The great missionary, Dr. Duff, who had done so much for the sons of India, felt that the time had come for awakening and stimulating effort on behalf of its benighted daughters. Recognising in Mr. Fordyce the qualifications essential for this difficult and important work, Dr. Duff urged upon him the duty of devoting himself to it. The representations and persuasive urgency of Dr. Duff met with a sympathetic response, and, after anxious deliberation, Mr. Fordyce accepted the call. In the same year he was married to Miss Wortley Montague Stewart, who entered into the spirit of his mission with entire sympathy and devotion, and has ever since rendered invaluable services in connection with this and other objects of Christian effort, both at home and in India.

The three years immediately following Mr. Fordyce's arrival, early in 1853, in Calcutta, were years of incessant activity and manifold labours, and form an important and well-defined epoch in the progress of Indian missions. A series of publications, designated "Fly Leaves," were prepared by Mr. Fordyce, and widely circulated throughout India. "They contained," says Mrs. Weitbrecht, "short, strong, and striking appeals to Hindu husbands and fathers, and produced an impression which deepened year by year, so that at first one by one, and afterwards in increasing ratio, Zenana doors flew open, till at this moment the question is not 'How shall we get in?' but 'How shall we supply labourers for the much work ready to be done?'" As indicated in the above extract, the enterprise now so well known as "The Zenana Mission," dates from these years, having been arranged towards the close of 1854, and actually begun in February, 1855. Though previously proposed and attempted, it was left to Mr. and Mrs. Fordyce to commence it as an organised system. The following extract from the "Life of Dr. Duff," by Dr. George Smith, who was then in Calcutta, indicates the origin of the movement:—

> When still a youthful colleague of Dr. Duff, in 1840, Dr. Thomas Smith* had published an article urging an attempt to send Christian ladies into the Zenanas. In 1854 the attempt succeeded. Rev. John Fordyce, whom, with his wife, Dr. Duff had with true foresight sent out to the Bengali Orphanage, grasped the opportunity. Aided by Dr. T. Smith, he established the Zenana Mission, which the genius of Lacroix's daughter, Mrs. Mullens, so developed, and Government has so encouraged, that it has become the most effectual means for educating the women of India. Mr. Fordyce secured the promise of three Hindoo gentlemen to open their houses to, and to pay for the instructions of his ablest teacher, a European governess who knew Bengali perfectly. All that was wanted was a modest carriage, a vernacular primer, and the Bengali Bible. In the quarter of a century since that day, Zenana instruction has become a part of the work of almost every Mission station.

To the great regret of many, and not less to their own, the state of Mrs. Fordyce's health rendered necessary their return to Britain early in 1856. Two years afterwards Mr. Fordyce was called to the pastorate of the Free Church of Duns, Berwickshire, which he accepted. During his ministry there, of more than eight years, there was a remarkable time of spiritual awakening in the town, throughout the Merse, and in the Lammermoors. At Duns Mr. Fordyce had the co-operation of Dr. Horatius Bonar, Dr. W. P. Mackay (then a student), Duncan Matheson (of Huntly), and many others. In 1866, Mr. Fordyce accepted a call to assume the pastorate of the new Presbyterian Church at Cardiff.

In 1870, Dr. Duff and others proposed to Mr. Fordyce to return to the land of his early adoption, as minister of the Union Church at Simla, and Commissioner of a Society for our countrymen in India, that now bears the name of the "Anglo-Indian Evangelisation Society." It would be needless to speak here of the anxiety and sacrifice involved in the acceptance of such a responsibility. By the attached members and office-bearers of his church, his co-presbyters and others, he was urged to remain, but his duty was made clear, and he accepted the call to India.

For fourteen seasons Mr. Fordyce ministered to the Union Church at Simla, and during his ministry Episcopalians, Methodists, Baptists, Congregationalists, Presbyterians, and members of the Lutheran and French Reformed Churches worshipped in harmony. In each cold season he made extensive tours in the plains, preaching to Europeans, and occasionally to English-speaking Natives, and organising evangelistic work among our own countrymen in outlying districts.

In 1874 Mr. Fordyce was in Britain at the call of the Directors, and during that year the funds were increased fourfold, and agents enlisted for a work in which Mr. Fordyce had for three years, when alone, been pleading in vain for seven evangelists to take up large districts.

"The Winter Mission" was established in June, 1874, at an influential meeting convened by the late Lord Lawrence, at his residence, Queen's Gate. It had his sympathy and cordial support. In its organisation and development Mr. Fordyce took a prominent part. It formed a branch of the Anglo-Indian Society's work for stimulating Christian life and action at the great centres of European population in India, and also for preaching the Gospel to English-speaking Natives. Dr. A. N. Somerville, the present Moderator of the Free Church of Scotland, was invited by the Directors to go to India during the cold season; and, apparently quite unconscious of advancing age, he went, and God blessed his labours in many parts of India, as He has done in many lands since. Subsequently the Rev. C. Melville Pym, Rector of Cherry-Burton, Yorkshire, went out under the auspices of the Winter Mission, doing the work of an evangelist almost entirely in connection with the Church of England.

The Winter Mission has been in abeyance for some years, but it will be revived when sufficient means are secured.

Early in 1875 Mr. Fordyce returned to India, resuming winter tours in the plains, and summer service at Simla. He travelled in the Punjab, Upper Assam, Cachar, Sylhet, Central and Western India, Coorg, the Wynaad, &c., and visited Burmah a second time. Instead of working alone, as in previous years, he had under his superintendence in the next decade, more than thirty ministers and lay evangelists connected with seven denominations, engaged in the work for periods varying from a few months to nine years. The results cannot be recorded here, of times of blessing in various parts of India, of individual conversions, and of meetings sustained by residents, as one of the fruits of the visits of evangelists, infrequent as they were. A wide and difficult field for self-denying service has presented itself through the operations of this Society for the evangelistic zeal of

The objects of its immediate efforts may be said to be the children of all the churches. On this ground alone, even were there none other, they have a special claim upon our sympathy and help. But this is not the only ground, for it is of the utmost importance, in the interests of missions to the heathen, that European residents should be Christians, not in name only, but in reality.

Two years ago Mr. Fordyce returned to this country from India, and is now General Secretary and Treasurer of the Society he did so much to establish; and to whose prosperity and usefulness as a Christian agency for "Our Countrymen in India," so many of the best years of his life have been devoted.

CIVIL SERVICE PRAYER UNION.

The report presented at the fourteenth annual meeting of this Union at Exeter Hall, on Monday evening last week, gives many encouraging evidences of progress, not only in numbers, but in the higher object of all such associations, the growth of spiritual life. While during the past year the membership has grown from 744 to 1031, the field of operations covered has been greatly extended.

Sir WILLIAM WILLIS referred with gratification to the fact that the Union has branches in many important towns in this country, and that it has penetrated also to India and South Africa. And Mr. S. A. BLACKWOOD, who presided, having spoken of the great advance made in India, where, in 1885, the membership rose from 12 to 113, the Union being now established in widely distant parts of that vast country, pointed also to the successful efforts made in connection with the London City Mission, two missionaries being employed to labour amongst the tramcar men in the South of London, as well as four others amongst the men and boys in Government offices in different parts of London. Viewing the potentialities and possibilities of the Union, how small was their number in comparison with the hundreds of thousands (he might almost say) of civil servants, there being in the Post-office alone nearly one hundred thousand. He was thankful for the truly spiritual tone which characterised the Union, as well as all its meetings, and knowing the power of prayer and of Christian example and influence, he urged all to increased faithfulness and effort to extend the benefits of the Union, which could not fail to be of great blessing and help, more especially to the young.

Mr. JOHNSON BOURNE, in the course of an earnest address, said that the review of the past should lead to praise and renewed consecration to God. Mr. ORSMAN, by the illustration of Moses' rod made into an instrument of power, showed how much might be accomplished by that which civil servants had always in their hand—a pen. By means of this, consecrated men could do much to overturn evil and to establish the truth.

PORTSMOUTH AND GOSFORT SEAMEN'S MISSION.—The sixth report of the French Evangelistic Mission work on board the mission schooner Mystery, in connection with the well-known work of Mr. Henry Cook, will cheer the hearts of those who are seeking the spread of the Gospel among the French. At Havre, the saloon was every night packed with those who came to listen to the, to them, unknown word of God, and hundreds more could not be accommodated, while the weather-beaten fishermen were genial and kind, and gratefully received Gospels and other books. The ship has also visited Quimper, and several other places, at all of which the people listened with gladness, though there was occasional difficulty through priestly opposition. A new vessel, the Herald of Mercy, will soon be launched, and both will be used in carrying on this most promising work. Mr. Cook's address si

CONVERSION OF CHILDREN.

The writer was lately asked to address a body of Sunday-school teachers in one of our fashionable suburbs. A word from the superintendent revealed much that was floating in his mind—a deep sense of the unreal character of much of their work. In earlier days we had laboured together, and had seen soul-winning results in that work; but since that time our experience had been on different lines. With a magnificent body of teachers, and a fine field for their labours, he felt that there were no adequate spiritual results. My own experience had been happily different, and with the hope that I might give them a word in season, he had asked me to address them.

I was struck with the orderly way in which they conducted the affairs of their school, and as they went through the preliminary business of the meeting I followed it very closely to see if I could discover any clue to their want of success. As a well-organised work for the Church, it was all that could be desired; but I became painfully aware that "conversion," instead of being their first thought and care, had scarcely a place in their minds. Theoretically they might have, but practically they had no belief in the conversion of children.

Seeking for Divine guidance, I felt it would be little use speaking upon methods in the first instance, but was led simply to state my own experience, personally and relatively, in the salvation of souls. The impression produced by the intense interest with which they listened to my feeble words will not soon be effaced from my memory. It was evidently a new experience, and almost like a new revelation, as I told them simply and earnestly of the way in which I had seen hundreds led to the feet of Jesus in the course of years. I then put the question—Why was it that with the same old story of Divine love, the same salvation to offer, and the same mighty Spirit to work and to will of his own good pleasure, similar signs had not followed in their own work?

The deepest interest was excited as they felt the force of this question, and I found myself until midnight engaged in answering questions of the last importance. Neither time or space will permit me to tell all I should like, but the remarks of one or two of the teachers will show much of its spirit. One said, "I feel I am all wrong. My boys, educated and intelligent as they are, seem to know as much as I can tell them, and often corner me; but by God's help I will begin afresh on other lines." Another said, "We have read in books of such experiences, but never dreamed they might be our own." And again another, "We can see and feel from what you have told us, that there is a wonderful reality in such work, but I am afraid we have neither the simple faith in God's word, or in the power of prayer, to see such results."

I can only ask your readers to pray most earnestly that this band of workers may know what it is to be endued with power from on high. I ask in all faithfulness, "How is it that so many workers in the vineyard get hold of the idea that they are sowing seed only to spring up in after years, but that they are not justified in looking for present results in the present salvation of their charge? What an awful delusion of the devil! A happier experience has taught me that if you want children or adults to grow up strong, stalwart, joyous Christians, they must first progress in divine things without it. First bring them to Jesus, and then his abundant life can flow through them. As well try to water and train in growth a dry stick without root, as attempt to water and train souls dead in trespasses and sin. A long experience has taught me that the Gospel of Jesus Christ, presented in faith and love, and pressed home for immediate and instant acceptance, is still "the power of God for salvation," and that wherever schools or churches exist in which conversions never, or very rarely take place, there is something radically wrong in the faith, doctrine, or practice of the workers.

THE OPIUM INIQUITY.—2.

By Rev. GOODEVE MABBS.

Let us now turn to the Chinese side of the opium question.

Growth of the Trade with China.—A century and a quarter ago, when the opium trade first came into our hands, only two hundred chests per annum were sent to China, and that was received as "foreign medicine;" but in 1884 the number of chests was upwards of 90,000. Short crops have since reduced the quantity a little, but the recent large harvest is likely to increase it. Further, to satisfy the resistless craving which our opium policy has deliberately created and fostered, in recent years a large quantity of the drug has been grown in China. This growth is contrary to Chinese law; but it is carried on for filthy lucre by bribing the resident officials to close their eyes to what is being done. This opium, however, is less potent, and therefore less injurious, than ours. Were it otherwise, the growth is the direct result of that course of demoralisation in which we have steadily persisted, notwithstanding all opposition on the part of China.

The Opium Appetite.—The curse which follows regular indulgence in opium smoking comes silently, but works surely. A short course establishes the craving for opium, which very few can thereafter control, and from which fewer still have the strength to break away. More or less quickly, according to constitution, and to the means for buying food as well as opium, the appetite overcomes the smoker and prostrates him. First as a delightful excitement, then as a requisite to the due performance of the daily tasks; again as an inveterate habit; yet again to ward off intense and recurrent bodily pains; and finally for dear life, the victim lies still and inhales the poisoned fumes of his opium pipe. That which at first to him was the elixir of a new life, gradually quenches all his powers, leaving him a miserable wreck, or quietly pushing him, resistless, into a dishonoured grave.

Without medical assistance and personal restraint practically there is no breaking away from the tyrant's spell, and the will to do so is more often paralysed. No violence marks the downward course; yet this often issues in crime, and family and friends are generally involved in the impending ruin. The Chinese, including the victims of the pipe, unanimously condemn the opium habit, and hate the "foreign devils" who insist upon bringing the opium. Many believe that thereby we hope to emasculate the nation, in order the more easily to make it our prey. As for the Christian missionary, no more potent shaft can be launched at his work than that involved in the question with which many an interested gathering is broken up, "Do you not belong to the Opium forced upon China.—Since the trade first began to attract notice China has always been opposed to it. It has been prohibited under severe penalties. For participating in it the punishment of death has been inflicted. It has been made the subject of many official protests, all of which we have disregarded. In 1839 the seizure, by a Chinese officer, of 20,000 chests of smuggled opium, brought on the Opium War, of which Mr. Gladstone has said that he has never known a war more unjust in its origin, or more calculated to cover the country with permanent disgrace. But, although conquered, China still declined to legalise the trade, so by means of bribery and armed force opium was smuggled into China in increasing quantities.

In 1857 the complications arising out of this state of things led to the lorcha Arrow war, which, in 1858, issued in the signature of the Treaty of Tientsin. But the war shortly recommencing, it was only in 1860 that the treaty was ratified. By this treaty the legalisation of the opium trade was at length obtained from China, who, having been thrice conquered by Great Britain, was now no longer in a condition seriously to oppose the wishes of her conqueror. Nevertheless, China's greatest statesman has declared that the war must be considered as her standing protest against the legalisation of the opium trade. Can "Christian" England regard this forcing of the opium trade upon China otherwise than as an act of cruel wrong, which has dishonoured the name of the British nation, and which must continue to do so until China shall have been set free from these treaty obligations?

The Appeal for Freedom Rejected.—In 1869, when the tariff was under revision, China pleaded with pathetic earnestness to be set free from the obligation imposed upon her. The foreign merchant "seduced them to their ruin by bringing the drug;" and the common people all believed that this was England's object. "Nothing would be effective but a prohibition, to be enforced alike by both parties." For consent to this step the Chinese Government earnestly appealed, believing it impossible that England would willingly earn the hatred of the people of China, and "make herself a reproach among the nations" by clinging to the opium revenue at such a cost to the Chinese. But once more we turned a deaf ear to the appeal.

In a concluding paper, I shall call attention to the present position of the question.

BIBLE STAND, CRYSTAL PALACE.—Through this instrumentality, carried on chiefly by voluntary helpers both at home and abroad, twenty millions of Bibles and Testaments, Gospels and Epistles, and Scripture cards have been circulated in twenty-six languages during the last twenty-five years. The Bible carriage in France continues its glorious mission. Communications should be addressed to Mr. W. Hawke, Bible Stand, Crystal Palace, Sydenham, S.E.

STAFFORDSHIRE INDUSTRIAL HOME.—This institution, for discharged female prisoners and friendless women, has accommodation for forty inmates, who agree to submit themselves to a period of two years' discipline and training for service. At the expiration of this time a situation is found for each in a respectable family, and a complete outfit provided. During the past year the amount realised by washing and needlework has been £930. The institution is one of the many that seek to rescue those who have fallen, and to save others, and thus well deserves the sympathy and co-operation of Christians. A small house has recently been fitted up in connection therewith for probationers, so that now there is accommodation for ten additional cases. Any information desired may be had on applying to Miss

TO THE LAW and to the TESTIMONY.

The Revival of 1859 included a revived reading of and meditation in God's Word; and the great foundation truths of our holy faith were dwelt upon with a method and a continuity which produced a spiritually muscular Christianity. Gradually this has given place to a wire-drawing and hair-splitting of Scripture which have had a very prejudicial effect. Instead of symbolic Scriptures being only used for the illustration of doctrinal truths elsewhere definitely stated, they have been made the basis of theories which, to say the least, are not distinctly taught in the New Testament. For example: a fourfold division has been made of believers, answering to the threescore queens, fourscore concubines, virgins without number, and the dove, the undefiled, who is but one (Cant. vi. 8, 9). This is an extreme case, but the many crude speculations concerning the 144,000 who follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth; the division of the Church into "the Bride and the Household," and the many other ways in which it is denied that the Church is synonymous with the Bride (Eph. v.), which is a feature of almost all the modern heresies, from Mrs. Girling's to the Agapēmonē, are all in the same direction.

We have received several letters advocating theories more or less of this pattern. We may as well say, once for all, that we have no mind or space for them. Let us have definite, unmistakable Scripture statement of doctrine, and then as much Scriptural illustration as we can; but it is our province to minister to Christian workers who have not time for fancies, and to young Christians who are not qualified to discuss wire-drawn suggestions.

We think the time is come for a note of warning against following the footsteps of those who, in apostolic days, swerved from a good conscience and faith unfeigned, and turned aside to vain jangling; and against being drawn into speculations which cannot be proved by any definite "Thus saith the Lord." We believe that all that is required for life and godliness is plainly and intelligibly written in the Book; we intend to confine ourselves to this, using similitude and parable, type and symbol, for illustration and confirmation, but refraining from resting any doctrine upon anything less than the express statements of Scripture, or what is evidently and unmistakably to be proved thereby. M.

YOUNG WOMEN AND MISSIONS.—In our list of forthcoming events will be found the announcement of a two days' Conference in March at the Morley Halls, 316, Regent-street, for considering the bearing of the Christian life on the work of foreign missions. We are heartily rejoiced to find that the Y.W.C.A. is turning its attention to this important subject, and trust our readers will do all in their power to bring young women within the scope and influence of the Conference.

RAILROAD MEN IN AMERICA.—The tenth anniversary celebration of the Young Men's Christian Association, Railroad Branch, was held recently in New York, and some most encouraging facts were presented at the meeting by the President, Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt. In New York there are now five reading-rooms open for the special benefit of railway men, and these have a large membership, with large daily attendance. In different parts of the United States there are now sixty-six branches of the Y.M.C.A. specially for railroad men; whereas ten years ago there were only four. In fifty-six of these, reading-rooms are open; fifty-eight visit and take special care of the sick, and nearly all report religious meetings. During the past year 55,384 persons visited the different rooms. We may heartily join in the wish expressed by one of the speakers, that the good influence of this enterprise will radiate like the

BUNYAN AT THE SHOP-WINDOW.*

By Rev. Dr. A. WHYTE, Edinburgh.

One day, as Bunyan stood cursing and swearing at a neighbour's shop-window, a woman, a loose and abandoned character, heard him and reproved him. She told him that he was the ungodliest fellow for swearing that she ever knew in all her life, and protested that he was bad enough to spoil the whole of the young men in the town, if they but came into his company. She thought he was a blackguard, and said so. His defenders will not admit his unmitigated wickedness. Coleridge, Scott, and Anthony Froude rise up in his defence. They allow that he was a bit of a blackguard, and that he delighted in a row, but they maintain that he was not what they would call wicked. The woman was of a different opinion. She considered him wicked enough to scandalise and deprave all his companions; and he is ready in "Grace Abounding" to endorse her judgment of his character at that time.

Strange as it may seen, the words spoken at the shop-window, which made his brazen face flush, were one of the steps in his conversion. Let us linger at that shop-window to-night, and learn some lessons.

(1) Bunyan was shamed by the reproof. He hung down his head, and wished with all his heart that he might be a little child again, so that his father might teach him to speak without swearing. That wish meant much; its sincerity cannot be doubted. Even if he were a child again, he would have required another father, for the reprobate old tinker could not keep from seasoning his speech with oaths. We often wish that we were little children again. We should then take a new start in life, or shake off some habit that fetters us. Bad as Bunyan was, some of us are worse. He was chaste, honest, and sober. Are you? Do you not wish from the bottom of your heart that you were on the other side of some sin which stains your memory, and darkens your happiness? Do you not gnash your teeth at the recollection of the past? It is a sign of grace in a man to gnash his teeth at the thought of his past wickedness. Some have sinned as deeply as you, and never blushed; their callousness is a mark of reprobation. When and how was the first blot put opposite your name? Think of it now. Were you misled by your father and mis-managed by your mother? Parents, realise your responsibilities! Misguided and erring sons and daughters, look to Him in whom the fatherless find mercy!

If there is one here who wishes to be a child again to escape from the damage done to him, there are ten who wish to be young again to escape the harrowing misery of the knowledge of damage done by them. Any selfish sinner may desire to escape being hurt; but it needs a saint to wish the strong wish to be young so as never to tempt and injure an immortal soul. Come, all of you, to the shop-window. You know what it is to walk softly over the stones of a bleeding past. Learn that constant penitence which, as the legend runs, made Peter always break down whenever he heard a cock crow.

(2) God's way of bringing back childhood is through the new birth. The truth of regeneration staggered poor old Nicodemus, though he was a doctor of divinity; yet, after he passed through that change, he was able to preach what he could not at one time understand. Men, groaning over the past, believe that all things may be made new for you! You may have a new birth in the middle of your years. You may begin a better life with old heads on young shoulders. You can garner the experience of the past to enrich the future. Look at the tribute John Bunyan put his early life and experiences under in writing "The Jerusalem Sinner Saved," and "The Holy War."

(3) "Better is the end of a thing than the beginning of it." This Old Testament saying, translated into evangelical and New Testament language, means, "Better is penitence than innocence." This seems a strange saying. Do you understand it? You must look well round it and at its heart before you can grasp it. But it will repay the trouble of finding out its meaning.

TWO FAMOUS PREACHERS.

In The Century for February (Fisher Unwin) we get an exceedingly interesting glimpse of Rev. Peter Cartwright, the well-known American backwoods Methodist preacher, and of the still more famous Father Taylor, of Boston. Both were born orators, and wielded an immense influence in their respective spheres. Mr. Cartwright is mentioned incidentally in the Life of Abraham Lincoln, whom he opposed as a candidate for Congress, when the latter was elected to that honour for the first time. Of Mr. Cartwright we read:—

"His career as a preacher began at the beginning of the century and continued for seventy years. He was the son of one of the pioneers of the West, and grew up in the rudest regions of the borderland between Tennessee and Kentucky. He was converted, and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church when only sixteen years old, and immediately developed such zeal and power in exhortation that less than a year later he was licensed 'to exercise his gifts as an exhorter so long as his practice is agreeable to the Gospel.' He became a deacon at twenty-one, an elder at twenty-three, a presiding elder at twenty-seven, and from that time his life is the history of his Church in the West for sixty years. He died in 1872, at eighty-seven years of age, having baptized 12,000 persons, and preached 15,000 sermons...The impressive manner of Mrs. Cartwright's death, who survived her husband a few years, is remembered in the churches of Sangamon County, Ill. She was attending a religious meeting at Bethel Chapel, a mile from her house. She was called upon to give her testimony, which she did with much feeling, concluding with the words: 'The past three weeks have been the happiest of all my life; I am waiting for the chariot.' When the meeting broke up she did not rise with the rest. The minister solemnly said, 'The chariot has arrived.'"

Father Taylor, the sailors' preacher in Boston, is the subject of two brief papers, one by Rev. Dr. Bartol, and the other by the poet Walt Whitman. After describing his wonderful and peerless style of oratory, Dr. Bartol says: "Most men who have been famous in the clerical profession live in their 'works,' as we so politely call their printed words. But no scrap of Taylor's writing is to be found. Paul said his converts were his 'epistles.' Father Taylor's letters were the sailors who carried his name and lessons to every shore and port of the globe."

Whitman regards Taylor as the "one essential orator" he ever heard; who held every hearer by spells which no conventionalist, high or low, could stand against for ten minutes. The poet continues: "I remember I felt the deepest impression from the old man's prayers, which invariably affected me to tears. Never, on any similar or other occasions, have I heard such impassioned pleading—such human-harassing reproach—such probing to the very depths of that latent conscience and remorse which probably lie somewhere in the background of every life, every soul. For when Father Taylor preached or prayed, the rhetoric and art, the mere words, seemed altogether to disappear, and the live feeling advanced upon you and seized you with a power before unknown. Everybody felt this marvellous and awful influence. One young sailor, a Rhode Islander (who came every Sunday, and I got acquainted with and talked to once or twice as we went away), told me, 'That must be the Holy Ghost we read of in the Progress in Kolar.

A LITTLE book, "Christian Life and Work in Kolar," gives a graphic and unvarnished account of the work of the Mission conducted by Miss Anstey. The writer gives us the simple statements of the native workers themselves, and their letters will be read with much interest. The work going on day by day is brought vividly before our eyes—a great work, which those who have the privilege to visit say, "One-half has not been told us; it is impossible to appreciate this without seeing what is going on with your own eyes."

"Christian Life and Work in Kolar" may be procured at this office, price twopence.

Lights and Shadows in Brazil.

In a letter dated Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, Jan. 6, Rev. E. H. Soper, of the Baptist Mission House, writes:—The reports from all our missionaries in Brazil speak very encouragingly of the Lord's work, though they have been stoned and bitterly persecuted by the Romanists. We closed the year with a week's special services to praise God for the blessings of the year, and to seek to win more souls to Jesus. We had a most blessed time, though it rained every night. The church was quickened, and three souls professed Christ at our fellowship meeting on the 3rd; several others are interested and seeking more light on the Gospel.

I wish the difficulties under which we labour in Brazil were better known. I fear too many have quite a false idea of Brazil. There is no religious freedom here; we are barely tolerated. Outside our places of worship we have no liberty at all. I have been stopped by the priest from giving a paper to an English sailor in the strangers' ward of the hospital. Yet England helps to support this same ward, and every ship that enters the port has to pay toward its support. At this moment I have a negro slave woman that one of our missionaries bought and freed in the hospital, and I sought, but was refused, admittance to see her because of my religion.

Our colporteur tells of dreadful scenes he has seen in his travels among the people. The one great cause of all this sin and degradation is want of light, and this we are trying to give, but we are so few amongst the many. Our native preacher has averaged thirty sermons a month through the year, and has been so hard worked that he has fainted from weakness and been carried from the pulpit. Still he holds out, and the Lord upholds him. A good work is being done by the different colporteurs in this city. Your readers might, by a small effort, sustain a colporteur in Brazil; or how little it would take to send to us missionaries some thousands of Portuguese tracts and Bibles. We should be pleased to distribute them amongst the people, and what fruit it would bring forth!

Let me close by asking any young men who are anxious to work for God, to pray that He may send them to Brazil. I also ask the prayers of your readers that the English in Brazil may be stirred up; that they may live worthy of the name of Christians, and become as lights to this people. Only those who have lived amongst them know the sad effect the ungodly lives of too many who speak our tongue has upon the Lord's work here. Last month we arranged a week's special services for the English, the pastors of the different churches uniting in these meetings (except the Episcopal), and what was the result? The largest attendance we had was not over thirty; one night we had but three, and all were preachers. After this you will see how much prayer and effort are needed in this city, with its 350,000 precious souls, steeped in sin and Notes from Norway.

A correspondent, writing from Laurvik, in Norway, says there are not a few Christians in that country, but many are intolerant of those outside the State Church, which is Lutheran. About thirty years ago the Episcopal Methodists commenced work there, and the English Baptists some time later. Twelve years ago the Evangelical Lutheran Free Church was established. This, in its inner form, is akin to the Presbyterian Church or the Scottish Free Church, and, like the State Church, retains infant baptism. The Free Mission, formed about four years ago, receives believers of all denominations. It is the result of seed sown by a Swede, and it is hoped will bear much fruit. The Mission has spread from the south to the north, and last summer held its third yearly meeting at Bergen. It is working slowly but surely, its head-quarters being at Christiania, the capital of Norway. Though having a hard soil to work in, there are yet many who try to serve God in truth and in spirit, and who desire to be free of old bonds and ties and stiff forms.

A Story of Work in Austria.

In the year 1806, there came to the cure of Gallneukirchen, in Upper Austria, Martin Boos, a Catholic priest, from Bavaria. He confessed, declared and taught, that the sinner is justified, not by his own works, but by the grace and merits of our Lord Jesus Christ, and that they only obtain this by believing in Him—"The just shall live by faith." After five years' labour a movement took place, many witnessing a good confession.

The change in the hearts and lives of the young converts soon attracted observation, and the new faith rapidly spread, much to the vexation of the neighbouring priests, who now complained of Pastor Boos.

An investigation was instituted by the Roman Catholic Church, which ended in the removal from his office of this good man, incarceration in the Carmelite monastery of Linz, and, after ten months of imprisonment, banishment for life. Those, however, who had been led to drink of the Water of Life could not remain in the Romish Church. They read the Holy Scriptures at home, and some even ventured to visit the Protestant prayer-meetings held in the neighbouring villages. On this account, they were accused, tried, threatened, punished, and several came over to the Protestant community. The Bishop of Linz came to bring back "the lost sheep," but it was of no avail, for not one of them recanted.

After twenty-five years' delay, permission was at last given to the Christians to meet for worship according to their own belief. In the year 1860 or so, only a little handful of about 120 souls remained of these faithful people. By God's help, and with the support of the "Gustav Adolph Verein," they were enabled at last to build a school in Weikersdorf, a hamlet seven miles distant, where religious services were for a time conducted. In 1872 a teacher was chosen, and began with seven scholars. This work later on became an Orphanage and Rescue Establishment.

In 1871 Pastor Ludwig Schwarz was called to be vicar of this small community. A year later they were able to buy a hospital in Gallneukirchen from Prince Starkenberg, which was formerly the Inquisition Hall, where the followers of Pastor Boos were tried. This was converted into a comfortable little room for the worship of God. This same year, two Upper Austrian Christian women offered their services willingly for the Master. Two years later, they went to Stuttgart, to receive instruction in the "Deaconess' Home" there. Returning after three years' training, their work was ready for them to begin, namely, to nurse the sick in this little hospital, and also in private families. In course of time the house became too small, and was enlarged. The number of deaconesses increased, as did also the patients. Among the latter are to be found all manner of incurables, epileptics, melancholic people, and especially old paupers,

The work continued to grow, and again the house became too small. This time the necessity was relieved through the generosity of a kind friend, who presented them with the gift of a large house, suited for the purpose required. This house is now fitted up as an hospital and called "Zoar."

Such is a short sketch of a work which is being carried on in Austria, so quietly, so little known, and yet so far reaching in its results. It is altogether supported by the gifts of a few friends. Having resided lately for fifteen months in the near neighbourhood, and having had frequent opportunities of seeing and judging for myself of their invaluable work, I venture to bespeak for it the sympathy and support of English Christians. A Communion in the Back Woods.

I was tarrying at a large farm of some eight hundred acres in the Northern townships, half-way between Montreal and Toronto, and one Lord's Day afternoon walked some three miles through woods and swamps to a meeting of the evangelists, who had been doing good work for some time past in truest Gospel fashion, "hoping for nothing again." The little building was full. Boards resting on blocks of wood were the only seats; a small table, with rough legs of split cedar, held the Bible. A glass of wine made from wild raspberries, and a small piece of bread—I must add, a pasteboard collar-box, with a small slit cut in the top, to hand round after the Supper—completed the furniture of the table.

Devout men and women were here, toil-worn and scantily dressed, some with only a penny Testament to look up the references suggested by the speakers. Some of these I had known in the days of their unregeneracy; one in particular, just past the middle age as to time, but older as to fact, having washed away three farms by whiskey, and still a struggling man. I gazed upon his poor wife's face, and thought I saw the hard lines of care melting away under the beams of the Sun of Righteousness. I had tasted their humble hospitality years before. Oh! the pinch of a drunkard's wife, when with womanly care she seeks to welcome a stranger; dry bread, and a few dried raspberries stewed in a small tin without a lid and without a handle, was all she could provide. They were encouraged to seek the Lord, but not till the visit of two young English evangelists had they given their hearts to the Lord. Others as careless and unconcerned had come under the power of grace; and this afternoon thirty-nine persons broke bread in remembrance of their Lord.

Having had my share in the good work in the woods for the past few years, I rejoiced greatly in the success of the dear brethren who had, under God, done such good work. One had already gone away, and now Brother Case was taking his farewell, hoping at some distant day to visit them again, but leaving them in a self-sustaining way by commending them to the word of His grace, which was able to build them up.

SALVATION GOSPEL HALL, DUBLIN.—The report just issued of the two years' work carried on at 13, Lower Abbey-street, Dublin, shows how during that time the Lord has upheld and encouraged the workers, and that many men and women have been savingly converted to God. There is a continuous cycle of services from week to week, and outside work, that of going after the lost and suffering, is actively carried on. Mr. Robt. Stewart, 2, Nassau-street, Dublin, is one of the directors.

A NEW PRAYER UNION.—While the urgent spiritual needs of the times are giving new impulse to the supplications of God's people, many Christian women among your readers may like to know of the Women's Evangelical Union for Prayer, and enter into its fellowship. The object is prayer for the Church of Christ throughout the world. Among the nearly one thousand members scattered world-wide, are a large number of labourers in home and foreign fields, and also many invalids. THE STORY OF JACOB RE-TOLD.

XV.—HOME: AT LAST!

Genesis L.

The end is come at last! And we stand with those stalwart men in that hieroglyph-covered chamber, silent with the hush of death, to see the way-worn pilgrim breathe his last. His life has been a stern fight; his pathway not strewn with roses, but set with flints; few and evil the days of the years of his pilgrimage. Compared with the brilliant career of Esau, his life might be almost considered a failure, estimating it by all human standards of failure and success. But as the scaffold is taken down piece by piece, we catch glimpses of the real manhood which God had been so carefully building up, through long years of pain and sorrow; and as it comes into view, we feel that it is more than enough to justify all. Better, a hundredfold, to be Israel the Prince, though an exile, than Esau, the founder of a line of dukes. The glory of moral and spiritual rank will glisten when the crowns of earthly splendour shall have mouldered into dust, and the name of Israel will be an unfailing inspiration to those, who, conscious of untold weakness and unloveableness, shall yet strive to apprehend that for which they were originally apprehended by Christ Jesus.

We, too, if the Lord tarry, shall lie some day in a chamber of death, surrounded by our dear ones. Our spirits must poise themselves for their final flight, and stand waiting at the Beautiful Gate of the temple of life. And as Jacob has taught us how to live, so let him teach us how to die. "Come," said the dying Havelock to his son, "and see how a Christian can die." Some such summons calls us now; for even we, living in the noon-tide of the Gospel, may obtain salutary hints for our own death-hour from one, who once seemed too mean to teach us anything, but who now, through the stern discipline of the Angel of Love, stands forth to lead faithful souls through the dark gorge of death into the land of the eternal morning.

Before the mind of the dying patriarch three visions seemed to float in that solemn hour. He was thinking of the City of God, and of the Gathering of his clan, and of that lone and distant Cave in Canaan where his fathers lay, and which he had so often visited.

I. The City of God.—We are expressly told in the Epistle to the Hebrews that Jacob was one of those "who died in faith." He was the heir of Promise. The land promised to Abraham and Isaac had not as yet passed into his possession; it was still held by the wandering and settled tribes, who had eyed his journeyings with such evident suspicion. All he had was the assured promise that in the coming days it should be his through his seed.

Perhaps, in the dawn of early vigour, he may have hoped to live until those fair pasture lands and terraced hills had literally passed into his possession. This yearning comes out in the deep-drawn ejaculation, flashing through his dying charge to his sons, "I have waited for thy salvation, O Lord!"

But as the years passed on, and clouds closed over this azure aperture of earthly hope, he was compelled to realise that he would never live to be lord of Canaan. Nevertheless, he clung tenaciously to the blessed promise, so often reiterated to Abraham, that the land should become his people's; and his assurance that God would keep his word flung a radiance, which neither sorrow nor adversity could dim, over his dying moments. Oh! glorious faith, which carries a torch through the long catacombs of sorrow, keeping the heart from fainting, until the welcome dawn of accomplishment grows upon the sight. What cannot faith do for those whom God has taught to trust! "My soul, wait thou only upon God, for my expectation is from Him."

As it became clear to Jacob that he was not to with increasing eagerness on heaven. He felt that if God had not destined for him an earthly resting-place, yet He had prepared for him a city. Its foundations had not been laid by man; its walls bore no mark of human workmanship; its atmosphere could not be stained with the smoke or dust of earth. And it was for that glorious city, the city of the saints, that his pilgrim-spirit now yearned. It was the vision of that city which had enabled him to confess to the mighty Pharaoh that he was a pilgrim and a stranger on the earth. And now it was his close proximity to it that stirred his aged spirit, and drew it on with breathless eagerness and rapid steps.

The sacred writer employs a beautiful similitude, when he says of Jacob and the rest of the patriarchs, that they greeted the promises from afar (Heb. xi. 13). When the traveller returns from distant lands, and from the summit of some neighbouring hill catches the first glimpse of his still distant home, with its spiral column of blue smoke curling up amid the trees, he is disposed to fall upon the greensward, and with outstretched hands thank God and greet his home. "Hail! happy scenes of childhood; and blest abode of manhood's prime." So Jacob, as he neared the city of God, so dear to faithful hearts, approved his kinsmanship with the elect spirits of all ages, by reaching forth towards it his aged, trembling hands. And as God looked down upon that eager attitude of faith and hope and desire, He was not ashamed to be called his God.

Modern commentators have wrangled fiercely as to how much or how little of the future life was realised by these ancient saints. Into that controversy I have no desire to enter. But I find a large answer to their questions in the assurance of Scripture, that Jacob and the men of his type desired "the better country, that is, a heavenly." The future was less indistinct to them than we sometimes suppose. They, too, stood on Pisgah-heights and beheld a Land of Promise; not that on which the veteran lawgiver gazed, bounded by the blue waters of the Mediterranean, but that which is never shadowed by night, or swept by wild tempests of wind and rain, the true Home of the saints. On such a Pisgah-height Jacob was standing, and as all earthly objects, even the face of Joseph, grew indistinct to his dimming eyes, those rapturous and celestial scenes grew upon his spiritual vision, and beckoned to him.

In what relation do you, my readers, stand to that city of God? Do not imagine that it will gladden your dying gaze, unless it has often been the object of your loving thought in the days of health and vigour. Your citizenship must be in heaven now, if you would feel attracted to it as your true home at last. Is it so? Do you feel content to live in tents, having no fixed hold upon this fleeting scene, and confessing yourselves pilgrims and strangers on the earth, because you are looking for the city? Do you feel the pull of that city, as the sailor does of the anchor, which keeps him from drifting with the tide? Do you anticipate it, like the children in the Children's Crusade, who asked of every city they entered, "Is this Jerusalem?" If so, it shall gladden your dying moments. You shall see the holy city descending out of heaven from God, as a bank seems to approach the nearing vessel. And you shall have the blessedness, assured by the living Saviour to those who wash their robes, of the right to enter in, through the gates, into the city (Rev. xxii. 14, R.V.).

II. The Gathering of the Clan.—"I am to be gathered unto my people." When the dying Patriarch spoke thus, he meant something more than that his dust should mingle with all that was mortal of his forefathers. He expresses that thought in the following sentence: "Bury me with my fathers." No, he meant something more than this. He surely looked upon the City as the gathering-place of his clan, the metropolis of true and godly hearts, the rendezvous of all who were his people, because they were the people of God.

How much truer is this thought of heaven than that which is entertained by many Christian people. "What do you think of the inter-from the very moment of death?" "Shall we know one another on the other side?" These are the doleful questions asked on many sides. And they present a melancholy contrast to the words of the dying Jacob, "I am to be gathered unto my people."

What as to the intermediate state? At the best "we know not what we shall be." We cannot penetrate the veil that only opens wide enough to admit the entering spirit. It is clear that our spirits will not reach their full consummation and bliss till the morning of the resurrection, when body and spirit will be reunited; but it is equally clear that they will not be unconscious, but will enter into the blessed presence of our Lord.

This was taught by Christ Himself, when He quoted the words, "I am the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob," and added the comment, "He is not the God of the dead, but of the living." That grand formula was spoken years after Jacob had fallen asleep, and yet God speaks of Himself as his God, and since He could not be the God of dead mummies only, or of unconscious spirits, Jacob and all the rest must have been living. Yes, they were living then, and are living now, possessed of all the vivid life that made them what they were.

There is no accent of uncertainty in the New Testament. As soon as the tent is taken down the mansion is entered (2 Cor. v. 2). Absent from the body, the believer is present with the Lord. To die is gain, which were an impossibility if the spirit did not have more of Christ than is possible on this side of the golden city (Phil. i. 22). The dying Stephen went direct into the hands of his Lord (Acts vii. 59). Do not puzzle over useless questionings; be content to know that death is not a state, but an act; not a resting-place, but a transition; a passage, a birth, a crossing the Bridge of Sighs from the prison to the palace.

> Death is another life. We bow our heads
> At going out, we think, and enter straight
> Another golden chamber of the King's,
> Larger than this we leave, and lovelier.

What as to the recognition of the departed? It would not have been an object of anticipation to Jacob to be gathered to his people, if he would not know them when he reached their blest society. When the Jew thought of the unseen world, he expected to meet the saints, of whom he had been wont to hear from childhood, and especially Abraham. Was not the Jew wiser than most Christians? What! has the body powers of recognition, and the spirit none? Shall love, which has moulded the life, range through eternity unable to find the twin-spirit with which it had become entwined? Can that be a Father's home, where the brothers and sisters do not know each other?

But these questions have always been solved, to me at least, by a careful study of the facts of our Lord's resurrection-body, the model to the likeness of which we are to be conformed (Phil. iii. 21). Those who knew Him before his death, recognised Him after. His very voice had in it intonations familiar to those who loved Him (John xx. 16). His mannerisms were identical, and sufficient to identify Him to the two disciples with whom He sat (Luke xxiv. 31). And as it was with Him, so shall it be with us and our beloved.

We shall be gathered to our people. Death will not usher us into a chill unfriendly circle, but into a great gathering of loving and sympathising friends, who shall give us a choral welcome when we enter into the eternal kingdom of our Lord (2 Pet. i. 11; see the Greek).

Throughout the ages the elect souls of our race have been gathering there. Are they our people? Can we claim kinship with them? There is but one bond, as we are taught in Heb. xi. That bond is not of dispensation, or of knowledge, or of exploits, but of faith; such faith as may exist in a beggar or a king, in a child or a philosopher. It is independent of age, or sect, or knowledge, or work. But, wherever it is found, it designates the owner to be one of those who can claim kinship with the saintly inhabitants of the City of God. The test question of qualification for the franchise of

III. The Cave of Machpelah.—"Bury me with my fathers in the cave that is in the field of Ephron the Hittite." For seventeen years he had lived in Egypt, surrounded by all the comforts that Joseph's filial love could devise, and his munificence execute. He must have become familiar with Egypt's splendid temples and obelisks and pyramids, with which that cave could not for one moment be compared. But he would not rest in any of them. He must be laid where Abraham and Sarah, Isaac and Rebekah, and the faithful Leah awaited resurrection.

This was something more than the natural sentiment which impels us to request burial in some quiet spot in God's acre, where our family name is inscribed on many of the gravestones around. He felt that Machpelah's cave was the first outpost in the land which was one day to belong to his people, and he wanted, so far as he might, to be there with them, and to share in the land of promise.

The last word was spoken, the last commission given, and he knew the end was come. "He gathered up his feet into the bed;" i.e., he met death quietly, calmly, manfully. He was not dragged away as a criminal, he went to meet it with complacency and with joy. The servant might have a grim face and a sable suit, but he had come to take him home. He quietly breathed out his spirit, and was gathered unto his people. And at that moment sorrow and sighing, which had been his close companions in life, fled away for ever.

How calm and noble that face looked, fixed in the marble of death. The Jacob-look had vanished from it, and it was stamped with the smile with which the royal Israel-spirit had moulded it in its outward passage.

> "So, pilgrim, now thy brows are cold,
> We see thee what thou art, and know
> Thy likeness to the wise below,
> Thy kindred with the great of old."

What wonder, then, that Joseph fell upon his father's face, and wept upon him, and kissed him! He had borne the strain as long as he could, and now nature must vent herself in manly, filial grief.

The body was carefully embalmed. No time, or pains, or cost were spared. Egypt herself mourned for him for seventy days. And then one of the most splendid funeral processions that ever gathered to lay saint, or sage, or hero to his rest, carried that precious casket in solemn pomp from Egypt up to Canaan. The chivalry of Egypt, its statesmen and counsellors, its princes and priests, joined with the shepherds of Goshen in accompanying the cortège. And the signs of mourning were so great as to impress the inhabitants of the land, the Canaanites.

The stone was rolled away, and the remains laid on their appointed niche; and in all probability they are there, in a state of perfect preservation, unto this day. Many a storm has swept over them, Assyrian, Egyptian, Babylonian, Grecian, Roman, Saracenic, and Mohammedan. But nought has disturbed their quiet rest; and they hold the land in fee, till God shall fulfil, in all its magnificence, the promise which He made and has never recalled, that He would give the land to Jacob's seed for an everlasting inheritance. So rest thee, Israel the Prince!

HOW THE BOOTS CAME.

BY WILLIAM LUFF.

In the suburbs, toast and butter
  Were served by a blazing fire:
And the men went forth to business,
  Buttoned up in their warm attire.

In the city, little children
  At the school-gate hurried through:
And some were without a breakfast,
  Or hat, or sock, or shoe.

But the heart of the gracious Saviour
  Looked out through a servant's eyes,
Who planned, with his helping partner,
  A wonderful glad surprise.

A breakfast, hot and simple,
  Prepared by their own good hands,
Should answer stern nature's cravings,
  In her hungry, just demands.

So up at the daybreak early,
  They lighted the copper fires:
And the little children blessed them,
  And the mothers and outcast sires.

There were three little mites one morning,
  A boy and two hungry girls:
One without shoe or stocking,
  Or a hat to cover her curls.

"Wife," said the faithful servant,
  "Can we find her a shoe apiece?"
So they prayed, and promised to help her
  Till the wintry storms should cease.

They waited the coming morrow,
  To see what the Lord would do,
Who had heard their vow of pity,
  And was coming to aid them too.

The hail and the wind were driving
  In hurricanes up the street,
As the starving, dripping children
  Came in—she had still bare feet.

"Wife, we shall have to buy them"—
  And he thought of their sinking store,—
"And your own old hat we'll give her——"
  Just then at the open door

A man came in with a parcel;
  "I've a pair of boots," said he;
"I felt I must come this morning,
  Though why I can hardly see."

"The Lord be praised," they murmured,
  And calling the bare one nigh,
The shoes were her fit exactly:
  "There, sir, is the reason why."

"And a hat for some little damsel
  I've brought through the beating rain;"
When the hatless one was covered
  The reason was seen again.

And this is the simple story
  Of a simple, sterling fact,
How God is willing to answer
  When we are prepared to act.

Since writing this incident I have received a letter from W. Jeffery, Pastor of Jubilee Chapel, East-road, Hoxton, 57, Fairbank-street, East-road, N. He says:—"We feel we cannot do wrong in feeding and clothing the dear little children. Our work is on the broadest possible principle. We have the tickets for our free breakfast distributed chiefly by the teachers in the board-schools; my idea being that we can by them get to the most needy and deserving ones, and at the same time encourage those who go to school. . . . During last winter we gave away 10,000 free meals; but we did it all so quietly that but little was known of it by the outside world."

A MISSIONARY'S STORY.

BY MRS. PORTER.

And Jesus said, I have compassion on the multitude, because they have been with Me three days, and have nothing to eat.—Mark viii. 2.

During a famine in India, some years ago, a group of little Hindu girls, belonging to an orphanage, came to me one evening, before the evening meal was prepared, and said—

"Salaam, Amah! May we tell Nargoma not to cook our supper?"

"Why, dear children? do you not like what is given you for supper?"

"Oh, yes, Amah! we like it very much, but Catechist Moses has been here to-day, and he says the children at Ventoola are many of them almost starved. Some of them have only one meal in three days, and we have three meals in one day; and we are sure we could manage to be satisfied with two meals a day, if we might have a little rice-water before we lie down to sleep; and then, ma'm, if you would give what our supper costs to Catechist Moses, he would buy a little food for the poor children at Ventoola. We have no money, but then we are fed and clothed, so please, ma'm, will you allow this?"

It was a request that could not be refused, and the cost of their supper, with something added, was sent to the poor starving ones, while the dear children in the school had their "rice-water," with a plantain.

I expect the great want of thousands in London and other places is known to many of you children, who are bountifully fed.

Now, dear children, you know how Jesus felt when He saw so many hungry and fainting around Him. He felt compassion. That beautiful word means, pity mixed with kindness. If He had done nothing for those poor folk who had followed Him into the wilderness, his pity alone would not have helped them. The kind action came, as the pitiful thought stirred his heart. He arranged that great multitude on the soft green grass, to rest their weary limbs, and He got them food, and blessed it, and divided it among them, and never rested till every single one was satisfied.

Now, it is not enough for us to feel sorry and pitiful about these poor starving children in London to-day. We should all ask ourselves, What can we do to help them? If we have not much money of our own, is there not something we might give up or do without, as these dear little Hindu girls did? Is there not some new toy, some birthday or holiday treat, of which we might make an offering, and so send them a little help?"

SAILORS IN YOKOHAMA.

An important work amongst sailors has been for some time carried on by Mr. and Mrs. Anstea, the latter of whom has earned the title of the Miss Weston of Japan. They visit on board ship very largely, and hold services when practicable, Mrs. Anstea taking a small organ, and singing. The influence for good thus exerted amongst the sailors is very marked, and is already telling on the efforts of the missionaries. In a building set apart for the purpose, sailors are at all times welcomed and made to feel at home. Every evening there is something going on to divert and encourage them—now a social tea party, games being sometimes introduced, and then an experience meeting. Hospitals and prisons are also visited, and many touching incidents are related, the sufferers being especially comforted by the promise to write to friends and relatives in the event of death, and to attend the funeral.

Mr. and Mrs. Anstea, who are now in England, are anxious to take back with them a large number of beds, &c., so as to provide sleeping accommodation, which the men would gladly avail themselves of in order to avoid the temptations to which they are exposed when on shore. £5 will secure one bed. Communications can be addressed to them for the present, care of Mrs. E. M. Blucke, 47, Warrior-square, St.

REMARKABLE CONVERSIONS.

LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY.

A very unusual and interesting work is now being carried on in this city. Some years ago Steve Holcombe was a noted gambler and a dissolute man, frequenting the vile haunts where such men are to be found. By some means he was led to look upon Jesus as his Saviour, and became his humble follower. As the Lord had shown him such great mercy, he felt it to be his duty to tell what had been done. He was so modest, so humble, and so sincere in his testimony that he soon attracted attention. He undertook to provide a place for the homeless and the destitute, and by the aid of those who loved the Lord's service, he opened rooms where those who had no money or friends might be cared for and fed. Every evening a meeting was held for prayer and preaching, and many have been led to the Cross there.

But Mr. Holcombe, who is now ordained to the ministry, feels an especial desire to save his former boon companions, the gamblers and drunkards. Not long ago an old acquaintance came to the meetings. So faithfully and clearly was the truth presented, and so strong were the workings of the Holy Spirit, that Paul Booker became "convinced of the truth as it is in Jesus," and believed with all his heart. He quit drinking immediately, has forsaken evil companions, and in a modest but earnest way has announced that hereafter he will serve the Lord. He has now joined the Baptist Church. He is an educated man, with a fine presence, and withal an excellent business man.

These incidents led another companion in sin to go and hear Paul Booker. He, too, was soon convicted of the sinfulness of his life, and Mose Gibson (as he is called) has also made a modest and sincere confession, and stopped drinking at once. It is rumoured that several others noted for recklessness are being reached.

These events called out at first the usual scoffing and doubt. "But beholding the men which were healed standing among them, they could say nothing against it." It is said that all who profess conversion under Mr. Holcombe's labours are faithful. He has such gentle, pleasing ways and methods, and follows his lambs with such faithfulness, that few ever go back to sin.

The success of this work among the vilest class of a large city has been so great, that one of the active business men has started a mission in another part of the city. He has rented a room, and fitted it up with all conveniences, where meetings are held daily. It is undenominational, and anyone desirous of aiding in the work is welcome either to converse with those who attend, or to aid them at their homes. It is called "The Highway Mission." Mr. Burghardt, who endows it, attends the meetings, taking an active part in the exercises. Already there have been many conversions among the worst drunkards and most noted criminals. "Go ye out into the highways and hedges, and compel them to come in, that My house may be filled." The attendance and interest increase daily. Every seat in the large auditorium was filled last evening, and many stood during the exercises. Eight persons gave brief, modest, yet pathetic accounts of their conversion. Twenty-nine rose for prayer.

The papers announce the conversion at the Holcombe Mission of J. T. Hocker, who is widely known here. He is a man of ability, and has held important positions, which he lost by his dissipated habits. He has been a confirmed infidel for a long time, and scoffed at everything relating to religion. It is said that Mr. Holcombe has been pleading with him for six years. This shows his zeal and faithfulness better than praises.

There is a tender feeling in most of the churches at this time, and we are praying that "the Lord will open the windows of heaven, and pour out a blessing that there may not be

THE SECOND COMING of CHRIST.*

The two works mentioned at the foot of the column are both important contributions to our knowledge of what is held and taught by able and respected writers, of what is called the "Futurist" Prophetic School. The latter of the two is a republication of a tract written twenty-three years ago, by one whose praise is in all the churches as an accurate scholar and a much respected and esteemed Christian: one who is now "absent from the body, present with the Lord." The other is the substance of addresses lately delivered at a Prophetic Conference, by one whose recent works "The Great Prophecies" and "Earth's Earliest Ages" have given him a high position among prophetic writers of the school to which he belongs.

Mr. Pember's book, whilst it sets forth with ability what may be called sensational views with respect to Antichrist, reveals at the same time some of the weak points of that system. Here is a description of Antichrist, which may fairly deserve the epithet "sensational."

> The fame of his ascent from the Abyss, his mighty and versatile intellect, his unlimited acquirements, his superhuman wisdom, his powerful administrative and executive ability, his absolutely unyielding will, his never-varying success, and the irresistible fascination of his personal attractions, will gain him applause and enthusiastic supporters wherever he turns.

The danger of this style of writing, or rather of that tendency of mind from which it proceeds, is to allow oneself to be so carried away by an idea as not only to indulge in what may be called "romancing," but to treat even Scripture with disregard when it refuses to bend to our fancies. For example, in a highly wrought description of the siege of Jerusalem, as described in Zech. xiv., Mr. Pember says:—

> Those who peer from its loftiest watch-towers will be able to discern nothing but the serried ranks of splendid infantry and cavalry, and the long and heavy trains of artillery covering the ground...The foremost companies of the enemy are on the point of entering the streets: another moment and the voice of prayer will be drowned by the outcries of the terror-stricken, and the shrieks of the wounded and the ravished. But just at this awful crisis, the noonday sun suddenly withdraws its light and becomes black as sackcloth: the city is snatched from the view of those who are already sure of their prey: thick darkness enshrouds them: a horror of great darkness paralyses every eagerly advancing foot. An instant of silence, and then, swiftly as God's arrows speed from East to West the blackness of heaven is cloven asunder.

Then follows a description of the Second Coming of Christ; but compare with this the language of that passage of Scripture of which it professes to be an exposition, and mark how irreconcilable Mr. Pember's view is with that of Zechariah xiv. 1, &c.: "I will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle; and the city shall be taken, and the houses rifled, and the women ravished; and half of the city shall go forth into captivity, and the residue of the people shall not be cut off from the city. Then shall the Lord go forth and fight against those nations, as when He fought in the day of battle." According to Mr. Pember, the city is on the point of being taken, and the horrors of the siege are on the point of being perpetrated, when the intention of the enemy is interrupted by the Lord's appearing. According to Scripture, the city is taken, and its accompanying horrors take place, and "half of the city go forth into captivity" (which must surely take some little time) before the going forth of the Lord to fight against those nations.

Another point on which we cannot but regard Mr. Pember's views as unscriptural is his adoption of the notion, held by many in the present day, that true Christians who may be living below their privileges are to be left behind when Christ comes for his people, in order that they may pass through a sort of purgatorial fire of affliction to punish them for their unfaithfulness; or to quote his words: "Every believer who is found striving to obtain pleasure from this world will be left below, for a time, in circumstances sufficiently terrible to change his existence into a living death, until he loathes those evil things which he once desired." The following texts (which give no hint of any exception to the statements they convey) will prove the best antidote to this fancied separation of Christ's people at his coming. "The coming of our Lord Jesus Christ with all his saints" (1 Thess. iii. 13). "We which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air" (1 Thess. iv. 17). "When He shall come to be glorified in his saints, and admired in all them that believe" (2 Thess. i. 10). "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with Him in glory" (Col. iii. 4). "They that are Christ's at his coming" (1 Cor. xv. 23).

Dr. Tregelles, though a strong futurist, utterly rejected this thought of condemning a certain number of Christ's people to be left behind at his coming. He went further, and protested strongly against the whole theory of a secret coming, as distinguished from the only one coming spoken of in Scripture. His arguments on this subject are, as might, indeed, be expected from him, temperate and scholarly, and we would commend to our readers the second edition of his "Hope of Christ's Second Coming," lately edited by Dr. Biss, as referred to below. They may not be able to agree with all his views of an Antichrist yet to appear, but they will find it hard to disprove his closely reasoned conclusions from Scripture, that the Church is a sufferer under Antichrist, and is not taken away before his appearing, and that the descent of the Lord from heaven "with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God" (1 Thess. iv. 16) is not in secret, but in manifested glory. We refrain, however, from committing ourselves to either side in this discussion, believing that it is wiser and better to keep the mind open concerning the details of unfulfilled prophecy which are not clearly and unmistakably revealed. In either case we "wait for the Son from heaven."

GOOD ADVICE TO LIQUOR-SELLERS.

When a man who has for thirty years been "an uncompromising teetotaler" is invited to address a meeting of publicans, and from that platform freely speaks his mind on the great subject of temperance, there can surely be no more significant sign of the better temper in which men are coming to discuss this question. Not long since such a meeting on friendly terms would have been deemed impossible—instead, it would have been seen that then "Greek met Greek." Mr. A. Groser, to whom we refer, improved the occasion by speaking some home truths, and appealing to the consciences of the "licensed victuallers" gathered for the annual dinner of the Plymouth, Devonport, Stonehouse, and District Wine, Spirit, and Beer Trade Protection Society.

Taking for granted that they all agreed in denouncing drunkenness, Mr. Groser besought these liquor-sellers, who had special opportunities of assisting temperance work, to do so by saying to many a poor fellow, whom they well know to be travelling the high road to ruin, "Don't take this spirit, but something else." There is sound sense in the advice to sell drinks that are not intoxicating; and when, a cry of "Compensation" being raised, he declared that those who proved themselves unworthy of a license were unworthy of compensation, all must have felt they had a candid friend to deal with. As to future legislation affecting them, Sunday closing, he said, was not far distant, and Sir Wilfrid Lawson's proposals with reference to local option were well worth their consideration. Only the best results can follow from such plain and friendly talk. To claim the co-operation of publicans is certainly to disarm them of hostility, and to win some, at any rate, to do some-

The Hope of Christ's Second Coming: How is it

Sir WILLIAM DAWSON on CREATION.

Many professed teachers and preachers, and, alas! some evangelicals, are, in their ignorance of the Hebrew and the Greek original, afraid to lean upon the exact terms of Scripture, and are substituting poetic ideas and general ideas of their own for the very words of Scripture. At such a time it is refreshing to read the expositions of Genesis on the pages of Sir William Dawson's book on "The Origin of the World according to Revelation and Science."[*] His deep reverence for the Hebrew words chosen by the Spirit in the first chapter of Genesis contrasts like light with the dark confusions with which even some very well-intentioned men cover the Book of Genesis.

As Sir William Dawson has been the chosen president of the American Association, and is the latest president of the British Association, it is cheering to find a master mind in science reverently upholding every word of the original, and giving it full weight—weighing truth not in our English translation, which errs often, but giving the original Hebrew word, and proving that science, without knowing it, is steadily travelling on the lines of Genesis. And when the order of animals in verses 24 and 25 is changed, he, like a reverent student, just as Sir Isaac Newton would have done, argues that the change of order there, as he shows it to be, of Herbivora, creeping things, and Carnivora, to Carnivora, Herbivora, and creeping things in verse 25, probably may indicate the order of time in verse 24, and the order of rank in verse 25.

Would to God that all theological professors had half as much reverence for the Bible. It is very sad to find, first that only a few preachers go in a difficulty to the original Hebrew or Greek, and, secondly, to find even theological students taught that the general spirit only of the Bible is correct, and the Old Testament does not teach much spiritual truth, and that science is at distinct variance with Scripture.

Let such half-educated, or badly educated theological students read Sir William Dawson's book, and holy reverence for the Word will certainly arise in their hearts, if they are truly born of God. If not born of God, of course we do not expect such reverence; their studies are only mystical confusions, until born of the Spirit.

Let those interested in the history of the animal creation and the introduction of man begin at page 230 in Sir William Dawson's "Origin of the World," and they will feel that commentators in times past have been only touching mere outlines. The careful student may most profitably mark his Bible with the Hebrew terms given and translated by Sir William. The Bible is the axiom never to be over-ruled or altered by Sir William—just as many half-and-half scholars make their own "reason" the axiom and the Bible the movable shadow that is to be pushed about to suit their reason or their ignorance, called by them their learning. No man ever makes progress in the Bible till he has settled the point that Scripture, and Scripture only, is the axiom.

HOMES FOR THE AGED POOR.—From these Homes, situated at St. Peter's Park, Minford-gardens, Shepherd's Bush, and St. George's-road, Notting-hill, and containing altogether 114 inmates, came recently to St. John's Hall, Princes-road, Notting-hill, sixty-eight of the old folk, the oldest of whom was eighty-six, whilst the venerable appearance of all excited the sympathy of those present. After an ample tea there was a varied entertainment, with addresses by Rev. Dr. Thornton and others; and this was followed by a distribution of warm garments and other comforts, the absent ones being included in the generous benefaction. Hot coffee, cake, &c., concluded an evening, the pleasant memory of which will not soon be forgotten. Omnibuses conveyed the old people to and from the Homes.

EVANGELISTIC WORK in NEW YORK.

The great hall of Cooper Union was packed to overflowing on Sunday evening, January 16, and a large number of persons were unable to gain admittance at all. Hundreds of people remained standing from a quarter before eight until nine o'clock, manifesting the deepest interest in all that transpired. Mr. Ira D. Sankey sang several solos, and addressed the great congregation, who hung upon every word uttered by the evangelist. Prior to Mr. Sankey's remarks Rev. Dr. Josiah Strong, Secretary of the United States Evangelical Alliance, urged the claims of God upon al present by right of the Divine creation, preservation and redemption.

When an opportunity was given to those anxious to become Christians, and so to come into right relation with God, to indicate their desire, men and women on the stage and in all parts of the hall rose from their seats to do so. Several hundred persons remained for a further service, when Mr. Sankey, Mr. W. E. Dodge, and Rev. Dr. Strong set forth in five-minute talks the way of salvation by faith in Christ Jesus. It was evident that many in the audience were listening with a deep sense of the solemnity of the truths presented. We are sure that the Word of God, thus lovingly and earnestly enforced, will accomplish the highest purpose of Divine wisdom in the salvation of the unsaved. The meeting was in every respect an exhibition of evangelistic work that the most thoughtful Christian people should pray for, encourage, and support.

Interest was added to the occasion on Sunday last by the presence of Mr. W. Noble, on his way from Australia to his home in England, at the call of a sick wife. His labours were interrupted in Australia, where he has received marked tokens of the Divine favour in the success attending his efforts to reach the lost.

Since the beginning of these services in November last, some scores of persons have been personally conversed with by workers on the alert to reach inquiring ones. In the majority of such cases the names and addresses of the individuals thus conversed with have been taken and forwarded to Presbyterian pastors, who have been asked to visit them. In this way there has been promise of additions to the churches of the Presbytery of New York, under whose auspices the work is conducted and by whom the expense is borne.

The evangelistic services at the Central Presbyterian Church, Rev. Dr. Wilson, pastor, and conducted by Rev. B. Fay Mills, were largely attended both morning and evening on Sunday. Mr. Mills is a plain, straightforward, earnest and pointed preacher, and has great power over his hearers. The opening services promised well. Other churches might be mentioned in which evangelistic work is in progress.—New York Observer.

MANCHESTER Y.M.C.A.—The annual social meeting of this branch was held recently, when, says The Christian Commonwealth, the Bishop of Manchester gave an address, referring especially to the subject of emigration. His speech was frank, sensible, and vigorous, and caught the complete attention of the audience. The President of the Wesleyan Conference followed with a thoughtful address on reverence. Other addresses, and a concert, concluded a very pleasant evening.

THE McALL MISSION.—Those who are interested in this Mission will be glad to know that Mr. McAll has expressed his intention of visiting this country for about a fortnight, from the 21st of March next, and the London Ladies' Committee are making preparations for giving him a cordial reception, in the way of drawing-room meetings. Any friends willing to assist in this way, should lose no time in writing to Miss Cavendish, the honorary secretary, whose address is 19, Chester-street, Belgrave-square, S.W. It may be added that those who are about to visit Paris, and are interested in Christian work, should not fail to see for themselves one or more of these interesting mission services.

SAVED BY A HYMN.

A party of Northern tourists formed part of a large company gathered on the deck of an excursion steamer, that was moving slowly down the historic Potomac one beautiful evening in the summer of 1881. A gentleman had been delighting the party with his happy rendering of many familiar hymns, the last being the sweet petition, so dear to every Christian heart, "Jesus, lover of my soul."

The singer gave the first two verses with much feeling, and a peculiar emphasis upon the concluding lines that thrilled every heart. A hush had fallen upon the listeners that was not broken for some seconds after the musical notes had died away. Then a gentleman made his way from the outskirts of the crowd to the side of the singer, and accosted him with—

"Beg your pardon, stranger, but were you actively engaged in the late war?"

"Yes, sir," the man of song answered, courteously; "I fought under General Grant."

"Well," the first speaker continued, with something like a sigh, "I did my fighting on the other side, and think, indeed am quite sure, I was very near you one bright night eighteen years ago this very month. It was much such a night as this. If I am not mistaken, you were on guard duty. We of the South had sharp business on hand, and you were one of the enemy. I crept near your post of duty, my murderous weapon in my hand—the shadows hid me. Your beat led you into the clear light.

"As you paced back and forth you were humming the tune of the hymn you have just sung. I raised my gun and aimed at your heart, and I had been selected by our commander for the work because I was a sure shot. Then, out upon the night floated the words—

Cover my defenceless head
With the shadow of thy wing.

Your prayer was answered. I couldn't fire after that. And there was no attack made upon your camp that night. I felt sure, when I heard you sing this evening that you were the man whose life I was spared from taking."

The singer grasped the hand of the Southerner, and said with much emotion, "I remember the night very well, and distinctly the feeling of depression and loneliness with which I went forth to my duty. I knew my post was one of great danger, and I was more dejected than I remember to have been at any other time during the service. I paced my lonely beat, thinking of home and friends and all that life holds dear. Then the thought of God's care for all that He has created came to me with peculiar force. If He so cares for a sparrow, how much more for man created in his own image; and I sang the prayer of my heart, and ceased to feel alone.

"How the prayer was answered I never knew until this evening. My Heavenly Father thought best to keep the knowledge from me for eighteen years. How much of his goodness to us we shall be ignorant of until it is revealed by the light of eternity! 'Jesus, lover of my soul,' has been a favourite hymn; now it will be inexpressibly dear."

This incident was related to the writer by a lady who was one of the party on the steamer.—Friendly Greetings.

MR. SPURGEON ON PERFECTION.—If I had been my own saviour I should have given up the task long ago. We do meet some perfect friends sometimes; but none of us can talk much about perfection. My nature seems to have coats like an onion; if I take off one coat there is another and another. If you think less and less of yourselves, it is probably true that you are growing in grace; if you think more and more of yourselves, it is highly probable that you will become more proud than you used to be. Here is my comfort: "He will not fail nor be discouraged;" if He has begun with me, He will never say He is beaten. He has undertaken to make you and me perfectly pure without spot or wrinkle, and He will do it, brother; He will do it, sister; He has not grown weary or discouraged with us.

STITCH! STITCH! STITCH!

THERE is hope yet for those weary ones, of whose hopelessness, almost amounting to despair, Hood's "Song of the Shirt" is such a pathetic memorial. The Co-operative Needlewomen's Society stands in the breach between those who would cut down the price given for work to a starvation figure, and the hard-working and, for the most part, underpaid needlewomen.

For some time the Society had been making gentlemen's shirts and other things for one of the best known West-end shops, but having refused to do this work at the ruinously low rate subsequently proposed by the firm, it has lost this source of supply. Earnest appeal is therefore made to those who are constantly requiring needlework well done, and to whom the principle of the Society must commend itself. Miss Elizabeth Cobb, in writing concerning it, says: "It is not pretended that the work can be done more cheaply here than elsewhere. All that is promised is that both materials and work shall be the best possible for the price paid." The Society gives a fair wage for a day's work, dividing at the end of the year, in proportion to work done, any profits that may be made. The work-room (large and airy) in which skilled needlewomen do the work entrusted to them, is at 34, Brooke-street, Holborn, and the lady superintendent is Mrs. Alison.

SEAMEN IN BOMBAY.

WRITING from Grant-road, Bombay, on Jan. 3, in acknowledgment of a donation from one of ur readers, Rev. J. S. Stone says:—

Our seamen's work in Bombay is distinctly God's work. One year ago the present premises were taken. More than fifteen thousand men have visited the rooms, and nearly nine thousand have found their way into the Gospel meetings during this period. We have given every Thursday evening a Gospel tea to the men and boys who throng the docks. A missionary has been giving his whole time to visiting among the ships and steamers, and holding Gospel meetings six evenings a week during the entire year. Tracts, books and religious papers, and Bibles are regularly distributed. We humbly thank God that we have been permitted to hear the testimony of many who have found a Saviour in our little mission-room. The work done in the cause of temperance has attracted the attention of the police, who now recognise the Institution as a powerful reinforcement to their work as conservators of the public peace.

Sir Frank Souttar, the present Commissioner of Police, very kindly called at the Rest a few months ago and inquired into the workings of the Mission, expressing himself as much gratified with the influence of the Mission in diminishing drunkenness in the city. A drunken sailor is not a good representative of Christian England. Our aim is to exterminate the tribe. We seek to do this by the influences of the Gospel. We aim to preach it, talk it to individuals on board, in the Rest, in the hospital wards, in grog shops, or wherever we can find a sailor.

THE CHRISTIAN is a weekly visitor to our house, whence it finds its way to the Rest, and off to sea. It stirs us up at every visit to new zeal in this our joyful profession as "fishers of men," lest we be outdone by God's other workers in other lands. This kind of rivalry we believe to be righteous. Our present need is a suitable home for our work and workers, and means to support a married missionary. Miss Weston and other ladies have proved the power a Christian woman can exert over these homeless wanderers. My old friend, Mrs. May, of Calcutta, is equal to a score of ordinary men in this kind of work.

An occasional gift of tracts and papers would encourage us. As God opens the way we expect quietly to move on.

MESSRS FULLERTON AND SMITH

THESE evangelists have held a mission at Westbourne-grove Baptist Church, W. (Pastor, Rev. John Tuckwell), closing last Sunday week. Their services had been secured for a fortnight, but towards the close of the second week it was found that their labours were so blessed of God that they were prevailed upon to continue their stay for a third week.

On Saturday evenings services of song of an attractive character were given in the church to large and appreciative audiences. In addition to the morning and evening Sunday services, special services were held on the two last Sunday afternoons, to which men only were invited, and these were seasons of refreshing that will not be likely to pass from the memory of the many who were present.

At the close of the week-evening services, numbers who were anxious about their souls went into the vestries, where they were spoken to by Christian workers: many professed to find peace in believing. The closing service on the evening of Sunday week was deeply impressive. The inquiry meeting was held in the schoolroom, the vestries not being large enough to accommodate the numbers who remained.

MOVEMENTS IN MANITOBA.

DEAR SIR,—I desire to thank the friends who have, during the past year, so kindly sent parcels of tracts, papers, &c., to my address, and to assure them that this literature is carefully distributed. The books which have been sent for the use of the Women's Christian Temperance Union are still doing a good work, although the first Union, through removal of members and other causes, no longer exists. About two months ago, Mrs. Youmans, the W.C.T.U. lecturer from Ontario, on her way across the continent, after a visit to California, stopped here to do a little work for Christ, and after a most earnest and convincing appeal on behalf of Gospel temperance, she succeeded in forming a new branch of the W.C.T.U., which we hope may be successful in its work of prevention and rescue. Its corresponding secretary is Miss Main.

A branch of the Y.M.C.A. has also been formed here lately, and the friends of the young are praying for its prosperity. Such a strong tide of worldliness and frivolity sets in here that many young men carefully reared in Christian homes are swept away in its current, and one's heart aches at the thought of the difficulty of ever getting them back. Any of your readers would be helping a good enterprise if they would send books, magazines, or illustrated papers, to the Brandon Y.M.C.A.

The opening of the Canada Pacific Railway, from Ocean to Ocean has inaugurated a new era in this country. Tea trains pass us nearly every week during the season, bearing the freights of six or seven steamers and sailing vessels, from Yokohama to the large cities of our Dominion as well as to the United States; during the autumn all the fish-canning establishments in British Columbia sent their wares viâ the Canada Pacific Railway, to the Eastern provinces and to Britain.

A most interesting missionary meeting was held in the Methodist church here, early in the autumn, at which three Indian chiefs, in their native costumes, assisted. The well-known devoted missionary, Rev. John M'Dougall, of the Morley Mission, interpreted the eloquent, and impassioned speeches of these three men, who had gone through all the horrors of the late rebellion in the North-west, side by side with him, and who resisted all the temptations of their savage friends and former allies, for the love of Christ, and in compliance with the teaching of their beloved leader. We need missionaries, and we need help for missions already established. Will your readers remember our North-west Indians in their prayers, and in their mission projects?—Faithfully yours,

(MRS.) ANNIE DAVIDSON.

THE LEYSIAN MISSION.

THE first report of this Mission, which is carrying on the work founded by the late George Vigeon, and continued for many years with great zeal and self-sacrifice by Miss Hastings, shows that the ground occupied (Whitecross-street), and the manner of working, are likely to yield good fruit. On Sunday mornings, amidst the bustle of the closing market, workers are canvassing for the Bible-class, held at half-past twelve o'clock. The report makes a strong, but, we believe, quite true statement, worth consideration, when it says, "Our neighbour, the Freethought Hall, has not the enormous influence that some free-thinking magazines pretend. There is far more practical agnosticism due to the un-Christianness of church and chapel goers than to all the atheistic writings and talkings. One respectable but temporally destitute member of the Bible-class, said his bitterest trial was the evident disgust, almost contempt, with which people with Bible and Prayer-book under their arms regarded him."

About eighty children attend the Sunday-school prayer-meeting; a mission service follows in the evening. Mothers' meetings, Medical Mission, Band of Hope, and temperance meetings are also held on successive days. On Thursday evenings a supper consisting of a large cup of cocoa and a loaf of buttered bread is given to about one hundred of the most destitute neighbours. Such labour cannot fail in blessing. The Mission Home is at 199, Whitecross-street, and the secretary and treasurer is Mr. F. A. Holman, 23, St. Mary-axe, E.C.

BISHOP TAYLOR'S STEAMER.

WRITING from Madeira on his voyage to Liberia, Bishop Taylor says:—

In my short letter for THE CHRISTIAN, I did not refer to the naming of the steamer. I now see, in looking over papers sent me from America, that the donors there are voting to call her "Bishop William Taylor." I move an amendment to that motion, viz., to strike out "Bishop William" and insert "Annie"—Annie Taylor. As I will be personally on the Congo rivers, my name and that of the steamer being identical will lead to misunderstanding as to my whereabouts.

I prefer that the honour be conferred on my wife. She is the wife of my youth, and while she devoted her whole connubial affection and life to me, it was with a distinct understanding that the claims of God on me, as an ambassador for Christ, were supreme, and that, therefore, she would never hinder but always help me to fulfil them; and in our happy union of over forty years I have never failed to fill an appointment for preaching or other ministerial duty on her account. My foreign work has cost us a separation, more distressing to mind and heart of both of us, than the pains of a hundred deaths, with occasional meetings and partings which tended to increase the agony; yet to this day I never heard her object to my going or staying, nor utter a murmur on account of my absence. A doctor of divinity said to her one day, "Mrs. Taylor, I can't help but think hard of Mr. Taylor for going away, and leaving you alone so long." She replied, "Well, Doctor, he never went away without my consent, nor stayed longer than I allowed him to stay; and if I don't complain, I don't think anybody else has any right to complain." The Doctor subsided.

Annie Taylor, under God, has brought up our four sons in my absence, amid the demoralising influences of Californian life, so that in their manly character and life they are an honour to their parents—total abstainers from all intoxicating drinks, members of the Church, one a successful minister of the Gospel, and all witnesses for Jesus; so I respectfully submit that your readers shall vote for Annie Taylor as the name of our steamer.

[Of course our readers, as well as the American friends, will be only too delighted to fall in with the excellent suggestion of the worthy Bishop, so touchingly supported. We are still open to receive any help towards the equipment of the Annie

MARYLEBONE MEDICAL MISSION,

43, CARLISLE STREET, EDGWARE ROAD, N.W.

OBJECT:—Preaching the Gospel and Healing the Sick Poor.

Average Number of Patients, 400 a Week.

All the patients are brought under the sound of the Gospel. Only the very poorest are attended. There are seven Gospel Services every week. Sickness and poverty are the only recommendation any patient requires. It would be a positive blessing if we could have a medical mission such as this in every poor district in London.

"From what I have myself witnessed, I have come to the conclusion that the union of the two agencies—healing and preaching—is almost absolutely essential if the lowest are to be reached."—Earl of Shaftesbury, K.G.

FUNDS TO CARRY ON THE WORK ARE MUCH NEEDED.

Contributions will be thankfully received by Dr. R. Chambers, at the Mission; or by the Treasurer, Dr. E. Parker Young, 30, Westbourne-square, W.; also by Messrs. Morgan & Scott, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C.

Mission to Deep-Sea Fishermen.

"AS WELL FOR THE BODY AS FOR THE SOUL."

Until five years ago upwards of 12,000 smacksmen toiled in the North Sea at all seasons, in all weathers, in constant danger, and not only cut off from the joys and comforts of home, but at two days' distance from medical or surgical aid. To day seven Mission vessels cruise with the fleets (running the same risks, exposed to the same furious gales as the trawlers themselves) in order—

1. That injuries and illness may receive prompt help and healing.
2. That true friends may supplant and banish from the fleets that enemy of the English smacksmen, that pest of the North Sea—the foreign coper, or floating grog shop.
3. That dull and monotonous lives may be cheered and brightened by their presence and ministry.

☞ During the year 1886, more than 3,000 cases of sickness and accidents have been successfully treated in the Dispensary on board the various Mission vessels.

THE "DAILY TELEGRAPH" says:—
"The Mission to Deep-Sea Fishermen has been instrumental in making the fishl[illegible] purveyors of fiery spirit and bad tobacco—the Dutch copers. It cares for the men, and has its [illegible]."

SOME NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

"In 'James Scott, a Labourer for God,' Dr. A. Bonar finds a theme almost as congenial to his pen as Robert Murray McCheyne. Glasgow, the theatre of much evangelistic effort of the best kind, has known no more devoted or successful labourer among her lowliest than the subject of this memoir. A greater testimony to the worth of this ardent young spirit than Mr. Moody's friendship and commendation is the fact that no fewer than 30,000 people lined the streets on the day of his funeral, while the procession alone numbered 6,000. The memoir is in every way an inspiration to the love of man and the service of God."

Nonconformist and Independent, Feb. 3, 1887.

"The brief sketch of the life of 'James Scott, a Labourer for God,' by Rev. Dr. Bonar, is interesting, and full of pathetic beauty. Mr. Scott seems to have been a man of intense Christian enthusiasm. . . . Side by side with Mr. Moody, Mr. Scott laboured till strength broke down. . . . A helpful book for Christian workers."

Christian World.

"Many who knew and loved him, and others to whom his name has been familiar, will welcome this biography of 'James Scott, a Labourer for God,' from the competent pen of Dr. Andrew A. Bonar. He describes the progress of the work; gives details and incidents illustrative of the spirit, tact, energy, and success with which Mr. Scott performed his varied and arduous labours, till he was called aside, and his short—but useful—life terminated. Dr. Bonar was peculiarly qualified to write the life of Mr. Scott; and he has produced a very interesting and useful volume."—North British Daily Mail.

———:o:———

"A loving tribute to a true disciple who wrought 'with both hands earnestly' for Christ. Mr. Scott was specially called to follow up Messrs. Moody & Sankey's labours in Glasgow. Probably his unwearied devotion wore out his strength, and was one main cause of his early removal. In a few years he did more than many even of Christ's working disciples do in a long life-time of service; and he was early called to his rest. This book is fitted to give a gracious impulse toward fuller service. No hand could have written this inspiring biography better than Dr. Bonar's."—The Baptist.

———:o:———

"The memory of this heroic soul will long be treasured in Glasgow and Scotland, and wherever he was known. Doubtless he is now amongst those who shine as the firmament and as the stars for ever and ever. If the record were to produce a dozen such as he, our country would be vastly the richer."—Home Evangel.

"From Messrs. Morgan & Scott we have a touching tribute to one who filled up a short life with bright and blessed service. The volume is entitled, 'James Scott, a Labourer for God,' and is from the loving pen of Dr. Andrew Bonar. Mr. Scott was converted through the instrumentality of a devoted 'elder,' Mr. John Muir, of Glasgow, who visited him as a 'seat-holder,' and unfolded to him the way of life. A rich encouragement this to the 'elders of the church' to use their office well! Who shall tell how many James Scotts are just ripe for such influence as theirs?"—British Messenger.

———:o:———

"The subject of this Memoir was early brought to know his Saviour; and, having taken his stand for Him, he henceforth sought to live that He alone might be glorified. His name will ever be associated with the free breakfasts in Glasgow, where tens of thousands heard from his manly lips the simple Gospel. Especially among the lower classes was he beloved; but rich and poor alike benefited by his ministry."

Young Men's Christian Association Monthly Review.

———:o:———

"An admirable sketch of the life and work of one who figured largely in the work carried on by Messrs. Moody and Sankey. The Spirit of God was upon Mr. Scott, and made him the instrument of great blessing to others. Our readers will be glad to peruse this brief account of one who was known and esteemed by so many. It is both refreshing and stimulating."

P. P. BLISS: HIS LIFE and LIFE-WORK. By Major D. W. Whittle, and Rev. W. Guest. With Portraits of Mr. Bliss, Mrs. Bliss, and their two Children.

"Not only America, but England, has been touched to its heart's core by the songs and melodies of Philip Paul Bliss. They are whistled by the plough-boy, and hummed by the workman at his home or in his shop, in countries which the author has never visited. We have heard them sung among the Communists in Belleville; and Australia resounds with them. Far above all, they have been the means employed to awaken religious convictions in slumbering souls among all ranks and classes."—The Record.

PASTOR BLUMHARDT and HIS WORK. By Rev. W. Guest. With details of the Work of Faith Healing as pursued during Blumhardt's pastorate at Möttlingen and at Bad Boll. With Introduction by Rev. C. H. Blumhardt. With Portrait of Pastor Blumhardt.

"I have come to think of Boll, since visiting it, as in many ways one of the most interesting places in Europe—interesting not only for its natural loveliness, its past history, its warm fellowship, and cherished memories, but for its noble testimony to Christian faith, and for the problems in the deepest things of Life and Truth, which it leaves for after years to solve; and certainly no holiday could be better spent than with the little Colony of God's people, who are always to be found gathered round the old Pastor, whose life-work all these years has been this beautiful and mysterious ministry of Prayer.

"The good Pastor himself, alas! since these words were first transcribed from my note-book, has been taken to his rest. He was a remarkable man, and leaves a work behind him too remarkable to cease. And though the visitor now will miss the characteristic figure, he will find there the same spirit and faith."

HENRY MOORHOUSE; The English Evangelist. Fifth Thousand. By Rev. John Macpherson, Author of "The Christian Hero," &c.

"It is a beautiful life that is here described; and after reading it there is no difficulty in discovering why Henry Moorhouse had so much success given him as an evangelist on both sides of the Atlantic. His conversion was very thorough. At once he consecrated himself, soul and body, to the service of his Master. He had been forgiven much; and he loved much."—Christian Work.

THE Y.W.C.A. IN IRELAND.

A MISSION for ladies and women, in connection with the Young Women's Christian Association in Ireland, is being held in Dublin and Cork. The Dublin portion closed on Saturday night, Miss Bell and Miss Hull, of Eastbourne, conducting the mission services. Meetings have been held three times a day, and the attendance has been large, specially at the evening hour when the shop assistants have been able to get out; the services have been characterised by great earnestness and deep solemnity, and several young women have professed to have found peace in believing.

Five drawing-room meetings were held in Dublin, and one at Ardmore, and they were crowded; the major proportion being young ladies. No one present at the one in Fitzwilliam-square could help being struck by the very great attention these fashionable young ladies paid to the service, and the solemn appeals to their highest interests, to their loving Saviour's claims, and to the eternity before them, by Mrs. Hatt Noble, Miss Bell, and Miss Hull, can never be forgotten.

Early in the week 180 secretaries and district referees of the Association in Ireland presented their beloved president, Mrs. Hatt Noble, with a splendid set of books, a golden Association medallion, and their photographs, "as an expression of gratitude to the Lord who has fed us these years by the hand of his servant."

SCANDINAVIAN SAILORS.

THE NEW TEMPERANCE HOME.

AFTER six years' earnest labour on behalf of Scandinavian sailors at 88 and 90, Leman-street, it has become necessary, from want of room there, to build a new Home. An extensive site has been secured near the entrance to the East and West India Docks, and building operations will be immediately commenced. A plain, substantial structure, capable of accommodating 150 men, is to be erected, at a cost, including site, of £8000, of which £5000 has been already subscribed. The new Home will retain the old name, but will be open to any respectable sailor, irrespective of nationality, who complies with its rules.

Last year, about 1200 seamen found a temporary rest at Leman-street. Of these 900 paid in full, 170 partly, and 130 were destitute or shipwrecked, and consequently could pay nothing for their board and lodging; besides which they had to be helped with some clothing in order to enable them to go to sea. More than 2000 meals were also given during the year to poor people who were unable to procure food elsewhere.

The success of this Sailors' Home, which in its earlier days was largely helped by Count Bentinck and Colonel Bentinck, and recently by Lord Blantyre, Messrs. Denny, Carnegie, and others, is due to the earnest solicitude of Miss Agnes Hedenström for the welfare of her sailor countrymen; she is most anxious that the new Home, which will be self-supporting, should be opened free of debt.

THE BAND OF HOPE UNION.—At the annual soiree last week the Hon. Conrad Dillon said if Parliament were to do anything towards lessening the sale of intoxicants the voice of the people must be heard, and public opinion brought to bear more strongly upon the Senate.

THE IXOPO MISSION, NATAL.—Mrs. Clarke, writing from 20, Pierremont-crescent, Darlington, with reference to the announcement that she and her husband had returned home from "Ikwesi, Lamaci," says:—We began the mission at Ikwesi, where Mr. Aitchison now is; but we have now come from the Ixope division, where we have three stations. Our stay in England will necessarily be short, but we shall be glad if we can do anything while here to excite interest in foreign missions. Mr. Clarke will address any meetings at places

A REMARKABLE YEAR'S WORK.

AT the annual meeting of the Finsbury-park Y.M.C.A. on Thursday last, Mr. T. A. DENNY, who presided, referring to the report just issued, said he saw the work of the Association was described under no less than forty-four headings. That portion which is distinctly spiritual, and which affects the members, naturally claims the first attention. The total number of members and associates is four hundred and twenty-six, and forty of these have given their hearts to Christ during the year. Prayer-meetings and Bible-classes, largely attended, help to spiritual growth and activity. This is manifested in many departments of evangelistic work, both in the hall and open-air. Perhaps the most striking is the service on Sunday evenings, of the happy results of which many proofs have been received, in the thankful witness of those who have been converted. "The outcome of the past twelve months is more than tongue can tell." There is an early meeting for prayer, attended by from one to two hundred people, and, at the meetings following "without exception, souls have been won for Christ." The sight of a sea of faces Sunday after Sunday, the larger proportion of these unsavesd, timulates the workers to prayer, and the result is as given above. A new feature of the inner work may be mentioned—the fitting up of a small room, into which enquirers may be taken by workers—as one that will prove exceedingly helpful. Every class, not forgetting the children, seem to have been thought of in the arrangements of this Y.M.C.A. Then there is the other side of the work—the educational and recreative, the fullest opportunity being given in the programme for the cultivation of the mind and the healthful exercise of the body.

With regard to all these, the Chairman expressed hearty satisfaction that the spiritual life of the Association was marked by such vitality. You may have all education, and know all mysteries, he said, but unless you, whether young men or old, have the one thing needful, it is no good. Seek in all things to be followers of the Lord Jesus Christ—to have your names written in heaven, and in the hearts of people down here on earth.

Dr. H. G. GUINNESS, referring to the remarkable report of work, said: There are, it is true, dangers in connection with this. There are the contemplative and the active workers, and my sympathies are mostly with the Marthas and Peters, to whom, notwithstanding failings, the Lord says: "Feed my lambs, feed my sheep." Take care the work is really done for Jesus' sake. There are some who must work at something, and then, because they have once begun Christian work, they will not give it up; and some work for applause. It has often done my heart good to go into Whitechapel, to George-yard, and there to see the saintly George Holland labouring earnestly where there are none to applaud. Then be workers together with Jesus. Paul said, "We are ambassadors for God," and those who are his are also called "fellow-workers with God." Not God fellow-workers with us. The distinction is great. "Nay, but as Captain am I come," said the Lord in answer to Joshua. We are also workers instead of Christ. The Lord has given to us the privilege of being his representatives. We ought, therefore, to be like Him. Again we must work by Jesus. When in Bendigo, Victoria, I went down the Garden Gully gold mine. In the quartz I could see little specks of gold glittering; but before the gold can be got, the quartz has to be bored and crushed, and this is done by complicated machinery, driven by steam. On reaching the surface again, I went to the engine-house, whence came all the power that drove the machinery 500 or 600 feet below ground, and struck all those tremendous blows by which the quartz is broken and crushed. And I learnt in conversation with the engineer, that though the machinery might be kept at work, making just as much noise, and striking as many and loud blows, with a pressure only 20 lbs. to the square inch, yet a pressure of 50 lbs. was necessary to make these blows effective. Oh, I thought, it is because we Christians are sometimes working at a pressure of only 20 lbs. that we fail. We need a pressure of 50 lbs. to the square inch—we need to be filled with the Holy Ghost. Then will our work tell, and then by and by we shall hear those words: "Well done, good and faithful servant!"

Dr. Murphy, and Dr. Draper, of New York, also spoke, and a most successful meeting was concluded by some earnest words from Mr. R. C. Morgan, who strongly urged the claims of the Association upon the support of the inhabitants, especially parents, in the neighbourhood of Finsbury Park.

RICHARD WEAVER IN ST. GILES.

WITH much pleasure and thankfulness we find this veteran evangelist again in our midst. Whatever may be his bodily ailments, it is certain that the spiritual vigour of our old friend is unimpaired. Of this we have abundant proof in the great blessing that is now attending his labours in the St. Giles Mission Chapel. Christians are being invigorated, and souls are being saved. We much regret the enforced absence of our pastor, Mr. Geo. Hatton, but our heavenly Father, it would seem, is giving us a double share of his own rich presence.

Sunday week was a grand day. Some were saying they had never heard the Lord appealing through Richard so powerfully before. In the evening several retired into the vestry to hear more of this Jesus. Our brother had been rather shorter in his address than was his wont, owing to physical weakness; but the text, "What must I do to be saved?" had gone home to the heart. And we felt as we listened to his earnest appeal, Surely none can leave this place unconscious of the strivings of the Holy Spirit.

The wave of blessing thus started has flowed on during the week; but our brother is feeling very poorly, and we are anxious as to whether he will hold out. We are looking to the Divine Physician for sustaining power, that many more may be added to the vast number who look to our brother as their spiritual parent. Will your readers pray for this work now going on, and for our brother whom God is so abundantly using, and whom we hope to retain with us until the 19th instant. A. W. B.

DEAR SIR.—I was much pleased with your admirable sketch of our old and esteemed friend, Richard Weaver, in last week's issue. During the past week our brother has been preaching with singular power and pathos at the headquarters of St. Giles Christian Mission, in Little Wild-street, Drury-lane. His health, however, is sadly shattered, and he much needs a season of quiet and rest in some warm corner. Indeed, if great care is not taken with our friend, the results may be serious, and the Church of Christ may lose one of its most devoted and successful evangelists. Surely many of his old friends would be pleased to provide the wherewithal for such a purpose. I should be delighted to contribute £5.—Sincerely yours,

GEO. HATTON.

4, Ampton-street, Regent-square, W.C.

[Our earnest brother has mainly worked among the poorer classes, which makes it all the more needful that Christian friends should help to smooth his declining years.—ED.]

MR. MANSFIELD, the Marlborough-street police magistrate, has lately given some remarkable decisions that are calculated to bring the administration of justice into contempt. On Jan. 29 he sentenced to seven days' hard labour a "respectable-looking woman, unknown to the gaolers," whose alleged crime was begging, which she denied. But his sympathy was so drawn out towards a young woman "dressed in red, with a red Glengarry cap, who looked round the court with a self-satisfied air, refused her address, and turned up her nose at the gaolers," that, although she pleaded guilty to accosting gentlemen at one a.m., he thought fit to discharge her.

Letters to the Editor.

EMIGRATION TO MANITOBA.

Sir,—Will you kindly allow me to draw attention to a personally-conducted party to Canada, I am arranging for? After four and a half years' residence in Manitoba, I am spending the winter with my friends in England, and purpose returning to the North-West, sailing from Liverpool on March 17.

Since I came home I have received a vast amount of correspondence and inquiries relating to the Canadian North-West, and find a large number wish to go out next spring. I am induced to organise this party, believing that in this way I can be of service to those who accompany me, especially if they are unaccustomed to travelling; and believing also that I can, whilst en route, give them much valuable information regarding the country, and advice such as will enable them more readily to determine upon arrival at their destination what is best to be done. The members of the party will as far as possible be berthed together on the voyage, in the respective classes by which they travel.

In a short letter like this I cannot enter into details regarding the country, its capabilities, and prospects; but may just say there are unlimited openings for those who propose engaging in agricultural pursuits. Female domestic servants are also in great demand, and receive high wages. A Government official in Winnipeg asked me to bring out one hundred women, and promised to find work for them all before leaving England. If any of your readers have serious thoughts of going to Canada, I shall be glad to give them any information I can upon receipt of a stamped directed envelope.—Yours truly,

A. J. McMillan, Hon. Sec. Manitoba

LEAVENED BREAD.

Sir,—In these days, when so many among us "will not endure the sound doctrine," I rejoice that you stand firmly by the belief that "all Scripture is given by inspiration of God."

A propos of your editorial remarks on the paper appearing in The Sunday Magazine on "The First Story Writer for Children, and some of the Stories he told," I would draw your attention to the following extracts from "Notes on Scripture Lessons" for January. These "Notes" are published by the Sunday School Union, and are intended for the use of Sunday-school teachers all over the world. Regarding the Creation, we read (pp. 18, 19):—

> Nor is the theory of evolution (except in its extreme form) opposed to that of creation; and, so far as evolution is true and provable, there is no more in it than has for ages been implied in the word "event," from e-venio=I come out of—i.e., everything is connected with something that preceded. Nothing stands alone.

How does this harmonise with Heb. xi. 3? "What is seen hath not been made out of things which do appear."

Regarding the fall of man we read (p. 21):—

> The great Father is here instructing his children in the mystery of the first temptation, and the first sin, in such language as they could best understand at the time when the words were first written: that the style is pictorial and symbolical; that, as Langé remarks, the fact of the first temptation is the symbol of every human temptation, the fact of the first fall is the symbol of every human transgression; the great mistake that lay in the first human sin is the symbol of every effect of sin.
> Gen. iii. 1.—"The serpent." Notes: "The symbol of man's great enemy, Satan."
> Gen. iii. 1.—"He said." Notes: "This symbolic form."
> Gen. iii. 2.—"The woman said." Notes: "We understand heart work here rather than actual speech."
> Gen. iii. 8.—"They heard the voice of the Lord." Notes: "How gracious of the Father to stoop to speak in such infantine words!"
> Gen. iii. 14.—"The Lord God said unto the serpent." Notes: "This symbolic form of the declaration of a curse upon the tempting agent."

Regarding Cain and Abel, we read, p. 24, the adaptation of this narrative "to an infantine age, so that its mode of speech almost approaches the allegorical."

> Gen. iv. 6.—"The Lord said." Notes: "We do not understand that there was an audible voice; rather the 'still small voice' within."

These "Notes" are read by hundreds of teachers, and influence, through them, thousands of scholars; and, I think, some notice should be taken of their tendency to regard the opening chapters of Holy Writ as a mere picture book. As you well said, such teaching "lowers the inspiration of Scripture, and must be full of peril to those who listen to it." We do well to heed the exhortation, "Hold fast the form of sound words."

Yours, P.

SELF-SUPPORT ON THE CONTINENT.

Dear Sir,—I notice so often in the columns of your paper appeals for helpers in the great mission field abroad. There are many who would willingly answer by giving their service, but the obstacle in their way is the want of "means." The missionary societies are all calling for funds, and many regrets are expressed that they cannot send more workers, on account of the want of money to provide for them.

Many would prefer to support themselves rather than depend on a Society. Is there no employment possible for lady-workers on the Continent, by which they might earn sufficient to support themselves, and use such time as they could spare, in work for Christ? We are willing to use hands or head for honest work, and, with the love of Christ in our hearts, and his Spirit to guide us, surely it would not be in vain. There are so many villages and towns in Italy and other countries where the people are willing to learn the truth, but none are there to tell it them. Can any of your readers suggest a means of self-support on the Continent?—Very truly yours, M. E. D.

SPIRITUALISM.

Sir,—In justice to humanity, and in vindication of the truth of the atonement of Jesus Christ, it occurs to me very strongly that immediate action should be taken by ministers of all denominations against the baneful teachings of Spiritualism. It seems to be growing rapidly all around us. Men who once possessed earnestness for Christ's cause have backslidden into the meshes of this too often eternally ruinous practice; and not only men, but women are influenced, and so controlled as to show signs of insanity. Children, too, are included in the category—as they are about to open a "Lyceum" in London for the training of the young in what is anything but elevating, involving possible destruction, unless they should see their error in time. The most terrible fact is, that all those given to communication with "spirits" have really to consign themselves to a "passive state" before any manifestation can take place.

Now, in order to stem this increasing current of cunningly-devised infatuation and curse, all ministers should frequently make it a point to allude to the subject, to rescue the unwary from a source and influence so deceptive and disastrous in results. In a leading Spiritualistic periodical the following appeared very recently:—

> "The time has come to take a decided stand against the introduction of Christ an dogma into the teachings of Spiritualism." "False religions, of which Christianity is the most flagrant." "The 'name of Jesus' has been the cause of more blood-hed these 1800 years than any other one thing, and the mischief is not yet ended. Let it be the sacred duty of every true spiritualist to end the sanguinary scene as soon as possible."

It is time someone came forward to stay, if possible, the progress of this demoralising infliction, for these teachings not only ignore Christ as the Redeemer, but encourage infidelity; and, as one proof, in their periodicals "Ingersoll's" works are to the fore.

I trust, sir, the importance of immediate action will not be overlooked, and by your powerful aid, and united effort on the part of Christ's children, this growing conspiracy, in which the wily arts of the enemy are fully shown, may be nipped in its beginnings.

Yours, &c., C. C.

DO RIGHT!

A MESSAGE TO OUR YOUNG MEN.

Do right, though all the world entreat to wrong,
Though Pleasure, with her sweet, seductive song,
Lure thy charmed footsteps from the narrow way,
In devious paths, flower-edged, to step and stray;
Crying and calling, "Life is full of sorrow,
Enjoy to-day—repent, if need, to-morrow."
Ah! heed her not. Her sun goes down in night.

Do right, though Mammon, with compelling voice,
Bids thee, young man, in thy young strength rejoice,
Buy, sell, get gain, hoard lucre, gather pelf,
Jostle and crowd, care only for thyself,
Harden thy heart to Mercy's gentle call,
Fill all thy barns—ah! if this life were all!
If God of thee thy soul require this night,
Whose then shall these things be? Young man, do right.

Do right, though Fame with trumpet call allure
From Honour's path, from the plain path and sure
Of conscious virtue. Heed not thou the call:
Stand by the right. Suffer no bond or thrall
To hinder thy free course. Be true, live pure,
And thy good life in blessing shall endure
When Fame's poor laurels shall have felt death's blight.
Oh, strong in youth! Young man, be good, do right.

The World, the Flesh, the Devil, these are they
Who tempt, beguile, deceive their easy prey.
Too late! oh youth! thou'lt learn how they betray—
Naught can they give like that they take away.
Heed not their call. Resist the power of wrong.
Heed thou the Christ, and in his strength be strong.
Enrol thyself beneath his cross of might,
And in his Name, young man, be good, do right.

MISSION to the UPPER ZAMBESI.

In connection with this Mission, which four years since Mons. and Mdme. Coillard went forth to establish, there are now six Europeans and two Basuto evangelists, while three missionaries, one a medical man, are now leaving France for Africa. From a little narrative of the work just published, we learn that after many difficulties the Zambesi was crossed on August 21, 1885, the missionaries being welcomed by the chiefs, who declared that the country was before them—they could go where they chose. The two Basuto evangelists were residing at Mambora, but later on one would go and labour somewhere in the valley above the Gonye Falls. At the important port of Sesheke, the official residence of fifteen chiefs, buildings of a temporary character have been put up for the missionary who remains there. The population is scattered over an immense tract of country, more than 800 miles in length, and requires a band of energetic workers to evangelise it.

M. Coillard intended to proceed to Lialui, the capital, where he had previously been welcomed by the king, to endeavour to bring about a reconciliation between the chiefs. In consequence of recent disturbances, "murder and theft are," he says, "common things." But this is not the worst. Villages had been destroyed. "When I went to see a sick man, I found the village in ruins; the chief and many of his principal men had been brutally murdered, women and children and the cattle were all brought into the camp to be disposed of by the king. We could have wept when we saw them brought in like a flock of sheep, for he has sworn to spare neither age nor sex." Such is the condition of this portion of Africa, "dark, chained by superstition and vice, suffering and dying."

"I wish," says M. Coillard, in conclusion, "I could speak like an angel in pleading for those Zambesian regions." Mr. R. H. Hunter (27, Jamaica-street, Glasgow) wishes to raise a fund of £500 for the support of this Mission, which, though under the direction of the Paris Evangelical Missionary Society, does not share in the MISSION BANDS.

A CONVENTION of Mission Bands and Christian workers from the Wesleyan Methodist churches of North, East, and South-East London, was held on Saturday last at Hackney-road Wesleyan Chapel. The proceedings gave evidence of much earnestness and heartiness on the part of these brethren.

The object of the gathering cannot be better stated than by giving the titles of four papers read in the course of the afternoon and evening meetings, the attendance on the latter occasion being very large—"The relation of Mission Bands to our ordinary services," "Auxiliaries to Aggressive Work," "How Saturday evenings may be best utilised for Church Work," and "Errors in Open-air Work."

In regard to the first of these Rev. J. R. BERRY pointed out that, while the day had passed away when ministers were considered to have fulfilled their duty by preaching two sermons on Sunday, there is work for every one whose heart has been touched with a live coal from the altar of Divine love. Mission bands, he argued, are part and parcel of the organisation of a healthy Christian Church. Saved themselves, Christians should go forth to save others; and there is abundant success for all who truly preach Christ crucified. All their efforts should be subsidiary to the one purpose of bringing the people within the sound of the Gospel.

Rev. J. H. MORGAN, in leading the discussion of the second subject, condemned the waste so conspicuously manifest in the fact that the churches and chapels, erected at such great cost, are for the most part open only three or four hours in the whole week. "Why not use them continually?" He advocated the opening of reading-rooms (without amusements, which it is not the business of the church to provide), in order to maintain their hold upon the senior scholars; and slate clubs and similar agencies as well calculated to attract adults.

The address which excited most interest was that by Rev. T. F. RAWLINGS, on "How Saturday evenings may be best utilised." He said it was their duty, as Christians, to endeavour to counteract the evil influences abounding on all sides, and this by something attractive, yet consistent with the dignity and purity, and the character of the Church. Our churches ought to be not merely places where sermons are preached and prayers made, but the home of all that is good. He then narrated his own experience last winter in the Hull circuit. Here in a very low neighbourhood a room was opened, and the average attendance night after night was from thirty-five to forty men, all frequenters of the public-house, where they would have been but for this effort. Even in the short time of one winter this proved a decided success.

A very animated discussion followed, covering also the ground of the previous paper. Mr. Rawlings had said, "You must allow smoking," and to this, as well as to the introduction of games, there was very strong objection from some, who found a leader in Rev. Mr. Ellis, superintendent of the circuit. They should stick, he urged, to practical, earnest Christianity. He would visit the public-houses, he would go wherever sin is to be found, but he could not say to the world, "I will meet you half way, and smoke the pipe or play dominoes with you." The outcome of a lengthened discussion was, as the chairman (Mr. J. M. Klenck) said, to show that all were agreed something ought to be done; that music, slate clubs, and such agencies as would promote thrift, were most useful auxiliaries in attracting working people. This, in numberless cases, was the first step to better things. Of that many illustrations were given in the course of the discussion. There was a general consensus of opinion, reverting to another subject, that earnest, working Christians must be total abstainers.

In his paper on "Errors in Open-air Work," Rev. C. CAINE referred to several points, such as going out in insufficient numbers, bad singing, and irregularity in marching, as likely to bring such effort into disrepute; therefore, productive

THE REVIVAL IN BROOKLYN.

LAST week we gave some particulars of the remarkable work of grace in progress at Dr. Talmage's Tabernacle, in connection with Dr. L. W. Munhall's Gospel Mission. Writing on Monday, January 24, a correspondent says:—

"Yesterday the 10.30 a.m. service lasted till 2 p.m. Dr. Talmage gave the right hand of fellowship to 342 new members as the first instalment of the result of the three weeks' work. Fully 2500 partook of the communion of the Lord's Supper. There never was such a meeting held in Brooklyn, if indeed in this country. At 3 p.m. Dr. Munhall preached to 4000 women, many of whom professed to accept the Saviour, and 23 united with the church. At night nearly 6000 people were packed into the church, many hundreds being turned away. Scores professed conversion, and 26 united with the church.

"The work is truly wonderful. The congregations, of course, are cosmopolitan, and doubtless many churches in Brooklyn will receive accessions, as well as those outside the city. As it looks now, the evangelists will go on for some weeks yet."

Destitute Children's Dinner Society.

THIS Society has in connection with it fifty-eight rooms, at which poor children can, for the sum of one penny, obtain a dinner consisting of Irish stew, vegetables, and rice. Last season 252,638 children availed themselves of this their only chance of a dinner, and their pence amounted to £513 12s. 10d., but this sum had to be supplemented by grants from the Society to the extent of £1340, in order to provide the whole cost, which is 3d. per head.

In a recent letter to The Times, appealing for increased support to the Society, the Baroness Burdett Coutts says: "These rooms bring within the reach of children some of those sweet home influences which warmth, light, and cheering words impart, and whatever the position of a child may be, that which brings a sense of pleasure into its life brings to it a healthy moral and physical tonic."

The children are for the most part from our Board and other schools, with a large percentage of other wayfarers about the streets, who contrive here and there to pick up a penny; but not unfrequently the cry of the penniless ones is heard and answered, with the supply of food of which it is so much in need. Mr. H. Mordon Carr, 89, St. George's-square, S.W., is the secretary.

THE "KAPUNDA" DISASTER.—Mrs. Meredith writes from the Princess Mary Village Homes, Addlestone:—Four well-trained girls from the Village Homes left in the ill-fated vessel; we are thankful to say they were of the number of our inmates who gave promise of useful Christian lives. We are deeply troubled at the loss of those whom we have loved and worked for.

WORKING LADS' INSTITUTE.—The visitors to the conversazione held last week in this Institute for the benefit of errand boys and others in their leisure hours, had an opportunity of inspecting the new premises, including class and work rooms, museum, dormitories, and swimming bath. Since the opening of the new building 1400 lads have attended, and for their instruction about sixteen evening classes are held. There are twenty-five beds for those who desire sleeping accommodation. Savings' bank, friendly society, and other agencies are also in active operation. Each lad pays a small subscription, which constitutes him a member.

GOSPEL HALL, PECKHAM.—The many meetings carried on here, both on Sundays and week evenings, and the house-to-house visitation by the evangelist, have been productive of much fruit, in the ninth year of the mission work carried on at this hall. Nineteen believers, the fruit of this work, were baptized in June last, and many more have been brought in since then. Two men present at one of the open-air services in a state of intoxication, are now consistent Christians. Soup dinners are given to the children, widows, and other distressed persons twice a week, a Gospel service being first held. Mr. Lewis Wood (104, [illegible] Peckham) is the evangelist.

THE AGAPEMONE HERESY.

WORDS OF WARNING.

I HEAR with very deep regret that my former curate, John Hugh Pigott, is appearing as an advocate of the views held by Mr. Prince, of the Agapemone. I desire to lift up my voice against his teaching, and I declare that the Agapemone heresy is one of the vilest that has ever been foisted upon the Church of Christ.

Mr. Prince claims to be the Holy Ghost personified, the introducer of a new dispensation, and assures his followers that whosoever believeth in him shall not die, but henceforth be without sickness or pain. A friend of mine went down to the Agapemone the other day to see for himself, and learn, if possible, at head-quarters what were the special views of the Princeites, but this supposed Incarnation of the Holy Ghost was ill in bed, too unwell to see him.

I would ask Mr. Pigott if he thinks that it was of God that the introduction of a new dispensation should have been signalised by acts of immorality so grossly revolting that the details are literally and truly unfit for publication? I am in a position, from incontrovertible evidence in my possession, solemnly to assure the people of God that such was the case.

In one of his published volumes, Prince speaks of himself as "The Amen," "The Great Potter," "The Messenger in the spirit and power of Elias," "The Morning Star," "The First and Last," "The Lord coming to his Temple." And still further, he goes on to say that he, the great Potter, took one piece, according to his sovereign will and pleasure to make it new. He took flesh, a woman....I cannot reproduce the whole of the passage, it is too offensive and immoral.

And it is to the inculcation of these pestilential blasphemies that Mr. Pigott has now lent himself! I mourn over his defection from the faith, for I remember the devoted piety and loving zeal which characterised his early ministry in this parish, and I can only exclaim "How are the mighty fallen, and the weapons of war perished." My firm belief is that he is now under a Satanic delusion.

But as I think of the fickleness and instability of his character, so forcibly illustrated by his past career, never for any length of time "continuing instant in one stay"—I believe that he will ere long grow tired of the delusion, and proclaim to the world some fresh revelation from heaven with which he thinks he has been favoured. But a few weeks ago I met a young man who was working under him in Dublin, who said to me that Mr. Pigott had wonderfully modified his views during the last few months. "Indeed," said I, "in what way?" "O! when he came to us some months ago, he thought that the devil would be saved, and now he thinks he won't."

He told me himself a few months ago, that the Lord had given him a wonderful revelation of the final restitution of all, both men and devils were to be saved, but now he comes to me as the accredited representative of Mr. Prince, and tells me that if I receive not his testimony, "I shall cease to be regarded by God as his child," that I "shall be left by God to the darkness I love," that "neither repentance nor dependence on the blood of Christ can meet my case here," that he will "shut heaven to me," and that finally he will "turn me into a beast of the field like Nebuchadnezzar!!"

I would ask Christian people if they are going to listen to such teaching as this? Is Mr. Pigott a safe guide upon these matters, which concern man's everlasting all? Ought he to be received into men's houses, and wished God-speed? Must he not rather be classed with those false teachers spoken of by St. Peter, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that brought them (2 Pet. ii. 1)?

I write these words with much sorrow of heart. Mr. Pigott was once a brother beloved, very dear to me in Christian fellowship and holy love. But now I am obliged to warn the Church against him, and charge him before God with being a subverter of the Christian faith, a bringer in of strange doctrines, which in America, and on the Continent, have at last culminated in the filthy abominations of free love.

DANIEL BELL HANKIN,
Vicar of St. Jude's, Mildmay Park.

Mr. Pigott has been propounding his "new revelation" at Reading and Stamford-hill, but, fortunately, at each place there were present some lovers of the truth sufficiently acquainted with the Word of God to contradict much of the specious error which he set forth. At the former such testimony was particularly successful, almost the entire audience remaining to listen to a few facts as to the unscriptural doctrine and practice of Mr. Prince and his followers. It was significant that Mr. Pigott and his supporters quitted the meeting rather than confront the questions and statements brought to light. Copies of the above important letter from Rev. D. B. Hankin, and Dr. Jones' Summary of the Apagemone Teaching (which appeared in our last), may each be had from Messrs. Morgan & Scott, price 1s. per 100, post free. Their distribution at places where these heresies are being propagated may be the means of warning unstable souls.

Notes and Comments.

☞ To prevent delay in the execution of orders, it is specially requested by the Publishers that all business letters may be directed to the firm (Morgan & Scott). Also that personal letters for either partner may be so marked.

☞ The advertisement pages in the middle of The Christian are intended to form an outside wrapper. If they are transferred at once and the number stitched, or even pinned through the middle, it will be read with more comfort and be more permanently preserved. If the paper is not kept for reference, readers are earnestly requested to give it away, or send it to any minister, Sunday-school teacher, or other Christian, or to a workhouse, hospital, infirmary, or ship. Do not let it be made waste paper.

Next week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. James Chalmers, of New Guinea.

Mr. R. C. Morgan has left London for a few weeks' rest, and to see some of the Christian work and workers in Italy. We are sure that he will have, as he desires, the prayers of our readers, that he may be blessed and made a blessing.

The next Believers' Meeting for Bible Study will take place at Niagara, Ontario, for ten days, from Tuesday, July 19. Many well known expounders of the Scriptures are expected to be present.

We hope our readers have carefully and minutely considered the pregnant and suggestive paper of Dr. Pentecost on Evangelisation and the Churches, contained in recent issues. The only proposition we question is that of establishing a chair or department for teaching of evangelistic theology in colleges. Elijah and Elisha, Stephen and Philip, Wesley and Whitfield, Charles Finney and Billy Dawson, James Caughey and D. L. Moody could never have been made but only marred by such a department. The charm and influence of such men, second to the power of the Holy Ghost upon them, consist in their originality, individuality, and spontaneity.

One Elijah from the mountains of Gilead, not afraid to face the furious king, is more than a hundred prophets hid away in caves for fear of him. One Elisha, fresh from the plough, and with purpose of heart cleaving to the Master, and going where He goes, is more than fifty sons of the prophets who stand to view. Elisha may drink in the prophet's spirit as he washes the hands of Elijah; the boys at Mount Hermon may become evangelists under the influence of Mr. Moody: but an Evangelistic Professorship would, we believe, almost certainly become perfunctory and mechanical. The evangelist requires, more than any other gift, to be in living touch with human hearts.

It is stated that one of the earliest collections for the direct object of missions to the heathen was made at Nottingham less than a century ago, the sum of thirteen pounds being contributed. Last year the Protestant churches of Europe and America gave for the same purpose no less a sum

The Jesuits do not appear to be gaining friends anywhere. It is announced in The Catholic Times that they are to be excluded from the full liberty which is to be given in Prussia to the religious orders. In the French Chamber of Deputies the other day it was proposed that young men who had been educated by the Jesuits in England should be declared ineligible for the competitive examinations preceding admission to the Naval School; although after heated discussion the proposal was withdrawn, the matter affords evidence of the feeling with which the members of the Society of Jesus are regarded in France.

In an article on the Day of Prayer for Colleges in America, The New York Evangelist says:—

> One of the greatest agencies of recruiting the ministry is a revived Church. We are often told that small salaries, severe hardships, and cold neglect—that some things common to all times, and some things peculiar to these times—are keeping our youth back from the sacred office. This is a large and complicated question, and cannot now be discussed. Of one thing we are certain, that a spiritual Church with the Cross in the heart and all its teachings in the life, will never need to cry long for leaders.

Rev. James Robertson, Chaplain to the Forces at Cairo, Egypt, sends to us a very earnest appeal for prayer on behalf of soldiers in the British Army. He fortifies his plea by various reasons, among them being the deplorable fact that the men drink and blaspheme so terribly, and misconduct themselves in open sin. We will not now re-open the question, which has often been discussed—as to how far the ungodliness of so many of our soldiers is the natural and almost inevitable outcome of the conditions that are imposed upon them. But it seems to us little short of mockery to ask God to keep these men from temptation, while at the same time we plant sources of temptation thick around them. By all means let the Christian churches pray for our soldiers and those who are seeking to do Christian work on their behalf. God is able to keep them in the midst of surrounding evil. But unless we roll away these stones of stumbling, and make it easier for the soldier to do right, we are only retaining so many barriers against the answer to our prayers.

A writer in The Sunday at Home for February month, gives it as an inference of personal experiment that the "masses are hungering for Christ." "They may," he says "have deserted the churches; they have not deserted Christ." Somewhat akin to this, and which may serve as a sidelight, is the conception formed by an interesting writer on "The Missing Link," in this month's Baptist Magazine, of a section of our modern ministry:—

> It is no good to overlook the fact that the sermons of many ministers are, too often, very lacking in spiritual wealth. Their production is not the result of close communion with God, and fervent prayer for the light of the Holy Spirit; but rather the result of merely reading the works of others. And hence it is that we have to mourn the sad lack of power in their delivery.

We have no wish to pose as censors, but we cannot help thinking that a considerable part of the modern pulpit is sadly lacking in plain, earnest, spiritual speech. It is academic and literary; but deficient in the ring of naturalness, which is ever the accompaniment of power. Let us have more witness-bearing, more experi-pleadings with God, ever remembering that the Master is on the way "to give to every man as his work shall be."

We are often urging upon domestic servants the need of care in ascertaining the character of situations advertised, before engaging themselves. We are able to introduce such applicants to a lady who at the present time knows of several good situations with Christian employers, but cannot get servants to fill them. Doubtless many servants would like to know of this.

Our readers in London will do well to note the important course of lectures upon Romanism and the Reformation from the standpoint of prophecy, being delivered by Mr. Grattan Guinness upon consecutive Wednesday evenings at Exeter Hall. Particulars will be given, from week to week, in our list of Forthcoming Meetings, and we hope in our next issue to give a report of the first lecture.

Many a good meeting is spoiled by too many speakers being asked. It is far better to invite two, and give them time to deliver addresses which they have taken some pains to prepare, than to ask four, for whom there cannot be time to say more than a few hurried and half-connected sentences; whose evening is thus little better than wasted; and who might have been doing some useful work elsewhere.

We cannot pretend to feel much sympathy with Miss Allcard, who has failed to recover the money she gave to the conventual establishment at Edgware, of which she was for some time a member. Mr. Justice Kekewich's decision, though it has been questioned, seems to us an equitable one, as no sufficient evidence was adduced that the plaintiff was not a perfectly free agent when she parted with the control of her money. At the same time we think it a deplorable thing that persons of full age and responsibility should place themselves at the mercy of anyone, in the discharge of a trust such as the possession of large means involves. If such people were better instructed as to the scope and responsibility of true Christian service, a heavy blow would be given to priestcraft and sacerdotalism.

We cordially endorse the following remarks on this case, by The Record:—

> A life of religious seclusion is foreign to the general teaching of the Gospel, and has no authority in Apostolic practice. The Reformation abolished the monastic and conventual system from the Church, and to restore it would so far undo the work of the Reformers. It is, then, to be hoped that those who are heedlessly inclining to aid this movement will hesitate in view of the inevitable result. There is plenty of room for women's work in the Church of England, but it will be an evil day for the nation when it comes to be believed that this can only be supplied by establishing conventual Sisterhoods "on Church of England lines." There are evil tendencies inseparable from the system which cannot be eradicated by any known safeguards.

Sir Andrew B. Walker, of Liverpool, has signified his intention of subscribing £10,000 to the building fund of the Liverpool Cathedral.

If we could gain the ear of our Episcopal brethren in Liverpool, we would suggest that they should with righteous scorn refuse to accept this gift from the brewer magnate; every pound of it must repre-

May we remind our readers, and especially all who have influence with young women, that next week will be devoted to special prayer and effort on behalf of that section of the community.

In the current instalment of the biography appearing in The Century, some touching testimonies from his contemporaries are given as to Abraham Lincoln's inflexible sense of rectitude, and his inability to make the worse appear the better cause—a thing too common among the members of his profession :—

> He would often persuade a fair-minded litigant of the injustice of his case, and induce him to give it up. To a man who offered him an objectionable case, he said, "There is no reasonable doubt but I can gain your suit for you. I can set a whole neighbourhood at loggerheads; I can distress a widowed mother and her six fatherless children, and thereby get you six hundred dollars which rightfully belongs, it appears to me, as much to them as it does to you. I shall not take your case, but I will give you a little advice for nothing. You are an energetic man. I would advise you to try your hand at making six hundred dollars in some other way."...Once he was proceeding in a civil suit in the course of which evidence was introduced showing that his client was attempting a fraud. Lincoln rose, and went to his hotel in deep disgust. The judge sent for him; he refused to come. "Tell the judge," he said, "my hands are dirty; I came over to wash them."

If this unswerving love of truth and right were universal among advocates, many a costly and ruinous lawsuit would fall through for want of anyone to bolster up and defend the wrong; and we should not hear of Christian lawyers pleading a cause in which they would never dream of appearing as client instead of counsel.

"Am I presumptuous," writes a correspondent, "in thinking that many fly to novelties of doctrine as a supplement to the old Gospel, but which often comes very near to a substitute for it; and that much time is spent on a nice arrangement of the details of the unknown future, which might be spent in persevering with the Gospel, less pleasantly to the flesh, but more profitably to the spirit?"

When will the intolerable wrong of gambling on Atlantic steamers be made to cease? Thirteen gentlemen, among them our friend Mr. W. Noble, wrote to The Times of Feb. 1, that the smoking-room of the Umbria, of the Cunard Line, was turned into a veritable hell during her last homeward voyage. They tell of professional gamblers travelling the Atlantic to decoy the unsuspecting; of a young man losing all his money; borrowing; then urged to drink; in despair trying to jump overboard, and placed in arrest under a keeper. Gambling disputes disturbed the sleep of passengers, and the comfort of the voyage was destroyed. Is there no power to stop all this evil?

A correspondent of The Globe writes as follows on this subject :—

> May I be allowed to confirm what has been said about gambling on board Atlantic steamers. In two trips that I know of, the smoking room was completely taken possession of by a gang of gamblers, and anyone attempting to use the room for its nominal purpose only was soon made aware that his presence was unwelcome to these blackguards. Many professional swindlers who travel backwards and forwards across the Atlantic are perfectly well known, and it is high time that the companies

We learn with much regret that Mr. A. H. Darling, late of Spain, is in a very low state of both body and mind.

The two following paragraphs are from The Pall Mall Gazette of last Friday. To wreck a train, and to wreck for time and eternity an innocent girl, are crimes which mark the perpetrator of each with infamy. We should all regard with loathing him who does the former, but the heartless doer of the latter is received, and petted, and admired, though his victim (possibly, there are many of them) is lying on the river's bed.

Mothers present him their stainless daughters;
  Men of high honour salute him, "Friend."
Earth, oh where are thy cleansing waters?
  World, oh where will thy wonders end?

ATTEMPT TO WRECK AN EXPRESS TRAIN.

> A man named Thomas Busby was arrested at Nantwich last night on a charge of placing obstructions on the London and North Western Railway at Wrenbury. The station-master was walking down the line on Monday night, just before the Liverpool express to Shrewsbury and South Wales was due, when he discovered a milk can and a drag-rope across the metals. The drag-rope was so ingeniously run across a pair of points that two large iron hooks, placed at each end of it, would, by the heavy weight of the engine upon them, have been driven in between the points like wedges; this would have opened the points, and wrecked the express.

A "GENTLEMANLY" RASCAL.

> On Tuesday night, after the starting of the Channel steamer from Dover, a girl of sixteen years of age was found on board in a very agitated state of mind. She had no money whatever, either for her passage or to provide food or lodging on arrival, and on close inquiry by the officers it was ascertained that she had been brought down to Dover from London by a "gentleman," who, supposing that he had been detected, as it is thought deserted her. The girl stated that she had left home without the knowledge of her friends, and she pleaded hard that nothing might be said about it. She was placed in the hands of a Protestant English clergyman until the departure of the homeward boat, and has now been returned to her relations. It appears that it was arranged by the "gentleman" that the girl should go on board alone, and that he should afterwards join her, but that no recognition should pass between them till they landed on foreign soil.

Our readers have read the history of ancient Rome, and they know the story of Lucretia and Virginia :—

And thrice the tossing Forum sent up a frightful yell;
"See, see, thou dog, what thou hast done, and hide thy shame in hell."
  "Those that would make our maidens slaves, must first make slaves of men."

Is it because the men of England have become slaves of passion, that the Tarquins, who abound on every hand, are allowed to work wickedness unscathed? But are even Christian fathers and mothers faithful and true to their own and other parents' children? Do even Christians generally judge the wrecker of a girl as they do the wrecker of a train? Yet he is no less a criminal than the other.

The same paper also contained the following :—

> No one now in the Divorce Court cares a straw for perjury. Since the Government refused to prosecute Sir Charles Dilke, perjury is no longer regarded as a crime.

We fear that perjury in the above-named Court was considered a venial offence in high life before the last two causes celebres. But what says the eternal Ruler? "Shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as Few discoveries will have a more important bearing on certain scientific discussions than those of General Grenfel, near Assouan, in Egypt. At the Syene of Ezekiel (xxix. 10) tombs have been opened which show the arts of a high state of civilisation 5000 years ago. But a class of scientists teach that man in the East was a savage a little further back only than this. How is it that the ancestors of man took countless cycles of centuries to reach a savage state, and the briefest period to reach the advanced culture these tombs disclose?

In our last two issues our readers will have seen an announcement of the early publication of the addresses delivered at the recent Protestant Convention at Glasgow. This volume will contain a body of information as to the present and varied aspects and relations of the Roman Catholic system, that must prove invaluable in the coming years. No better book could be found to place in the hands of those who are in danger of being led astray through the sophistries of Romanising teachers. We would direct attention to the fact that subscribers will receive the volume at the exceedingly low price of 2s.; after publication the price will be 5s. Applications should be sent at once to the Editorial Committee of the Scottish Protestant Alliance, 177, Buchanan-street, Glasgow.

A hearty welcome was accorded by an enthusiastic assembly of friends at Hoxton Hall, last week, to Mr. William Noble on his return, after a lengthened campaign in America and Australia. Those who wish to hear from Mr. Noble some account of his experiences should attend the Blue Ribbon anniversary at Exeter Hall this (Thursday) evening.

In a letter to The Spectator of last Saturday, on the threatened war between France and Germany, Mr. Hodgson Pratt makes a proposal which, to some, may seem Utopian; but the fruition of which would evoke a universal shout of gladness from every Christian heart. He says :—

> Upon England, it seems to me, rests a very special duty...By her history, her character, and her position she should be the peacemaker. Let the Queen crown her reign by an effort which, if successful, would win for England the gratitude of the world. Let Her Majesty appeal to the Sovereigns and Princes of Europe to meet at a Peace Congress in a spirit of mutual concession and devotion to the general good, making one supreme effort to arrive at a compromise, which should serve the cause of progress, of liberty, and of humanity.

This is the best Jubilee suggestion we have seen, and would be well worth carrying into effect, even if it failed of its object. If it were successful, then, indeed, we should begin to see the dawning of the promised day when the nations shall turn their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks, and shall learn the cruel art of war no more.

Several weeks since we inserted a note, furnished by an Irish correspondent, reflecting somewhat on the disproportion between the income of the Reformed Priests' Protection Society in Dublin, and the amount expended for its avowed objects. We have received an explanatory communication, signed by Mr. J. R. Fowler, as Chairman of the Committee, and Captain Wade Thompson, Hon. Secretary, giving details of income and expenditure which our paragraph, which was founded on newspaper statements, was unwarranted. The names of the gentlemen we have mentioned, as well as those of others on the Committee, are ample guarantee that its resources will be faithfully administered.

The Anti-Polygamy Bill has passed the House of Representatives at Washington. Utah, with its polygamous concubinages, cannot be admitted as a State, and complications will, doubtless, arise. We hope, however, that the authorities will continue to bring the strong arm of the law to bear on this iniquity.

According to The Christian Advocate, a remarkable League has been formed in France, noteworthy, not because of its objects and aims, but simply because it is not either political or ecclesiastical, but "an endeavour of Christian common sense" to prove to the French people, by means of the press, the platform, and the drawing-room, "the evidences of God's being," at the foundation of life, and which fill nature. There is plenty of room in France for an attack of this kind upon Atheism, and if its projectors and leaders can manage to steer clear of statecraft on the one hand and priestcraft on the other, there is no reason why such a movement should not be eminently successful. At a time of peculiar unrest, with troubles looming in the darkness all around, "men's hearts failing them for fear," the declaration of the living God will not be unheeded.

We have more than once in these columns impressed upon our readers that statistics of pauperism are far from accurate gauges of the actual amount of poverty; and it is necessary from time to time to repeat the statement, because there is a tendency to take shelter behind "returns," and to comfort ourselves with the suggestion that matters are by no means so bad as some people would have us believe. It is quite true, we admit gladly, that the number of paupers is less than it was thirty years ago, but what is the reason? Certainly not the percolation downward of our much vaunted national prosperity? Rev. Herbert Mills attributes it to the proper cause, in his volume upon "Poverty and the State" (6s. Messrs. Kegan, Paul & Co.), when he credits with the decrease, private charity "on a colossal scale," and the pleasant fact that the poor prefer the compassionate Christian to the relieving officer.

That we have six millions of people living upon the verge of pauperism is a startling thing, tone it down as our economist friends may, and it is not too much to say that without the unassuming charity and consideration of Christian people in all parts of the kingdom a large proportion of this unfortunate class would very quickly have to face the workhouse and the poor law guardians. The true follower of Christ has no desire to forget the fact that the poor we have with us alway, the political economist endeavours to ignore it, and certainly does manage to shift upcn other people's shoulders that which ought to be his own burden. The large practical, generous side of Christianity has for years been dealing with that which the State has been unable to grapple with, and it is as true to-day as it was in Judea eighteen centuries ago, that the salvation of society depends upon the application of the keenly simple teachings of Jesus.

Professor Ruskin has of late said many kind things with regard to Romanism in the midst of the Italian peasantry, and of course the Roman Catholic journals make much of any such utterances; but has any professedly anti-Romanist writer ever said anything more severe than this, taken from one of Mr. Ruskin's noblest works, "The Stones of Venice"? The paragraph has a remarkable bearing upon our note of January 6, with regard to Father Clarke's sermon upon the degradation of the Christian ideal by Protestantism:—

> But what has the Romanist done meanwhile? He boasts that it was the Papacy which raised the arts; why could it not support them when it was left to its own strength? How came it to yield to the classicalism which was based on infidelity, and to oppose no barrier to innovations which have reduced the once faithfully conceived imagery of its worship to stage decoration? Shall we not rather find that Romanism, instead of being a promoter of the arts, has never shown itself capable of a single great conception since the separation of Protestantism from its side?...But the witness was borne, the error made apparent, and Rome, refusing to bear the testimony or forsake the falsehood, has been struck from that instant with an intellectual palsy.

The St. James's Gazette has a review of a little volume entitled "Use of the Cistercian Nuns," which certainly affords outsiders a good idea of the daily life in the convents of that order. The sisters, it appears, are condemned to silence, and when they have "anything useful to communicate" they must do it by signs, a dictionary of which is given. Provision is made, however, for much tattling about each other to the superior, and directions are given for "eating on the floor;" for the daily use of the "disciplines"—which latter are five cords with five knots each, "to be applied to the shoulders;" and for the prostrations before the superior, and a host of other trivial performances deemed to be "mortifications of the flesh." How far is all this miserable austerity and suppression of all the nobler feelings of humanity, this absence of all practical sympathy with the burdens and sorrows of others, from that "joy in the Holy Ghost" which is so important an element in the service of Christ!

It is as true with regard to spiritual things as to worldly, that idleness opens the way to numberless temptations. We should less frequently be grieved by accounts of Christian people running into the wilderness, only to see a reed shaken with the wind, if more followers of Jesus endeavoured, in the Master's strength, to preserve a due balance between meditation and work. Of late, in certain sections, too much prominence has been given to the habit of introspection, and wherever this tendency to look within upon self, rather than without and unto Jesus, is indulged in, there is at least a grave risk of the development of vain imaginings which can only lead the heart away from the Saviour. Perhaps there never was a time in the history of the Church of Christ when it was more incumbent to obey the Lord's own command: "Then if any man shall say unto you, Lo, here is Christ, or there, believe it not;" and to dwell lovingly upon the comforting assurance, "Lo I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

Especially is this attitude of obedience and trust necessary after periods of spiritual elation, and of the enjoyment of special privileges, when, so to speak, the believer has been brought "into an high mountain apart," and permitted to see the transfigured Face and the white garments; for then, when the disciple should persistently see "no man, save Jesus only," there is the greatest possible danger of self-confidence taking the place of holy fear. Surely it is not unimportant to note that when the disciples came down from the Mount of Transfiguration they at once went to the multitude on a mission of healing.

A firm of Roman Catholic publishers announce "The Acts of the Apostles," by Charles Henry Poole, LL.D. A Romanist paper, in its review of the volume, says that the writer has "supplied an oft-felt want," and that "he has arranged the Acts in such a way that they form an admirable reading-book for the youth of Catholic England." Looking at the matter from a Scriptural standpoint, it is difficult to understand what the "oft-felt want" is, seeing that a copy of the New Testament in its entirety can be obtained for a penny.

It is very cheering to find from an article in the January number of The Edinburgh Review, on "The Literature of the Streets," that the so-called "penny dreadfuls" are free from anything like indecency. The writer says, "Throughout the whole legion of worthless pages we can recall no one single indecent phrase or allusion," the lovers of indecency being found, not among the children of the streets who can read, but "among older and viler sinners, the lazy, the idle, with money at command." That these wretched papers deaden their readers' perception of what is good and true is undoubtedly the fact, but it is pleasant to find that they do not sin against morality and religion, as do many of the novels which are so eagerly devoured by better educated people.

CITY MISSIONS IN NEW YORK.

The New York City Mission and Tract Society, first established in 1827, has in late years been engaged in building, organising, and maintaining churches for the people of an independent order, thoroughly evangelical, but not denominational. These churches are planted in the lower part of the city, where, with a population of 600,000, there are only 100 Protestant churches, with 60,000 sittings.

From a circular issued by the Society to the friends and supporters of the City Mission, it is learned that there are four churches for the people, and two (German) Missions, open continually week-day and Sabbath-day, day and evening alike. A noteworthy feature of this work is the effort of the working people towards self-support. In these churches for the people the free-will offerings, usually by the envelope system, for the support of the Gospel for Christian missions, and for the aid of the poor, amount in all to $7000 with fair promise of soon bringing the amount up to $9,500, or one-half of the entire expense—$19,000.

The church for the people covers, under one and the same roof, church, Sunday-school, library, reading-room, gymnasium, cooking school, sewing school, illustrated lectures, entertainment, and instruction for working men, women, and children. The churches are well attended, and the Sabbath-schools overflowing. There have been added to the church rolls 261 persons on confession of faith.

ENGLAND'S SHAME.

The Pall Mall Gazette has once more earned the heartiest thanks of all true lovers of our nation by exposing our misdeeds in Egypt, and bringing home to us a sense of our responsibility. In its issue of Feb. 1 letters appear from several prominent social reformers, in which they express the deepest shame and indignation at the state of things revealed by Mr. Caine, M.P. We most earnestly trust that this indignation will swell into such a tide of national feeling as will compel our Government to undo, as far as may be, the evils that have been done in their name and by their permission.

Referring to the indiscriminate planting of drink-shops in the Nile valley, Archdeacon Farrar comments on the culpable indifference with which, as a people, we regard this evil at home, as well as abroad:—

> Here at our very doors drink daily causes the most unspeakable misery and the most execrable crimes. Yet our Legislature, under Liberals and Conservatives alike, contents itself with passing one or two abstract resolutions. But there are some among us who, believing in the message of the old Hebrew Prophets, and marvelling at the apathy with which such crimes against humanity are regarded, have long heard a voice ringing in their ears, "Shall I not visit for these things? saith the Lord: and shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this?"

Rev. H. Price Hughes is equally strong in his denunciation of the establishment and official regulation of unblushing vice in Cairo, and says: "We must, if necessary, revive all the machinery of our long agitation. But I believe there is enough virtue in the enfranchised democracy to make short work of this hideous business. Every woman and every true man should speak out at once, and compel the House of Commons to arrest the national patronage of drunkenness and lust in Egypt."

Dr. B. W. Richardson appeals, with all the authority of a scientific expert, for the abolition of the grog-shops in Egypt, from a health point of view; and Sir Wilfrid Lawson intimates his intention of again demanding from the Government "local option" for the United Kingdom. Mr. Benjamin Scott, the City Chamberlain, is justly severe on the hypocrisy of a professedly Christian nation corrupting, in a wholesale way, those under our rule in foreign parts:—

> Let us be consistent if we cannot be moral, and avoid at least the crowning vice of hypocrisy—sending chaplains and missionaries to our fellow-subjects abroad, while we pose as patrons of prostitutes. Well might the Chinamen at Hong Kong fall into the error of supposing that sexual vice was an element of the Christian religion.

He appeals to Christian reformers, who have a seat in the House of Commons, to combine in making their voices heard on this question:—

> There must be an alarm sounded as well as a standard raised. As in the olden times the jubilee trumpet called for the removal of heavy burdens, so that the oppressed might go free, will it not be appropriate in this Jubilee Year of our loved Sovereign, in whose respected name all this abomination is carried on, that a jubilee should be proclaimed to those held in State subjection to lust—the most cruelly and hopelessly oppressed of all the slaves upon the earth's surface?

We would second Mr. Scott's appeal to those Christian gentlemen at St. Stephen's. We want, both in Parliament and out of it, a good deal more of the moral enthusiasm and the determined perseverance that have achieved the triumphs for righteousness and purity in the past. Christian electors in all the constituencies will do well to memorialize their representatives with reference to these scandalous matters; they may in that way do much to bring about national repentance and reform.

MOROCCO.—The European residents at Saffi deserve commendation for their kindly thought for the occupants of the prison in their town this winter. Some £14 was raised for their relief. Each prisoner received a shirt, several good meals were given to all, and the prison was cleaned and whitewashed. Would it not be possible for some such good example to be set the Moorish authorities at Tangier, especially the cleaning

The C.M.S. Missionary Meetings.

Simultaneous special meetings and services in connection with the efforts of the Church Missionary Society to bring before the public the claims of the heathen and Mohammedan world are being held this week in the Metropolis. At Westminster Abbey on Sunday morning the Bishop of Cork, speaking from the words, "Therefore they that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the Word," in forcible terms reminded his hearers of their obligation to spread the Gospel among the people of the earth; and at the same time strongly condemned the introduction of the drink traffic into foreign countries, as it was a great drawback to the operations of the missionary. He also alluded in deprecatory terms to the drink traffic in England. In the afternoon, the Ven. Archdeacon Farrar preached from the words, "Tell it out among the heathen that the Lord is King;" and during the course of his sermon he alluded to the great growth of the Church Missionary Society, and gave some interesting statistics respecting missionary enterprise generally.

MONDAY'S SERVICES.

At St. Michael's, Cornhill, Rev. R. P. Ashe gave on Monday, at noon, the introductory portion of a series of addresses in which he will detail his experiences in the five years since he went forth as a missionary to Central Africa.

At 1 o'clock, in St. Mary-le-Bow, Cheapside, Rev. Llewellyn Lloyd (in the absence of Bishop Moule, who was announced to preach) spoke of China, where, in the province of which Foochow is the capital, he had been labouring for ten years. He instanced the recent proclamation and the annexation of Eastern Burmah as showing that the doors are being opened in a marvellous way, by which missionary work would be greatly facilitated. He affirmed that the Chinese are rapidly changing their views of western people, and numbers were coming to see that in the Word of God there is something far superior to their own superstitious worship. Reviewing briefly the progress of Christian missions in China, he spoke of the obstacles which missionaries meet with. Greatest amongst these is the opium traffic. Other difficulties alluded to were the language, the pride of the people, and the worship of ancestors. He concluded with an interesting account of the conversion of a prominent native, who is now an ordained minister of the Gospel, his family having also been converted to Christ.

At 1.15 p.m. in St. Bride's, Fleet-street, to a small but deeply attentive congregation, Rev. James Johnston (Lagos) gave a moving address on the needs of the heathen world. He told, in earnest and burning words, something of what he personally knew of the unspeakable degradation attached to idolatry in India. Some people say, he observed, that Hindooism is almost on a par with Christianity. And yet he knew of little girls being "given to the gods" in India, who were expressly set apart to be trained in all that is loathsome and vile. He had seen thousands of the most cultured and intelligent Hindoos bowing in worship before idols of mud, and before monkeys and serpents. He made a stirring appeal that Christians should exercise self-denial, in order to carry the Gospel to those multitudes sitting in gross darkness.

MINISTERING TO THE POOR.—The workers of the North-East London Gospel Missions are finding their hands filled yet more and more with the terrible suffering at present so widespread in the East of London. At three of the halls of the Missions, situated in some of the poorest quarters of East London, the poor are being gathered three and four days per week, and cheered with good meals of food. The addresses of the dock labourers have been taken this week, in order to their being visited, as far as practicable, and their families suitably relieved, as means may permit. The workers are cheered in being able to speak of several cases of spiritual blessing which bear every

THE BIRTH OF JESUS.

Sing of the uncreated light
Which shines through darkness here,
When to this sinful world of night
The Christ draws near.

He comes who clothed the heaven and earth
With majesty and grace,
Unclothed, to share the lowly birth
Of human race.

Excelling glory and light which none
Approached were his abode.
He comes, self-emptied, and alone,
Down earth's dark road.

He who the heaven of heavens filled,
Whom angel hosts obeyed,
Will have his infant weeping stilled
By earthly maid.

Nor thundering voice, nor lightnings now,
Speak his dread presence near,
But heavenly music, sweet and low,
Proclaims Him here.

Down with the humblest sons of earth
From His bright throne on high,
He comes to take His sinless birth,
To work and die.

By man rejected, see He lies
Outcast as soon as born,
While wondering myriads in the skies
Hail the blest morn.

Star-guided men, to whom the grace
Of finding Him is given,
Fall down before His infant face—
The smile of Heaven.

Sing in the highest, angels sing
Glory to God above;
Peace and goodwill to earth you bring
And endless love.

RATCLIFF STRANGERS' REST.

The last monthly workers' meeting was held on Friday, the 4th instant, Mr. Seagram presiding. Mr. Isaacs, the Secretary, stated that a house had been secured in the Highway for the nightly instruction of lads of twelve years and upwards, in reading, writing, and arithmetic, and some useful trades. Prayer was requested for a blessing on this new branch of work. A brief address by Miss Holmes, a candidate for mission work in China, followed, after which

Mr. H. Grattan Guinness gave an address on "The Glory of God," as revealed in Christ. Our Lord's thirty-three years on earth were, except to the deeply reflective mind, less a revelation than a veiling of glory. A world of sin and misery, to the manhood of Christ, who was made perfect through suffering, was precisely the theatre for working out a perfect humanity. Whether Christ be regarded morally, mentally, in depth of suffering, in exaltation, or in faultless presentment of Divine likeness, his glory surpasses all human grasp. We shall not wonder at the ineffable character of the glory of Christ, when we shall see Him without an intervening vail, if we reflect on these four things which appear from the New Testament:—(1) That Divine titles are applied to Christ, as "My Lord and my God;" (2) That Divine attributes are ascribed to Him, as omnipresence, "Lo! I am with you always;" (3) That Divine works were wrought by Him, as creation, "All things were made by Him;" and (4) "Divine worship" was accepted by Him: "Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty, which was, and is, and is to come. Thou art worthy, O Lord! to receive glory, honour, and power; for Thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are, and were created." Mr. Guinness commended the subject to the Christian's study, as one of boundless interest, and highest among the loftiest of human research.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. Henry Varley will hold Gospel services at the Priory Hall, 198, Upper-street, Islington, from February 14 to 19. Prayer is solicited for this special effort.

Mr. and Mrs. C King are conducting services at the Angel Assembly Rooms, Edmonton, on Sunday mornings, afternoons, and evenings. So far, great encouragement has attended the work.

Mr. David Kennedy, Saltcoats, who was for several years connected with the Ayrshire Christian Union, and was last year engaged as an evangelist by the Lanarkshire Christian Union, is now open to receive invitations for Christian work. His present address is 23, Cambridge-street, Glasgow.

Brighton.—Mr. George Hefford, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded a twenty-three days' mission here. To the Christians it was a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. Many of the careless were awakened, for whom prayer is asked, that they may be led to a right decision; some also professed to be savingly converted to God.

Nottingham.—Following on the three services in the Albert Hall, on the 30th ult., Mr. Varley commenced the next day a series of evangelistic services in Parliament-street Chapel, where, also in the afternoon, he delivered an address on "Homely Talk on an important Theme." The attendance at all the meetings has been very large, and a remarkable influence has been exercised.

Mr. Hilton, of the Evangelisation Society, has finished a three weeks' Mission at the York-road Baptist Chapel, Leeds. Many souls have been quickened and brought to the Lord. Several children of Christian parents have been led to decision. Persons who have been living in much misery and sin were seen weeping and seeking God for pardon and help, and several, who had not been to a place of worship for many years, were led to come and hear the evangelist. God blessed the preaching of his own Word to their conversion.

Mr. George Banaster, of the Children's Special Service Mission, held a week's services, from January 15 to January 21, in the schoolroom of Queen-street Congregational Chapel, Leeds. Earnest preparation had been made for the mission, and definite results followed. Fully two-thirds of those present remained for conversation at each gathering. From Leeds Mr. Banaster went on to Gateshead, where a successful mission was inaugurated by a hearty meeting for prayer, and the subsequent services were well attended, with many tokens of blessing.

Mr. Walter Notman, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded a four weeks' mission at Llantwit Major, and Broughton, Glamorgan. The meetings were attended with great success. The Gospel was faithfully preached, and that with freshness and naturalness. Some remained behind for conversation at both places. We trust that the result of this mission will prove lasting, like the one conducted by Mr. Notman here last year. Those that remained behind then have proved themselves faithful followers of Christ. Mr. Notman's next mission will be in Scotland. W. W.

Ryde (Isle of Wight) has been greatly privileged with a time of much blessing from a special eight days' mission to women only, conducted by Miss Naish, in connection with the Ryde Young Women's Christian Association. Gospel addresses were held every evening in the Town Hall, which was crowded with attentive hearers. There were also drawing-room meetings at Caithness House and Garfield House, and an address given by Miss Naish at St. John's House Mission-hall. Many women during and since the mission have indicated their desire to become Christians.

Whitehills, Banff.—A series of meetings has been held in this fishing village on the north-east coast of Scotland, by Mr. Samuel McKenzie, coadjutor to Mr. Scroggie in his evangelistic work. The smaller villages are apt to be overlooked in favour of the more populous towns. This has been the beginning of an endeavour to further the Lord's work, and aid the efforts of those who have so often to work single-handed. The Free Church and the Wesleyan Methodist pastors, with their respective congregations, united and cordially cooperated with Mr. McKenzie. An evident spiritual impression was made; many who had been formal or utterly dead were awakened, and professed to receive the Lord Jesus Christ as their Saviour. Mr. McKenzie's mode of address is earnest, faithful, and thoroughly Scriptural. He is now prosecuting his work in the fishing villages to the west.

Mr. Spencer Walton is enjoying times of revival at Ramsgate in connection with a mission there. He has at present some vacant dates, and will be glad to communicate with friends desiring his evangelistic services. His address is 11, Tierney-road, Streatham-hill, S.W.

Mr. Charles Inglis has been conducting a most successful mission, during the past five weeks, at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile-End-road. It has been a cheering sight to see nearly five thousand persons crowded in on Sundays, to hear the glorious message of a Saviour's love. Many who have gone into the inquiry-room, under deep conviction of sin, have left rejoicing in a newly found Saviour. One address that Mr. Inglis gave on Luke xiii. 24—26, will not soon be forgotten. The vast audience was spell-bound, as he portrayed mercy's door being closed. Scores were broken down, and not a few professed to pass from death to life.

Church Parochial Mission Society.—The following missions, arranged in connection with the Society, are being held:—Revs. W. Hay Aitken and James Stephens, at Hyde, Cheshire; Revs. C. J. Atherton, at Taunton; W. G. Cleworth, at Keston, Beckenham; A. R. D Arcy, at Toddon, Norfolk; E. Gill, at Pencoys, near Redruth; W. Haslam, at Portsea; J. H Haslam, at Rosherville; W. Hayton, at St. Mary Cray; S. Hooke, at Esclusham, near Wrexham; R. D. Monro, at Arley Kings, near Stourport; Dr. Morris, at Mayfield, Ashbourne; J. Simpson, at Steeple Claydon, Winslow; J. Stephens, Monkton Coombe, Bath; and Dr. Watts, at Holy Trinity, Trowbridge; Mr. Swann Hurrell, at Penzance

OBITUARY.

MISS KEATING.

The Church of Christ on earth has sustained a great loss by the death of Miss C. Keating, of Bruce Grove House, Tottenham. Her large-hearted loving sympathy with the Lord's work had made her name well known as a "succourer of many." Her last illness was comparatively short, and she fell asleep at 5.30 on the morning of February 5.

MRS. YEOLAND.

We regret to announce the death of Mrs. K. Yeoland, who has been for many years an earnest labourer in the Master's vineyard. As an evangelist she possessed the gift of putting the truth simply and powerfully before her hearers, and the Lord crowned her labours with abundant success. She was called to her rest rather suddenly, and died at Shrewsbury, where she had recently been holding evangelistic services. She fell asleep peacefully on February 3.

Requests for Prayer and Praise.

PRAYER.—For blessing on the following missions:—Rev. Wm. Haslam, at Trinity Church, Bath, Feb. 19; that a mission at Bromley, Kent, Feb. 13 to 19, may be accompanied by the power of the Holy Ghost.——The Secretary of the Society for Promoting Female Education in the East earnestly requests prayer that, if it be the Lord's will, He will restore to health one of their most valued missionaries, and enable her to continue the important work which she is carrying on most efficiently.——For a meeting for young women to be addressed by Charles Inglis next Thursday, in "The Welcome," Cross-key-square, E.C.——For a week's evangelistic services in Bethnal Green.——For much blessing on evangelistic meetings in Inverness, conducted by Mr. J. M. Scroggie, commencing Feb. 6.——For blessing on meetings to be held during the Week of Prayer for Young Women, Feb. 13 to 19.——For blessing during the visit of Rev. F. B. Meyer at Swaffham, Feb. 8 to 9.——For evangelistic services at Rayleigh, Essex, to be conducted by Mr. G. Hefford to Feb. 20.

PRAISE.—For much blessing received through meetings at Swaffham, Norfolk, by Mr. Harmer.

SPAIN.—A branch Mission has just been opened in a pueblo twenty-five miles from Madrid, where a little capella has been fitted up for the purpose. The attendance, both at the opening and since, has been excellent, and the conduct of the people all that could be desired—not one word of insult, or a rude action. "But, alas!" says our correspondent, "the infidel papers have gone before us."

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

The printers are forming a trade Total Abstinence Society.

Four Irish members have blocked the Irish Sunday Closing Bill.

Germany is the largest drink-trader with Africa, sending there more than 7,000,000 gallons annually.

Allsopp's brewery concern is being turned into a company, the sum asked being three millions sterling.

Rev. T. D. Barnes, Assouan, gives a cheery account of temperance work amongst the soldiers up the Nile.

Messrs. Meakin & Co.'s breweries are reported to be gradually spreading over the whole of British India.

Temperance sermons were preached on Sunday, last week, in most of the churches and chapels in Bristol.

A speaker at a recent city warehouse meeting recommended the signing of the pledge as a suitable jubilee memorial.

All the medical men and Christian ministers in Amsterdam oppose the total abstinence movement, which, nevertheless, is making way.

Mr. W. M. Oatts, secretary of the Glasgow Y.M.C.A., is arranging to take a plebiscite of the householders of the city on the question of Local Option.

A meeting of teetotal Arabs was held lately in Cairo, addressed by native Egyptians, who denounced the Europeans for introducing amongst them the curse of drink.

The forty-seventh annual temperance sermon in Church-street Chapel, Edgware-road, London, was delivered on Sunday, January 30, by Rev. Dr. Dawson Burns.

Mr. J. H. Wilson, M.P., member of Sheffield School Board, stated recently that the drink-traffic was at the bottom of their difficulties in getting children to attend school.

Rev. Charles Garrett asks, What more fitting act to commemorate her jubilee year could the Queen perform than to ask her ministers to close the drink traffic on the Lord's Day?

During the past year 703 pledges were taken in connection with the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen, which has rendered excellent service in the suppression of floating grog-shops.

A good work is carried on by Mr. and Mrs. Hill at the Seamen's Chapel, London Docks. Mr. William Forbes held a meeting on Thursday last, and at the close a number signed the pledge.

It is matter of surprise in some quarters that, seeing the hindrance the drink-traffic is to their work, missionaries do not give more prominence to the subject in their letters home.

A new temperance magazine is to be started, to circulate on both sides of the Atlantic. It is to be called Our Day, and will be edited by Rev. Joseph Cook, of Boston Monday Lecture fame.

The town of St. Ives, with a population of 7000, has only one policeman. the reason being that total abstinence has so firm a hold upon the inhabitants that crime is almost unknown in the district.

According to a proposed Belgian law, persons found drunk in public, and publicans who serve drink to drunken persons, or children, will be punished by fine and imprisonment. Drink debts will not be recoverable.

The Church Missionary Society are about to issue a pamphlet, "Trafficing in Liquor with the Nations of Africa," from which it will be seen the children of Ham have been terribly cursed by the children of Japheth and of Shem.

The Bishop of Manchester warns emigrants to Australia, they must be "ready to endure." It is no place for those who, "when work is plentiful, loaf about public-houses, and when it is scarce sing in the streets, 'I've got no work to do.'"

The Licensed Victuallers' Association is to have its annual demonstration in Oxford early next month; and Oxford is now placarded with notices of a Gospel temperance mission to be held as soon as the licensed victuallers' give place, from March 10 to 20.

A Convention of Collegiate Prohibition Clubs was held lately at Cleveland, Ohio. There were present representatives from thirty-eight colleges and twelve States. It was decided to form an "Inter-College Prohibition Association" for the furtherance of the Prohibition movement throughout the States.

A VALEDICTORY SERVICE to medical missionaries was held on Tuesday week, under the auspices of the London Missionary Society, in Finsbury-park Chapel. Sir J. Risdon Bennett, M.D., presided. The following are the missionaries about to sail:—Mr. Sewell S. M'Farlane, M.B.C.M., Mrs. M'Farlane, and Mrs. Morrison, appointed to Tientsin; and Mr. A Fahmy, M.B.C.M., and Mrs. Fahmy, appointed to Chang-chow, Amoy. Mr. M'Farlane is son of the well-known missionary of New Guinea, and Mr. Ahmed Fahmy is an Egyptian, and a convert from Mahommedanism. Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson, Foreign Secretary of the Society, described the various fields of labour, and mentioned that the missionaries were departing to undertake work in new spheres, thus extending the medical branch of the missionary enterprise Rev. Edward White, of Kentish-town, delivered the address to the missionaries

ADVANCED CONSUMPTION.—CASE of Mrs. JONES, of TAUNTON.

This lady (formerly Miss M. L. Geyton, of BARNSTAPLE) was a patient of mine for a year and a half, and was gradually raised from a state of utter prostration to a state of health. She had been confined to her bed for two months before her friend, Miss Jones, of Newport, wrote me relative to her case. Consumption had carried off the father, the sister, aunts of the patient, and other relatives. Her illness had commenced six months before this, with loss of voice, severe pains, cough, spitting of blood, and all the secretions wrong. Palpitation, night-sweats, and distressing hysteric fits were also prevalent symptoms. "She cannot bear seeing any person [the friend says in the first letter above referred to]. She has kept her bed two months, and is wasting away."

The letter further says: "We are encouraged by hearing of cases near us in which our minister (Congregational), the Rev. J. Rutty, has interested himself."

Correspondence followed; and medicine, with instructions, was sent, extending over the period named. In about six weeks she was able to be removed from room to room, and many of her symptoms had much abated. Before three months, Miss Jones writes: "She is able to come downs airs for a few hours each day; she is wonderfully improved."

In less than five months she was able to be entirely downstairs. Her friend writes: "Considering the time of the year, she has made wonderful progress."

After this time, from going out in raw, foggy weather, she got a relapse; but from this she soon picked up again, and in a few weeks afterwards, writing me herself, she says: "I can now walk four miles without feeling worse. During the last month my progress has been extraordinary."

In the next letter Miss GEYTON says: "I am anxious to have my case published. I am a living wonder. Friends can scarcely realise that I am the same. They saw your name in the Christian Age. I have been sounded by a doctor. He pronounced my lungs to be healed. I trust you may be spared for many years."

I should have published this case among the cases of the previous series, but it was overlooked among my vast amount of correspondence. The patient is now married, and resides at 6, Grove-terrace, Taunton. She continued well, and wrote me, on behalf of a young girl, on New Year's Day.

NOTE. — Days of Consultation — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

LIFE OF RICHARD WEAVER.

(Cheap Edition.)

BY R. C. MORGAN,

Author of "At Jesus' Feet;" &c.

"In these pages we have evidence of what one man can do for the glory of God, and the salvation of his fellow-men, when the heart is right before God. When Mr. Weaver found pardon, his tongue was set at liberty; his heart was joyous; and he began to gather poor sinners around him to tell them his joys, and how he obtained them. The account of his labours for the good of others, as related by Mr. Morgan, will astonish many."—Wesleyan Times.

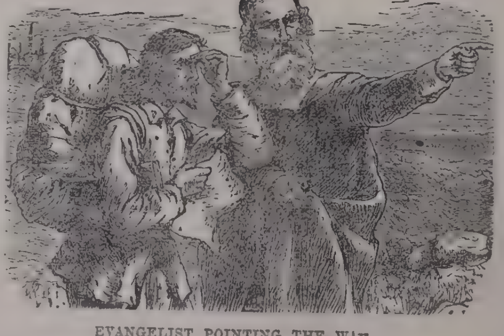
BUNYAN'S PILGRIM'S PROGRESS.

NEW EDITION, ILLUSTRATED. 6D.



EVANGELIST POINTING THE WAY.

"This CHEAP EDITION of A BOOK THAT WILL NEVER WEAR OUT will be heartily welcomed by the people generally."

Christian Commonwealth, Dec. 2, 1886.

"This is by far the BEST of all the CHEAP EDITIONS."

Christian Leader, Dec. 23, 1886.

"By far the best of all the cheap editions of 'The Pilgrim's Progress' that we have seen is one issued this week by Messrs. Morgan & Scott. Care has been bestowed upon the revision, the text having been early editions; a point all the more worthy of grateful recognition when we see so many conscienceless reprints, abounding in old and new blunders, tumbled into the market. The type is new, leaded, and very readable; and the book, printed on superior paper, and adorned with upwards of a dozen original illustrations, costs in its cheapest form only Sixpence. The portability of the volume is an additional feature worthy of note; it is so light that it may be held in the hand by the aged or invalids without exertion or causing fatigue."—The Christian Leader.

The Book World.

The Biblical Treasury. 2s. per vol. Sunday-school Union. We have several times expressed our appreciation of this useful series of expositions and illustrations. The volume before us (No. 7) comprises Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Lamentations, and throws light upon many obscure allusions to Oriental usages.

The Art of Religious Instruction. By John Gill. 2s. 6d. Longmans, Green & Co. In these days of Sunday-schools and Bible-classes, teachers will do well to adopt the hints contained in this useful book. It contains nearly 200 sketch lessons of considerable merit, which alone make it a handbook well worth having.

Illustrated Notes of English Church History. By Rev. C. A. Lane. 1s. S.P.C.K. These notes comprise the first fourteen centuries of Christian history, that is, up to the dawn of the Reformation. The author does not claim originality, but he deserves praise for the concise and judicious manner in which he has compiled this useful little work.

Echoes of the Word. By J. Hugh Morgan. 2s. 6d. Wes. Meth. S.S.U. These "short papers on New Testament subjects" will be appreciated by Sunday-school teachers and other students of the Word of God. They have already met with much acceptance in The W.M.S.S. Magazine, and many a fresh and suggestive thought is to be found in them.

History of the University of Oxford. By Hon. G. C. Brodrick, D.C.L. 2s. 6d. Longmans, Green & Co. It is an interesting study to trace the history of this ancient University, and its associations with men who have led public thought and feeling in past generations. There is an immense amount of information in this small volume, which is written in a capable and readable style.

The Reformation in France. By Richard Heath. 2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. It is important that Reformation history should be widely circulated at this time, when so much concession is being made to the encroachments of Rome. Popular ignorance has always been her greatest ally, and every effort to dispel this is to be highly valued. The vicissitudes of France have been very wonderful, and this account of the leading events from the dawn of reform to the Edict of Nantes is deserving of attentive perusal.

Wayside Melodies. By E. Ollernshaw. 1s. 6d. Hamilton, Adams & Co. This little volume of verse, chiefly sacred, will no doubt have its readers, and specially interest those who know the authoress. The hymns for flower services, and two pieces, entitled "Now" and "Afterwards," strike us as among the best. There is nothing very original in the book, and the rhythym is in places halting and uneven, but "Wayside Melodies" will not fail to cheer some sad hearts, and enliven glad ones.

Golden Counsels: Life Thoughts for Busy People. By Rev. W. M. Statham. 3s. E. Stock. This is intended for a Christian traveller's vade mecum. We can hardly do better than compare it to a pocket edition of "Cecil's Remains." That will ensure a welcome from very many. Mr. Statham has a well-stored memory, and no little originality and happiness of thought and language. Anecdotes and illustrations abound; nor is he afraid of humorous touches—what he calls "the smile that cheers rather than the sarcasm that burns." After full meditation and study preachers may with profit feather their arrows with "Golden Counsels."

The Walk that Pleases God. By Rev. Evan H. Hopkins. 1s. 6d. Marshall Brothers. A beautiful title, in no way unworthy of the contents of this little book. Combined with truly spiritual illumination, Mr. Hopkins has a preciseness, and a reverence for the original Greek of the Epistles and Gospels, not always found in writers on the subject of personal holiness. The offices of the Holy Spirit are not here confounded, and Christ is displayed as the only standard and source of ever-increasing holiness. Specially valuable are the chapters on "Deliverance by Faith," "Divine Manifestations," "The Christian's Ideal," "How Faith Grows," "The Yoke of Christ," and "Unction from the Holy One." As a pendant to this little book, we cannot resist naming Rev. E. Moore's New Year tract on Enoch "Pleasing God." (Partridge.) Under God, both will be strong incen-

"God Within us, and other Sermons," is the title of a new volume by Rev. J. Coots Shanks, of Arbroath, about to be issued by Messrs. Alexander & Shepheard.

A Young Man Fairly on his own Feet. 3d. Macniven & Wallace, Edinburgh. Everyone will be the better for reading this talk to young men, by the well-known Rev. A. K. H. Boyd. There is in it sterling counsel, given in a tone which secures its acceptance.

Praying Parents. 8d. per doz. Penman & Co., 33, Furnival-street, E.C. In a little envelope book Rev. J. Worthington Atken addresses some earnest words to parents on the importance of praying for their children, and expresses the conviction that if there were more praying fathers and mothers there would be fewer prayerless children.

Nell, the Story of a London Waif, is one of a series of Penny Stories for the People, published by Horner & Son, 27, Paternoster-square. This well-known and most touching story, as well as the others of the series, is admirably suited for widespread circulation, which more than one has already secured, having passed into the hundredth thousand.

Little Trials. 6d per doz. 66, Paternoster-row. The Author (A. M. Hellier) ably shows what is too often overlooked, that the little every-day crosses and trials are all contributory to those graces which constitute the beauty of the Christian life, that temptations overcome increase strength, and that these constitute a road designed to bring us nearer heaven.

Little Women. 2d. Heywood. This charming little quarterly, devoted to the interests of the Girls' Kitchen Garten, gives much insight into efforts that are being made to instruct young girls in the simple duties of house-work. Such an effort well deserves support, as does this paper, conducted by Miss Haddon, who is doing much to bring about this desideratum.

The second instalment of Mr. Washburne's "Reminiscences of the Siege and Commune of Paris," in the February Scribner's Magazine, contains a vivid description of life and incidents in Paris during the siege. It possesses the interest which attaches to a description of such stirring events made at the time of their occurrence, and in the midst of the excitement attending them.

FEBRUARY MAGAZINES.

The Welcome (6d., Partridge & Co.) has insured the interest of its readers this month by a sketch of Bishop Hannington and his work, with four illustrations, and the spirited and life-like portraits of "Tramps of Surrey" will be appreciated by many readers.

Footsteps of Truth (3d. J. F. Shaw & Co.) contains an article on "The Work of God in the Book of Ezra" that will be helpful to many of the Lord's people. "Love and Discipline" supplies good teaching for both private and public life. It is a valuable number.

The Homilist (6d. Houlston & Sons) promises to rise towards the heights it attained in earlier and better days. The present is the most helpful number we have seen for some time. But there is still plenty of room for improvement. One or two contributors fall into the fatal error of mistaking verbosity for profundity.

Illustrations. 3d. Kent & Co. The sketches in this delightful monthly, conducted by Mr. Francis G. Heath, are a continual source of refreshing, giving many a glimpse of places of interest. This month a pen-and-pencil portrait of Mr. John Ruskin is given, which will make it valuable to many of his admirers.

The Contemporary Pulpit (6d. Swan Sonnenschein, Lowrey & Co.) gives a striking sermon on "Christ the Lord of Nature," by Dr. Adolph Saphir, and an interesting account of a Sunday among London preachers. The latter article adds yet one more testimony to the truth that culture divorced from evangelical religion fails to fill empty pews.

Messrs. Cassell & Co.—The Family Physician (Part xxiii. 6d.) contains a useful chapter on Ambulance subjects. Bishop Ellicott's Old Testament Commentary (Part xxix., 7d.) comprises 1 Sam. i.—viii., with introduction to the Book. The Countries of the World (Part xxxiii., 7d.), with its beautiful engravings, introduces the reader to Tahiti and New Zealand.

Y.M.C.A., ALDERSGATE-STREET, E.C.—Mr. Henry Varley will address the noon prayer-meeting here every daynext week; and every evening, from February 14 to February 18 inclusive. Dr. Harry Grattan Guinness will conduct a special mission to oung men.

Y.W.C.A., SOUTHAMPTON.—The report presented at the annual meeting of this Association last week, showed that the number of members is about one hundred and thirty, and that the various branches of work have been progressing satisfactorily. The removal of the Institute and Home to 3, Lower Moira-place, has resulted in many advantages, and the comforts to be found in the latter have been enjoyed by more visitors than before. Mrs. Evered Poole has undertaken to act as referee for the International Union and Travellers' Aid Department, the object of which is to protect and care for the many inexperienced girls and young women travelling from one place to another, to meet them at the station, &c. Canon Wilberforce presided, and in his address spoke of the work as the most important that could be undertaken. He urged the members to do all they could do to strengthen the Association by persuading others to join, and pressed upon ladies the duty of co-operation. Lord Radstock also briefly addressed the CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

BROOKLYN.—The Lafayette-avenue Church lately held its annual meeting. Dr Cuyler presided, and the report showed a year of great prosperity. The present membership of the church is 2,45.

REV. E. P. HAMMOND has lately been assisting Dr. Levy at North Attleboro, U S. for a week or ten days, and, by last accounts, says an American paper, some twenty-five had professed conversion.

REV. JAMES GILMOUR is again in Mongolia, and is making great headway as a preacher by living the life of an itinerant vendor of medicines. He has a cloth awning, mounted on six sticks, which he fixes in the market-places and streets.

THE NEW BUILDING of the Y.W.C.A., New York City, has been dedicated. The new home of this useful Association is a commodious and beautiful structure, and well fitted for the good work that has been carried on for so many years past.

FREEDMEN IN THE SOUTH.—Mr. J. S. Smithson (late of Dublin), writing recently from Norfolk, Va., U.S.A., says:—We had 2200 coloured people at the meeting last night; many professed to decide for Christ. You have no idea of the ignorance and the fearful state of things existing here.

THE CABMEN AND BOATMEN of Brunnen, Switzerland, have taken an honourable decision. They engage to give a certain proportion—1d. or 2d., according to distance—for every party they conduct. Eighty per cent. of this money is destined for the building of a Protestant Chapel at Brunnen, and twenty per cent. for some benevolent purpose.

REVIVAL IN PHILADELPHIA.—The Union City Evangelisation movement in Philadelphia makes steady progress. Weekly prayer-meetings, held by groups of churches, are proving of great service in preparing Christians for the work, and bringing it to the notice of the masses. Many of the Episcopal churches join heartily in the movement.

INDIANS IN OREGON.—A correspondent of The New York Evangelist says: "Until the Reservation is entirely taken out of Catholic hands the Indians and religious interests will suffer. The spectacle of a religious teacher swearing around (as charged by the agent that one of the priests has been doing), is not calculated to assist in elevating the Indians.

BUFFALO, U S.—A few "Union" meetings were the most noticeable features of the Week of Prayer. These, though refreshing as meetings of that kind are likely to be, were marked by the conspicuous absence of the great numbers of Christian men who might have been there. Some of the Baptist churches in the city, where evangelists are employed, report a considerable religious awakening.

BOMBAY.—The Week of Prayer has been well observed. Daily meetings have been held in the Vernacular and in the English at the different churches. The number of attendants has ranged from 70 to 100. The native meetings have been equally well attended. An earnest spirit of prayer appeared to prevail. The Earl and Countess of Aberdeen were present at one of the meetings.

REV. SAM JONES commenced a course of services in Boston on Sunday, January 16. He spoke to two very large audiences. At the latter, it is estimated that 7500 came to hear him, only half that number being able to enter the building. Mr. Jones' peculiar methods and terse sayings have already made a considerable impression on the cultured Bostonese, and not since the great Moody revival has there been such an interest manifested in evangelistic services.—New York Witness.

SUNDAY CLOSING IN NEW YORK.—A meeting was held in Cooper Union to advance the movement for the early closing of stores on week days, complete Sunday closing, and a Saturday half-holiday. Ex-Judge Noah Davis, who presided, said that he believed early closing and the Saturday half-holidays would be greatly beneficial to the working classes, and, in consequence, to thewhole community. Another needed reform was the change of pay-day from Saturday to some day earlier in the week.

RUSSIA AND POLAND.—The Odessa correspondent of The Daily News writes:—The widespread and latent political discontent in Poland is the result of long growth, but during recent years it has rapidly ripened under the repressive intolerance of Russian policy with regard to the Poles. Since the last abortive Polish insurrection in 1863, Russian policy and administration in Poland have been marked by a spirit of repression, which, instead of growing lighter with the pacification of the old kingdom, has become more and more stringent.

THE AMERICAN MISSION BOARD has opened a new mission in Sonora, Mexico. It is a poor State; living is expensive, and the Government is a very uncertain quantity at present. There is some fear of revolution. A correspondent writes:—We have much hope of progress, but, on the other hand, we are afflicted here with the ravages of yellow fever and the black small-pox. The Indian wars, revolutions, scarcity of water, &c., are the cause of the present backward condition and poverty of the country. I have met several London gentlemen here—miners, &c.

MR. MOODY has been holding meetings in Dr. Goodwin's First Congregational Church, Chicago, attended by great audiences with deep interest. It is just ten years since he stirred the city from the platform of the Farwell Tabernacle. He comes now to see what ten years have brought forth. The city has about three hundred thousand more people in it than it had when he was last here. The question Mr. Moody asks is whether the churches are on the advance or retreating before the masses. He proposes to push a column of lay evangelists steadily forward, year after year, and he has already secured a citadel and the supplies for them.—The Interior.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, FEB. 13.—PSALM VIII.

An undoubted Messianic Psalm, as proved by its being so quoted, Matt. xxi. 16, 1 Cor. i. 27, Eph. i. 22, and Heb. ii. 6. The latter quotation throws much light upon the time contemplated in the Psalm. It is not "the present evil age," but "the world to come" whereof the Psalmist speaks. It is not to man as originally created in Adam, but as re-created in Christ, that the language of the Psalm properly refers. The original grant of dominion to man (Gen. i. 28) was lost by the fall, and only in Christ will the blessing then pronounced be restored. "We see not yet all things put under Him." In 1 Cor. xv. 27, "He hath put all things under Him" is quoted from this Psalm, as the last stage of the promised subjection of all things to Christ.

2.—Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings hast Thou ordained (Heb., founded) strength.—"The 'founding strength' refers to the kingdom of restoring grace in the humbled and exalted Son of Man, to the destroying and putting to shame of the enemies—nay, of the enemy of God in the most proper sense. The 'babes and sucklings,' while not to be dissociated from the natural figure, are to be certainly understood spiritually of the 'babes' in Matt. xi. 25."—Stier. The literal fulfilment in Matt. xxi. 16 is no contradiction of this.

5.—Thou madest him a little lower than the angels.—The word for "angels" is in Hebrew the ordinary word for God (Elohim). The LXX. and Chaldee Version took it to express generally what is superhuman, and rendered it "angels," and as such it is quoted in the New Testament, which gives it a general sanction that may well satisfy us. R.V., however, following modern criticism, renders it "Thou hast made him but little lower than God."

8.—The fish of the sea.—"Did not our Lord claim this to Himself by his miracle? (Matt. xvii. 27."—Kay.

MONDAY, FEB. 14.—PSALM IX.

"Psalms ix. and x. are bound together by many similarities in thought and expression. In the LXX. version they were joined together as one Psalm."—Kay. The word "Muthlabben" in the inscription is (according to Canon Cook) "an obscure term, probably the name of some well-known melody. The meaning may be 'die for the son,' or more strictly, 'death for the son." A very suggestive mystical designation of a Psalm which singularly points to Christ in resurrection giving thanks for the victory effected by his death. See v. 13: "Thou that liftest me up from the gates of death." The LXX. and Vulgate render it, "For the hidden things of the Son." The Psalm falls naturally into four stanzas of five verses each.

3.—When mine enemies are turned back.—"This verse states the cause of thanksgiving. It should run thus: 'Because mine enemies are turned back, (because) they stumble and perish before thy countenance.'"—S.C.

6.—O thou enemy, destructions, &c.—"The construction is difficult, but the most probable rendering seems to be 'the enemy are extinct (or 'come to an end'), in ruins for ever, and the cities thou (i.e., Jehovah) hast destroyed, their very memory has perished.'"—Ibid.

9.—The Lord also will be a refuge for the oppressed.—Although some victory of David over the enemies of Israel may have furnished the outward framework of the Psalm; David "being a prophet," speaks of a greater victory than ever he himself won, and, moreover, over a greater foe. His thoughts run on to the judgment day, when Christ's victory will bring forth fruit of salvation to the uttermost for all who come unto God by Him.

12.—Sing praises to the Lord which dwelleth in Zion.—"Such is the name by which He is called since the time when his earthly throne, the Ark, was placed on the hill of Zion (lxxvi. 3). Later prophecy beholds its realisation in its wider connections with the history of the future."—Delitzsch.

TUESDAY, FEB. 15.—PSALM X.

This Psalm is treated by the LXX. as a continuation of the last, both being given together as one Psalm One fundamental difference between the two Psalms, or two parts of one Psalm (if we so take it), is that the enemies of Psalm ix. are "heathen," or those outside the kingdom of God, whereas in Psalm x. "apostates and persecutors of his own nation, under the name of 'the wicked' stand in the foreground."

4.—God is not in all his thoughts.—The marginal reading is more literal, and is adopted by R.V., "All his thoughts are, There is no God."

5.—His ways are always grievous.—For "grievous" read "firm." So R.V. and most critics, Jewish and modern: "The wicked has no fear of man or God."

9.—He doth catch the poor, when he draweth him into his net.—"The Psalmist, who had compared 'the wicked' to a lion, lets this image drop here, and represents him under the figure of a hunter who casts his noose round the head of the unsuspecting animal. The thought which lies at the bottom of the figurative representation is this, that the wicked always unite cunning with open violence, and that consequently the poor servants of God must be poor every way unless the Lord deliver them."—Hengstenberg. It is worthy of note that both of these images are used in the New Testament of the great enemy of souls—that of a lion (1 Pet. v. 8), and that of a hunter ensnaring his prey (2 Tim. ii. 26).

18.—The man of the earth.—"Lit., 'from the earth,' whose resources are all drawn from the earth."—Kay.

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 16.—PSALM XI.

"Confidence in the Lord and his protection, even against the huge force of the wicked, is the one subject of the Psalm."—Claus.

1.—Flee as a bird to your mountain.—"The Psalmist has in his eye such as, though attached to a good cause, still rest upon a lower ground of faith, and hence their view, looking to the visible, that all was gone without remedy. In reality these persons are merely personifications of the doubting thoughts which arose of themselves in the mind of the speaker. The 'flee' is the voice of the flesh, which is met by the voice of the Spirit in the declaration, 'In the Lord put I my trust.'"—Hengstenberg.

2.—For, lo, the wicked bend their bow.—The timid friends indicate the ground on which they think flight necessary for the righteous, and this continues to the end of verse 3.

4.—The Lord's throne is in heaven.—We have here the answer of the righteous to his too timid counsellors. "It is a great exercise of faith when we are on all sides surrounded by darkness in the world, to seek light by looking up to heaven."

6.—Upon the wicked he shall rain snares, fire and brimstone.—"A literal reference to the overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrha (Gen. xix. 24), which formed a standing monument of the punitive righteousness of God, more especially as the scene of it lay before the eyes of the covenant people."—Hengstenberg.

7.—His countenance doth behold the upright.—Delitzsch and Kay render this, "the upright shall behold his countenance." Comp. Matt. v. 8.

THURSDAY, FEB. 17.—PSALM XII.

"The Psalmist complains of the corruption of the world, especially of its prevailing faithlessness and malice, and entreats the Lord to stand by his own (1—4). The Lord answers, and promises him a sure fulfilment of his prayer; and in this promise the Psalmist expresses undoubting confidence (5—8). It is not, however, the reigning corruption in itself, but what the righteous have to suffer on account of it, that is set forth as the ground for Divine interference."—Hengstenberg.

4.—Our lips are our own.—The Hebrew is literally "our lips are with us;" but the A.V. expresses most probably the sense, which R.V. also retains in text.

5.—Now will I arise, saith the Lord.—"A pr mise that the four times repeated prayer, 'Aris O Lord!' (iii. 7, vii. 6, ix. 19, x. 12) shall answered."—Kay. From him that puffeth him.—Delitzsch, Hengstenberg, Ewald, and othe render this, "In safety will I set him who pan or languishes for it."

6.—The words of the Lord are pure words.—"All words or utterances of the Lord, and tho in particular which the Psalmist has just r corded."—S.C. As silver tried in a furnace o the earth (R.V.).—This, as a general metapho shows the truth of all or any of God's promise but how much more point do the words contai when understood of that furnace "on the earth in which God's promises concerning redemptio were tested and found true? "All the promise of God in Him are Yea" (2 Cor. i. 20).

8.—When the vilest of men are exalted.—Ka and Delitzsch (R.V. also) render this, "Whe vileness is exalted among the sons of men."

FRIDAY, FEB. 18.—PSALM XIII.

A most plaintive Psalm, expressing the ex perience of a soul which thinks itself forgotte and deserted of God. But as such a soul pour out its heart before God, it soon experience relief; and so in a Psalm of only five verse there is a most rapid transition from the dept of woe to the triumph of confidence with whic it closes.

2.—How long shall I take counsel in my soul?—Kay renders this, "How long shall I arrang plans in my soul?"

3.—Lighten my eyes, lest I sleep the sleep o death.—"The lightening of the eyes spoken o is by the light of love beaming from God's countenance (xxxi. 16). Light, love, and life ar closely allied notions in Scripture. He upo whom God looks down in love continues i life, does not sleep the sleep of death, i.e. does not so sleep that the sleep become death."—Delitzsch. "The eyes of men wh are faint are dim; hence to 'enlighten th eyes' was used in the sense of reviving th spirits. See 1 Sam. xiv. 27—29: comp. Ezra ix. 8 Here the light is the manifestation of God' favour."—Kay.

4.—Lest mine enemy say, I have prevailed agains him.—The Psalmist regards his enemy as one whose triumph over him it is to the honour o the Lord to prevent. This is the reason why it i best understood of Satan, the great enemy of Go and of his people.

6.—I will sing unto the Lord, because He hat dealt bountifully with me.—A strong contrast t the forgetfulness and hiding of his face wit which the Lord is wrongly charged in the openin of the Psalm.

SATURDAY, FEB. 19.—PSALM XIV.

"Beginning with a lamentation regarding the frightful power and extent of corruption reignin in the world (1—3), the Psalmist looks from the watch-tower of faith with triumphant faith t the overthrow of impiety and establishment o righteousness (4—6). He closes with the wis that the Lord would send salvation and deliverance to his people."—Hengstenberg.

1.—The fool hath said in his heart, There is n God.—"The fool says 'There is no God,' no with the mouth, gesture, appearance, or othe external signs, for in such respects he ofte boasts before those who love God that he know God—but in heart, that is, in his inwar thoughts."—Luther.

2.—Upon the children of men.—What follow describes God's inspection of human natur as such, and the result. It includes "th righteous," who are by nature no better tha others. This is plain from Rom. iii., wher ver. 3 is quoted amongst other Scriptures whic proclaim the universality of human corruptio "that every mouth may be stopped, and all th world may become guilty before God."

7.—Oh that the salvation of Israel were com out of Zion!—"The wish here expressed foun its highest fulfilment in Christ, and its highes stage of development is in the future."—Hengstenberg.

Among the Churches.

 We shall be happy to receive from our readers brief items of news for this page, respecting Christian work carried on, or progress achieved, in connection with any evangelical church at home or abroad.*

EPISCOPAL.

Mr. Swann Hurrell has been licensed by the Bishop of Truro to work as a lay evangelist in that diocese.

A branch of the Church of England Working Men's Protestant Union has been formed at Stoke-on-Trent.

An anonymous donor has recently given the Reformed Church of England over £2000 for a special department of its work in Canada.

The Bishop of Peterborough will preach at the Chapel Royal, Whitehall, next Sunday morning, on behalf of a special Home for Rescue and Prevention Work.

At a meeting in support of Trinity College Mission, Camberwell, the Bishop of Rochester said the Mission had been wisely conducted, and good results were already apparent.

During the fifteen years Canon Erskine Clarke has been Vicar of Battersea eight new churches have been built in the parish, one entirely at his own cost. In his anniversary sermon, preached last week, he said he should regard himself as the trustee of the income of the benefice, and as long as he could maintain himself by his pen, guided by his brain, he should not touch it.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Mission work in Jamaica is extending in a remarkable manner.

The American Friends' Mission in Constantinople has a school for fifty children, and is engaged in various kinds of active Christian work.

The permanent Central Committee of the London Yearly Meeting has issued a circular to see if means can be devised for influencing Continental opinion towards peace.

The Friends in Norway, who are chiefly agriculturists, have been suffering a good deal of distress lately. The Standing Committee in London has sent them £50 as a token of brotherly sympathy.

Howard Nicholson has been holding mission meetings and afternoon Bible-readings in Leeds, Sunderland, and Gloucester; and Henry Stanley Newman has been conducting missions in Stockton-on-Tees, Herts, Beds, Bucks, and Northants.

As the result of a movement initiated by the church at Berkhampsted, Sunday-schools have been commenced in several of the adjacent villages.

Children's dinners are given on Tuesdays and Fridays by the church at Rugby (Rev. Arthur Morgan, pastor). About 230 children are served each time.

Station-road Church, Chippenham, has secured a mission-room in a poor part of the town, where mothers' meetings, classes for children, clothing club, &c., will be held.

Rev. Evan Edwards, of Torquay, has conducted Gospel services in various churches in Cornwall. The Baptist Union is largely helping in the financial work of the smaller churches.

Rev. Duncan Macgregor, of Dunoon, who has concluded a series of evangelistic services at Govan, will conduct similar services at Southside Church, Glasgow, during February and March.

An increase of 101 in the membership at Carr-road, Nelson, has occurred during the five years' pastorate of Rev. C. G. Croome. The numbers in the Sunday-school have also increased from 290 to 560.

During the five years' ministry of Rev. J. Wesley Bond, at Penge Tabernacle, 350 members have been added to the church, 98 of these during last year. The young men's and young women's Bible-classes are well attended, and much good is being done.

PRESBYTERIAN.

A Highland convention, under Dr. Somerville's presidency, was held at Invergordon on Tuesday.

Rev. H. M. Williamson, Belfast, has been proposed for the Moderatorship of the Irish General Assembly.

Rev. Dr. Thain Davidson has commenced his twenty-fifth year, or semi jubilee, as pastor at Colebrooke-row, Islington.

Rev. John Watson, missionary in connection with the English Presbyterian Church, has left London on his return to Amoy.

An anonymous donor has sent £500 to Rev. Mr. Waddell, of Newington Church, Belfast to defray the cost of a building to be used for evangelistic and Sabbath school purposes.

The honour of having the second largest membership of any church in the English Synod belongs to that at Newcastle-on-Tyne (Rev. J. B. Meharry, pastor). Dr. MacEwan's church at Clapham has the highest.

Rev. J. Stalker, of St. Bryecdale Free Church, Kirkcaldy, reports in his monthly record that many young women received a blessing during the last six months. A young women's society, classes for working girls, and Principal Rainy will oppose the movement in the Free Church for the revision of the "Confession of Faith."

Rev. William Robertson, home mission deputy, has been conducting a mission week in Burnbank Parish Church, Hamilton, with much success.

The missionaries at home on furlough, in connection with the English Presbyterian Church, have been and are assiduously engaged in deputation work.

Mr. Farwell, of Chicago, is at present in this country; on Sunday evening last week he delivered an evangelistic address in the church at Upper Norwood.

The membership of Somers Town Church (Rev. Z. B. Woffendale minister) is now 895. There is a large variety of mission effort to reach the dense population around.

Regent-square Church (Dr. Oswald Dykes, pastor) has contributed £28,907 during the last seven years for hospitals and the poor, and for home and foreign missions.

SALVATION ARMY.

From "The War Cry."

The memorial stones of a spacious Salvation Temple have been laid at Luton.

The Army opened work in Bâsle, January 2, in the midst of much opposition.

Captain Warner Dennis has conducted a ten days' mission at Pembroke-road Garrison Church, Portsmouth. Night after night there were professed conversions.

Mr. Ezekiel Rogers has conducted a successful three weeks' mission at Providence (New Connexion) Church, Hanley. Thirty new members have been welcomed into Bethesda Church, Hanley.

The Manchester Central Hall is at present the centre of a very important work, and is filled on Sunday afternoons. A carefully organised net-work of agencies is drawing the young, and the poor, and the outcast into Special services are being conducted in all the churches throughout the Camborne Circuit.

A united mission has been held in the Primitive Methodist Church, Baptist Chapel, and Town Hall, Redhill.

A very profitable eight days' mission has been held at Tooting, resulting in the formation of two new classes for young people.

Special services have been held at the Primitive Methodist Church, Northwich. Good work is being done in the school.

Revs. J. Rushworth, of Sowerby Bridge, and S. Laycock, of Greetland, have just concluded special mission services at Zion Church, Elland.

Consecration and evangelistic services held at Zion (New Connexion) Church, Batley, have resulted in a considerable access of members.

Mr. J. B. Atkinson, of Grainthorpe Hall, Lincolnshire, has for some weeks been conducting successful revival services in the Melton Mowbray Circuit.

Mrs. S. E. Osmond, who died at Reading on the 25th ult., was widely known as a woman of extraordinary devotion and faith, and was for many years a remarkably powerful and successful preacher of the Gospel.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Under the pastoral care of Rev. R. H. Lovell, Bromley Church is enjoying much prosperity.

Sunday evening juvenile services, commenced at St. Paul's, Newcastle, are being well attended.

A week of evangelistic services have been conducted at West Norwood Church, Chapel-road, S.E.

A seven days' mission at the Church at Worksop, by Gipsy Smith, of Hanley, has been greatly blessed.

Fifteen churches were aided by the Sussex Home Missionary Society and County Association during 1886.

A chapel is to be erected in the hamlet of Brownshill-green, a mission station of Vicar-lane Chapel, Coventry.

Special evangelistic services, recently conducted at Chester-le-street Church by several local ministers, have been much blessed.

A Young Men's Guild for Christian training and effort has been started in connection with the church at New Court, Tollington Park.

Rev. S. D. Hillman, of Ilkley, is holding special evangelistic services on Sunday evenings, and has thereby secured an increased attendance.

A mission to young men has been held at Leicester by seven members of Cambridge University, led by Rev. J. F. P. Hallowes, with good results.

The new Morley wing of the Congregational Institute, at Nottingham, has been opened. It embraces a common hall for students, and a lecture-room.

A Christian Institute has been established in Hoxton Market by members of Rectory-road Church, Stoke Newington (Rev. C. Fleming Williams, pastor).

The churches of the North-west District of the London Union recently assembled for the first time at a United Communion Service, held at Gospel Oak Church.

The church at Pentonville-road, King's Cross (removed from Tonbridge Chapel, Euston-road), under the ministry of Rev. Bevill Allen, is becoming a power in the district.

Various organisations, with a view to influencing for good the non-attendants at public worship, are actively at work in connection with the church at Lodge-street, Bristol.

The monthly addresses to working men, by Rev. F. W Newland, at Barking-road Church, have been the means of bringing in a large number of thoughtful artisans.

At a meeting of the Colonial Missionary Society held at Bristol, Rev. W. H. S. Fielden and others urged the importance of greater attention being given to the Colonies.

There was an addition of twenty-five members to Core's-end Church (Rev. C. Talbot, pastor) during last year. The two mission halls connected with the church are doing good work.

Eighty members have joined Clifton-road Church, Brighton (Rev. W. Crosbie, pastor) during the year, twenty-six of these from the Sunday-school and the Pastor's Children's Class.

Streatham-hill Church has now half as many more members as when Rev. J. P. Gledstone commenced his ministry. A new lecture hall has been erected, and seven new societies formed.

During the eight years' pastorate of Rev. C. A. Davis, at Sion Jubilee Church, Bradford, 485 members have been received into fellowship. Mr. Davis has commenced his ministry at Reading.

The three mission stations in connection with the Church at Dorking (Rev. G. Avery, pastor) are rendering good service. A special service for working people attracted a large number of those not in the habit of attending any place of worship.

About one thousand persons were helped at Christmas by the church at Stratford. Rev. J. Knaggs, pastor, lays great stress upon the necessity for work amongst the poor. A soup kitchen is in active operation, and dinners to children are being organised.

The membership of East-hill Church, Wandsworth (Rev. John Park, pastor) now numbers 483, nearly three-fourths of whom have been added during the seven years of Mr. Park's ministry. The reports of temperance and mission work are encouraging.

In the annual report of his work Rev. W. Evans Hurndall says: "Many a 'dark home' has been brightened during the year, many a sufferer relieved, many a heavy heart cheered, many a naked one clothed, many a troubled soul directed to the Saviour, many a hungry mouth filled, many a helpful word spoken." A new mission-hall and class-rooms are being erected.

RABBI RABINOWITZ has been on a visit to Glasgow, where he addressed the noon prayer-meeting in the hall of the Glasgow Christian Institute, and in the evening spoke at Mr. W. A. Campbell's fellowship meeting. On both occasions the large hall was filled with interested audiences.

UNION IS POWER.—The saloon is united. Democrat, Republican, Catholic, Protestant—when the saloon is the issue, the saloons go as one man. The condition is most serious. The souls and bodies of men are ruined. The enemies of all goodness are strong, resolute, united, cunning. We are halting, divided, hesitating, not willing to risk aught, or to pay aught. How long shall it be so? —National Baptist.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN. — The annual prayer meeting of the workers and London friends of this Society was held on Tuesday evening last week, in Lower Exeter Hall, and was very well attended. An hour having been spent in pleasant social intercourse, at the tea-table, Mr. Theodore Barnes presided over the devotional meeting. Mr. E. W. Thomas expressed the earnest hope that the Jubilee Year, which the country was about to celebrate, would be marked by the rescue of many poor girls from the dread slavery in which their unhappy lives were now spent.

Y.M.C.A., SAN FRANCISCO. — On January 3, the thirty-fourth annual meeting of this Association was observed. Reports were presented from all the working committees for the year, which indicated twelve months of marked prosperity in every department. Over 700 young men had been assisted in various ways through the the Committee on Visitation of the Sick, and other departments. One hundred and fifty thousand had visited the building during the year; and, altogether, it was one of the most successful and prosperous years ever experienced by the Association. They close the year free of debt, with a small surplus in the treasury. Over 600 young men had manifested a desire to become Ch

WESTWARD HO!

200 Trained Lads (First Party for this year) will (D.V.) leave "Dr. Barnardo's Homes" for Canada on March 17.

It is hoped that at least 600 carefully-trained youngsters may be placed out in the Dominion at an aggregate cost of £5,100 during the present year; 622 Boys and Girls having been emigrated during 1886.

£8 10s. will defray the entire cost of Emigrating one Boy.

£51 will do the same for Six Boys; £102 for Twelve Boys; or £170 for Twenty Boys.

Who, by promising one or other of these amounts, will help to give some of these young fellows a start in life?

Contributions for the Emigration Fund are urgently needed, and will be thankfully received and acknowledged by the Treasurer, Wm. Fowler, Esq.; by the Chairman of Committee, S. G. Sheppard, Esq.; or by the Founder and Director, Dr. T. J. Barnardo.

THE "PRINCE" HERESY.

THE RISE AND PROGRESS of the HERESY of Rev. H. J. PRINCE.

By Arthur Augustus Rees, Brother-in-law to Rev. H. J. Prince, and late Minister of Bethesda Free Chapel, Sunderland. Price 1s. per dozen; 7s. 6d. per 100.

"As soon as the judgment and the Word of God were given up, a wide door was opened for the entrance of the devil; nor did that wicked spirit lose the opportunity thus presented to him, but at once walked in, took charge, and assumed the character of the Holy Ghost. Having thus obtained the complete control of Mr. Prince, he led him on step by step, in mockery of the Blessed Spirit, to do and say the most outrageous things, in the awful name of God; and left him without any means of detecting the delusion, by having first persuaded him to abandon the only test by which he could discover it.

"Thus fell that dear child of God, Henry James Prince; and thus he will remain fallen till Jesus signally interposes to deliver him."—Extract.

WORDS OF WARNING
IN REFERENCE TO THE TEACHING of the "AGAPEMONE."

By Rev. D. B. Hankin, Vicar of St. Jude's, Mildmay Park. Price 1s. per 100; 7s. 6d. per 1000.

"I desire to lift up my voice against his [Mr. Prince's] teaching, and I declare that the 'Agapemone' heresy is one of the vilest that has ever been foisted upon the Church of Christ. Mr. Prince claims to be the Holy Ghost personified, the introducer of a new dispensation; and assures his followers that whosoever believeth in him shall not die, but henceforth be without sickness or pain."—Extract.

REV. JAMES CHALMERS, NEW GUINEA.

ONE of the foremost among that small band of brave men by whose efforts the savages of Papua, or New Guinea, are rapidly being won to Christianity, is Rev. JAMES CHALMERS, whose portrait we have the pleasure of giving this week.

He possesses qualities which are like so many passports to the bearer in the midst of a barbarous people. Attractive in appearance, above the average height, of strong physique, a frank and manly bearing veiled by an indefinable expression of modesty, presenting a personality to which the most treacherous cannibals at once give their favour, and soon after their confidence — these qualities, combined with great courage, tact, and knowledge of native life and ideas, have enabled him to penetrate into regions hitherto untrod by the white man.

It may be of interest to mention a few circumstances in Mr. Chalmers' history prior to his becoming a missionary in Papua. He was born in 1841 at Ardrishaig, Argyleshire, and became a member of the United Presbyterian Church in 1860. After a course of study at Cheshunt College and Highgate he was appointed to Rarotonga. Having married Miss J. R. Hercus he sailed from London in the John Williams in the month of January, 1866. At Aneiteum the ship struck on a reef, and returned to Sydney for repairs. After visiting several of the stations she was wrecked on the island of Niue, with some of the missionary party on board. They ultimately arrived at Rarotonga in May, 1867. In July of the same year Rev. E. R. W. Krause returned to England, leaving the Mission in Mr. Chalmers' charge. Here he conducted the pastoral work in the native churches, also the Theological Institution for training native preachers, and the various schools on the island. Having been appointed to New Guinea he left Rarotonga in May, 1878.

After some preliminary labours and early troubles on Suau or Stacey Island and the mainland he began his journeys, accompanied by Mrs. Chalmers, among tribes supposed to be hostile, travelling unarmed, trusting to Him in whose work he was engaged. He says, "Only once in New Guinea have I carried a weapon, and then we had spears thrown at us." Mrs. Chalmers had the happy art of drawing the savages to her, and of inspiring confidence. She seemed fearless, and made these wild children of nature greatly respect her. Resolute in character, no circumstances of a seemingly untoward nature could turn her aside from the plain path of duty. When her friends in Australia tried to persuade her to remain there for a year or two, while Mr. Chalmers selected a position and prepared a home, her firm reply was, "No! my place and my duty are with my husband."

(From Photograph by Messrs. Lindt, Melbourne.)

After five weeks' journeying, during which they had very great difficulties in obtaining bearers, they were detained for some time at Uakinumu. One night, after all in the village had retired to rest, a peculiar noise was heard, as of someone in great distress; then loud speaking, in a falsetto voice, and all knew that they had a spiritist near, and revelations were about to be made. The travelling party were all named, and the places they were to visit. Mr. Chalmers felt anxious, for if the revelation should be the least doubtful, no native would go with them. However, it was all right, they were good men and kind, and the villages would all willingly receive them. The influence of the tribal chiefs has been quite undermined by these sorcerers. until scarce any are left to wield authority. Now, however, the real power along the coast covered by the Mission stations is exercised by Mr. Chalmers, and also in many places far inland, for, under the name of "Tamate" (teacher), he is beloved by all. Everywhere "maino" (peace) follows the footsteps of Tamate. He settles their quarrels; often he is sent for from very long distances to act as the arbitrator among tribes which are at war. As an English naval officer testified lately, "Everywhere Tamate's influence is supreme;" he soothes their excitable minds, calms and drives away their fears with a power which to these simple people seems wonderful, so that the very name "Tamate" has come to signify "peace."

At the close of 1880 reports were brought to Mr. Chalmers that the Elema natives purposed making a raid to kill him and Ruatoka, the native teacher, and then attack right and left, and "pay off all accounts." Under these circumstances he resolved to visit Motu-motu, and beard the lion in his den. It was a bad season for travelling; the natives said it was too late, but he resolved to try. Before setting out he opened the new church at Port Moresby, and baptized the first three New Guinea converts. The church was crowded, and all seemed interested.

On January 10, 1881, he started. The leader ran away, but Huakonio, one of the baptized three, was willing to go. The boat's crew were considered fools, rushing into the arms of death. Wives, children, and friends gathered round weeping. Huakonio told Mr. Chalmers afterwards that every means save physical force were used to prevent their accompanying him, and added, "We know it is all right; the Spirit that has watched over you in the past—naming the various journeys—will do so now, and if we return safe, won't the people be ashamed?" The visit proved successful. Semese, the old chief of Lese, was pacified first. When met he was in a towering passion, and all that Mr. Chalmers could understand was that somebody was a thief and a liar. But wrath soon fled, and a feast was prepared; both chief and people were charmed, and quite willing to make peace, and pay a return visit.

This advantage was turned to good account, as Semese was taken on to Motu-motu, where Rahe, his son, was chief. Semese spoke nearly all night, exhorting to peace, and that now "Tamate" and the Port Moresby people had visited them, they ought no more to go about exalting themselves, fighting with their neighbours, and speaking evil of their friends. Thus peace was made. Rahe's son was named Tamate, and his namesake grimly observes, "I have no doubt he will be an expensive honour."

Soon after his return Mr. Chalmers baptized Kohn and Rahela, the first two women of New Guinea converted to Christianity. We echo his prayer: "May they be kept as true ministering women for Christ!"

In May, Mr. Chalmers left Port Moresby, and took a westerly course. He anchored in Hall Sound next day, opposite Delena. The chiefs, Kone and Lavao, came off, and said it was useless to go on to Maiva, it being impossible to land there. He went ashore at Delena, and, in a survey of the country, was astonished to find a beautiful tract of land, forming a splendid position for a mission house. Kone offered as much land as he wanted, and, after thinking it over, Mr. Chalmers decided to build, then landed his tents, and pitched them on the rising ground above the village.

When telling the people that there would be no work for them on Sunday, Kone said, "Oh, we know! and we too are going to be helaka (sacred) to-morrow." On being asked how he had come to know about Sunday, he replied, "From Boera." Thus the teaching given at one place reaches and influences many villages, and sometimes those are at a great distance. Mr. Chalmers found heathens repeating the Lord's Prayer, asking a blessing and giving thanks before and after meals, telling Bible stories, and preaching Christian doctrines, in very out-of-the-way places. The trading instincts of the people lead them to the villages, where the teachers are located, and they carry away more than the price of their produce.

On the Sunday following they had service, Kone being the interpreter. But the wary missionary was not deceived by outward appearances. About a week after occurred the Delena fray. When the fight began in the village there was a shout for the missionary to go and fight with his gun. He went, but unarmed. Rushing into the melée, he shouted "Maino!" (peace), and soon there was a hush in the terrible storm. Walking through the village, he disarmed some of the combatants. Then Kone pointed out "Arua," the chief, or sorcerer, of the attacking party. He recognised in him a man who, on a former visit, had left his presence in great wrath. Taking his weapons from him, Mr. Chalmers linked his arm, and walked him up the hill, talking kindly; he showed him the Mission flag, and said that was "Maino," at the same time warning him that on no account must he ascend the hill. All right; Arua would stop fighting. Soon after Mr. Chalmers was again brought out by the report that Kone was about to killed. More warriors had arrived. The attacking chiefs assured him they would not come near the Mission premises, but he replied, "Right, friends, but you must stop fighting, and on no account injure my friend Kone." Then he called a meeting, and they all agreed to peace. After the fray was over the Delena natives said, "Well, Tamate, had you not been here, many of us would have been killed, and the remainder gone to Naara, never to return."

After an absence of a few months Mr. Chalmers returned to Delena to get his boat for further aggressive work, and to take Kone with him. As he approached, all was hushed. Lavao stepped on board, and was asked, "Where is Kone?" After a time the reply came, "O Tamate, Kone, your friend, is dead, and we buried him on your ground, near the house of his one great friend." When Mr. Chalmers' feelings subsided, so that he could again speak, he asked, "Did Kone die of sickness?" "No, he was speared at a feast by your friend Laoma, who wished to kill a Naara man, and when about to throw a spear, Kone caught the Naara man and placed him behind him, the spear entering his own breast. On the second moon he died." Here is the lament of the Christian missionary:—

> My poor Kone! The kindliest savage I have ever met; how I shall miss you here! I had hoped you would become a great help in introducing the Gospel into the Gulf, and had now called to take you with me. How anxious he was to be taught and to know how to pray. I taught him to say, "God of love, give me light; lead me to Christ." Who will deny that my wind and rain-making friend has passed from this darkness into the light that he prayed for.

These are but a few of the incidents and experiences of our friend Mr. Chalmers. Those who would like to follow him further will find much to interest them in the journals, &c., published by the Religious Tract Society, under the title, "Work and Adventure in New Guinea."

Mrs. Chalmers, after twelve years' faithful service, had to leave New Guinea in ill-health, and died at Sydney on February 20, 1879.

Along the 500 miles of coast line occupied by the Mission stations of the London Missionary Society, the light continues to radiate with ever-increasing glow. Before leaving New Guinea, Mr. Chalmers partook of the ordinance of the Lord's Supper with over seventy converts, and in a joyful spirit writes: "The harvest ripens fast: where shall we look for labourers? The Master has said, 'Pray.' May they soon be sent. The light is shining, the darkness is breaking, the thick clouds are moving, and the hidden ones are being gathered in. We have already plucked the first flowers; stern winter yields, and soon we shall have the full spring, the singing of birds and the trees in full blossom. Hasten it, O Lord, we plead!"

MEDITATION AND SERVICE.

There are numbers of Christians who make no effort whatever to preserve the equipoise of their spiritual life; and, therefore, in some the purely meditative is allowed to outgrow and overshadow the practical, until the days might as well be passed in a monastery, or a convent, so barren are they of anything like toil in the fields which are white unto the harvest, and are waiting only for the sickle. "Choked with a waste of leaf" are such lives, whilst all around them are hearts hungering for help. The prayer of these semi-mystics might well be that of Vittoria Colonna, who, "graffed in that true vine a living shoot," sang three centuries and a half ago—

> Prepare me when Thou comest, Lord, to show
> Fruits answering to the stock on which I grow.

As Dean Goulborne has remarked, "The seraph himself, though indeed the spirit of adoration is upon him always, is not always engaged in direct acts of praise. 'With twain of his wings he doth fly'—speed forth like lightning—upon the errands on which God sends him. Gabriel, who stands in the presence of God, must come down to the earth, and enter beneath a humble roof in Nazareth."

But whilst care should be taken to repress the tendency to indulgence in the selfish enjoyment of seclusion from the conflicts and weary warfare of those who are in the world but not of it, none the less is it incumbent upon the Christian to beware lest the luxury of doing good leads away his affections from the bracing and invigorating altitudes of the spiritual life. It was from labour in the towns and among the people that Jesus led the disciples up into the high mountain apart by themselves, and was transfigured before them. But after they came down, and the Lord charged them to tell no man what things they had seen, "till the Son of man were risen from the dead," it was back to work for the multitudes that He took them. Labour; then prayer and worship, and after that toil again—this was the arrangement of the disciples in the presence of Jesus; why should we wish to improve upon Christ's own order?

MADAME LOPEZ RODRIGUEZ is, we are glad to hear, steadily improving in health, after a protracted attack of fever, followed by dysentery. Had she not been thus laid aside, the report of the work at Figueras would have been issued some three months ago, but she hopes it will be in the hands of her friends in a week or two. She asks the prayers of those who are interested in her work, which has suffered of late on account of her enforced inactivity.

THE OPIUM INIQUITY.—3.

By Rev. GOODEVE MABBS.

PERMIT me now to direct attention to the present position of the Opium Question. The matter being one of grave importance, reference to a few details will, I trust, be pardoned.

An Extorted Agreement.—The treaty which legalised the opium trade fixed the amount of the import dues upon opium, but expressly reserved to the Chinese the power to arrange the amounts and methods of its subsequent domestic taxation of the drug. However, fifteen years later these became the subject of negotiation. An Englishman travelling in China having been murdered, the British Minister not only demanded satisfaction for the act, but further seized upon the occasion to wring commercial concessions from the Chinese Government. He also claimed limitation of the port areas within which the domestic taxation of opium should take place; and he proposed that China should obtain compensation for what she might thus lose, by changes in the methods of collecting the dues, which would prevent their evasion, and thus tend to the advantage of the Chinese Exchequer. In 1876, after lengthened negotiations, accompanied on our part by threats of force, the Chefoo Agreement was signed.

Ratification Refused.—But whilst accepting all that the agreement conceded to Great Britain, our Government declined to ratify the opium clauses, alleging that if they did so "smuggling would be absolutely barred, and the (domestic) tax upon opium might be raised to any amount provincial governors pleased," a course which would be at variance with our traditional opium policy! In other words, they feared that the Chinese would use the powers thus formally confirmed for the purpose of restricting the trade in opium. Negotiations concerning ratification were carried on with the British Minister for six years; but we maintained our refusal.

The Agreement of 1885.—In January, 1883, we re-opened communications in London for the purpose of finding a basis of agreement short of the ratification of the original proposals. The scope of the negotiations was strictly confined by our Government to effecting this object. Eventually Great Britain reluctantly accepted proposals insisted upon by China which, by commuting various provincial imports into a fixed sum of 80 taels, payable at the port, at the same time with the import duty of 30 taels, would secure to her the dues which it was her treaty-right to impose; and, in consideration of this arrangement being definitely accepted by Great Britain, China bound herself for five years not to increase the amount of these dues. The agreement embodying these details was signed in London in July, 1885; but as yet it is only partly operative. Since the commencement of this year, notice has been given for putting it into operation at Shanghai, with threats of penalties and confiscation if evaded. Disputes with the opium merchants have already arisen in consequence, and the state of feeling is much strained.

Former Treaty Obligations Untouched.—The arrangements thus made had for their object to secure to China, to a certain extent, her share of a bargain which we had imposed upon her, and for which she had long since paid much more than an equivalent. The agreement did not touch existing treaty obligations at any point; and care was taken to exclude them from officially pointed out that the Agreement would not confer upon her freedom to do anything that had not been already recognised by the Treaty of 1860 as lying solely within her right. It did deprive her for five years of the right to augment her domestic imposts upon the drug. And yet the matter has been treated as if, on both sides, it marked a new departure in opium policy. What grounds are there for entertaining such a belief?

No Lightening of the Burden.—The negotiations were set on foot in London by our Government, to effect a definite but subordinate object, which was assumed to be for the advantage of China. If we did not concede the minimum which China cared to accept, they must necessarily fail. Very reluctantly this concession was made by us, and it was handsomely acknowledged by China as being a new experience. Yet because China was not coerced in a case which did not admit of coercion, the groundless claim is made that China has been set free as to her opium policy. Seeing, however, that the Treaty obligations remain as they were imposed, and that the incubus of the opium trade is no whit lightened, it is only reasonable to ask, From what has she been liberated?

China's Attitude Unchanged.—It is further alleged that the fact that, during the negotiations, China raised no protest against the trade, but that she entered into fiscal rearrangements with regard to it, shows a change of front on her part. But the limitation, by our Government, of the scope of the negotiations to the attainment of a definite object respecting subordinate details, distinctly precluded the raising of any protest on the general question. To have attempted to do that would have ensured another failure respecting the matters in hand. The time for such a protest would be in 1889 or 1890, when the tariff of the Treaty of 1860 would be under revision. And if no opportunity was afforded for protesting, how can the absence of a protest indicate any change of front on China's part?

What China has Gained.—It was certainly to the advantage of the opium interests that incorrect and unfounded impressions about the agreement, such as those adverted to, should be disseminated; and their ready acceptance may partly be accounted for by the tone of the anticipatory official announcements. But the facts as set forth in the printed correspondence afford no solid ground for entertaining them; neither are they held by China's official representatives in England. The main advantage secured to China by the agreement is this, viz., that the domestic taxes upon opium imposed by her shall not hereafter be evaded, and shall neither find their way into the pockets of corrupt mandarins, nor pass into the provincial accounts, but shall be paid into the Imperial Treasury. The effect of this arrangement on the trade itself has yet to be ascertained.

Need for Earnest Action.—It is peculiarly unfortunate that, owing to the acceptance of these erroneous views, for the last two years the public agitation against the trade should have been suffered entirely to fall through, and that the impression should anywhere prevail that one-half of the work to be done has already been accomplished. Practically, to put an end to the sin and the curse of the traffic, and to wipe out its dishonour, almost everything remains to be accomplished. The responsibility for the trade which rests upon Christian England is as great as ever it was. Under the circumstances referred earnest action is greater than ever it was before. Whatever consequences may be involved, right must be done. "Righteousness exalteth a nation; but sin is a reproach to any people."

The Wages of Unrighteousness.—Whilst we persist in governing India with the wages of unrighteousness, what reason have we to expect that prosperity will attend our efforts? Can God set the seal of his approval upon them? What wonder that there should be famines, and wars, and financial embarrassments, and languishing trade, and Irish difficulties? And even putting the question of Divine government altogether aside, what can be more reckless than to stake the prosperity of our Indian Empire upon millions of revenue which circumstances are surely working to undermine, and which it is in the power of a foreign Government to cut off, just as soon as it feels strong enough to face the consequences? Therefore, whatever obstacles may stand in the way of dispensing with the Opium revenue, they must be firmly and wisely grappled with, and an honest and adequate remedy must be devised. "Better is little with righteousness, than great revenues without right."

United Efforts Requisite.—In the efforts to put an end to this accursed traffic, the co-operation of Christian men and women is of the first importance. Its roots have struck too deeply into our system of government, and they have too long entwined themselves with sordid interests, to make the uprooting an easy task. To accomplish it will require the united endeavours of Christians, citizens, and fellow-subjects of all parties, classes, and bodies who love their country and regard the claims of righteousness. But, surely, foremost among them should be the followers of Christ. Every reasonable effort must be made to put an end to a trade which is a deep disgrace to a Christian nation, an unnecessary risk to the prosperity of India, a cruel and wicked scourge inflicted upon China, and a gigantic stumblingblock to the progress of Christian missions among the Chinese.

As a deeply moved and earnest worker for the last seven years in the movement for suppressing the opium trade, and, therefore, as one upon whom the present crisis perhaps casts more than a merely individual share of responsibility, I shall be happy to correspond with any who are willing to co-operate in this important work, who desire to enter into conference with others about it, or who may wish to arrange for addresses to congregations and the delivery of lectures upon the subject of our opium trade. Letters addressed to me at 73, Godolphin-road, Shepherd's Bush, W., will receive due attention.

SOCIETY FOR THE RELIEF OF PERSECUTED JEWS.—The work of this Society consists in helping, as far as possible, those sons and daughters of Abraham who have been driven out of European countries, and in aiding their settlement in the Land of Promise. Some land known as "Abraham's Vineyard" has been secured, and is used as a ground in which Jews may be trained in agricultural work; and it is hoped that other land may presently be acquired. Already it has been found that the people soon attain to considerable skill in agricultural pursuits, almost the only occupation at present open to them in Palestine. Seven colonies have been formed, in which nearly 14,000 Jews are working for their bread. The report contains much that is deeply interesting anent a subject which is occupying much attention at the present time—the general movement of Jews towards the land of their fathers, a movement to which they are impelled by the action of the governments of countries in which they have dwelt for centuries. The office of the Society is at 41

THE STORY OF JACOB RE-TOLD.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

(Concluded.)

XVI.—THE GOD OF JACOB.

Psalm XLVI.

It is very comforting to discover in how many parts of Scripture God calls Himself the God of Jacob. He seems to take special delight in the title which links his holy nature with one who, so far from giving promise of saintship, was naturally one of the meanest of men. We should not have been surprised to find Him speaking of Himself as the God of Israel, the Prince; but it is as startling as it is reassuring to find Him speaking of Himself, still more often, as God of Jacob.

But as we notice the careful reiteration of the designation, especially in the Psalms of David and the prophecies of Isaiah, we learn this priceless lesson, that He has not changed since He took Jacob in hand; that He feels towards such characters now as He did when He began his gracious work of renewal in that poor cramped heart; and that He is ready to do as much for all who are conscious of being equally worthless by nature, and who are willing to put themselves into his gracious hands, which reach down from heaven to earth "moulding men."

There is little doubt that God would do as much for all the readers of these lines, if only they were willing. And it is the object of this closing appeal to urge my readers to let Him have his gracious way with them. As we have studied together Jacob's life and character, have you not been keenly conscious of similarities between him and you? You too may be cunning, crafty, and deceitful, or you may be prone to outbursts of ungovernable temper, or you may be cursed by unholy desires that honeycomb your better nature, or you may be constantly brought into captivity to some tyrannous sin. Now there is no need for this to be your hapless lot for one moment longer, if only you will hand yourself over to the mighty God of Jacob.

At the door of a mission hall in a low and degraded neighbourhood, a Christian man, one evening, was inviting the passers-by to go in to the service, which was about to commence. "But my coat is in rags," replied a wretched-looking man. "That is no matter," was the answer; "there's a man inside without a coat at all." It was quite enough to remove all further hesitation, and he entered. Forgive the simple illustration, by which I wish to press home my meaning on those who may question if their nature is not too ignoble, and their evil habits too confirmed, for them to entertain the hope of saintliness. Your case is not hopeless. If God could make a prince of Jacob, He can do as much for anyone. It is hardly possible for one of us to be more hopeless than Jacob was to begin with, and the same Lord who was so rich in mercy to him, will be as rich to all them that call upon Him in truth.

I. Cultivate a Holy Ambition.—There is no tendency of the unrenewed heart more subtle or dangerous than ambition. "By this sin fell the angels." And yet, if it is properly curbed and kept, ambition plays a useful part among the motive-forces of human life. It is a bad sign when a lad or a man has no desire to improve his position, and get on. In all likelihood he will always be with the rest of the rubble at the bottom of the hill, without the desire or power to stir. And it is well to cultivate a holy ambition to be all that God can make us, to grasp all the possibilities that lie within the reach of faith, and to apprehend that for which we have been apprehended of Christ Jesus.

Such an ambition fired the heart of the Apostle when he said: "Not as though I had already attained, or were already perfect, but I follow after; forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus" (Phil.

content to be always a Jacob. Do not settle down to life-long slavery beneath your merciless oppressors. Do not suppose that you must always be what you have been. "The arrows are beyond thee;" make for them.

This holy ambition may be aroused by the study of Christian biography. Every time you read or hear of God's grace being magnified in some beautiful and noble life, thank Him; let your own ideal be raised, and ask Him to do as much for you. But there is nothing which will quicken this sacred spark into a flame so soon as the devout study of the Bible. There are such wonderful openings-up of the possibilities of Christian living and being in almost every paragraph. Constant familiarity may have rubbed them bright and smooth, like some well-worn coin; but if only we will let the Holy Ghost re-cut them for us, we shall be perfectly astonished; and as, one after another, these ideals of God's own heart open to our gaze, let us entreat Him "to fulfil in us the good pleasure of his goodness, and the work of faith with power."

Let this be deeply engraven on your heart, as the sacred page is turned, that every promise is for you, and that God is able to do exceeding abundantly above all you can ask or think; and then look up to Him, and claim that He should do as He has said.

II. Make a Complete Surrender to God.—Before God will commence his gracious work on a human spirit, it must be entirely surrendered to Him. The key of every room and closet and cupboard in the being must be put into his hands. Every province of the life must be placed under his government. There must be no keeping back, no reserve; to withhold one thing, even the least, will vitiate the whole transaction, and leave a foothold for the self-life, from which it will speedily spread back throughout the whole nature.

Who would take a house recently infected by small-pox, unless the whole of it were thrown freely open to the officers of health? Who would pretend to advise a friend involved in financial difficulties, unless the whole of his liabilities were freely disclosed? Who would prescribe for a disease, unless the patient told all the symptoms and entirely gave up all other means of cure? And so God will not undertake the case of any poor child of his unless there be first a complete and entire surrender of the whole being to his gentle healing work.

Some time ago, as I was passing down one of the poorer streets in Leicester, I remarked a notice in the window of a most dilapidated shop, the trade of which had for some time past been ebbing away. The notice was to the following effect: "This shop will shortly be opened under entirely new management." And as I stood for a moment there it seemed as if the whole building put on a kind of hopeful smile, as much as to say, "I am so glad that I am to be put under an entirely fresh management." Several days afterwards, as I passed that way again, I found a small army of whitewashers and paper-hangers at work; and on the next occasion, the change in management was evident to the most casual eye, for the whole place had a clean, sweet look about it which was quite attractive.

Now this is just what you require—you with the Jacob nature. You have been trying to manage yourself all too long. A change is evidently needed, but it must be complete. There must be nothing left of yourself at all. Everything must be absolutely surrendered to that mighty God of Jacob whom the Psalmist made his refuge, and who is able to take bankrupt souls, and make them heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ. Why should you not make that surrender now?

Instances crowd upon my pen, eagerly asking mention, of those who have entered into experiences of undreamt-of blessing through the strait gate of entire surrender. But I forbear to give them here. It is enough to point the way, and leave all to enter the golden land who will.

When you come to the point of self-surrender, it is highly probable that some one thing will suggest itself to your mind, which it is very difficult to transfer from your control to that of retain it under your own management. You are not quite sure whether He may not introduce some sweeping and painful changes. You stand in dread, as the lad before he throws himself into the buoyant waves. But such fears are most unworthy of our loving Master. He will take away nothing which it will do us no harm to keep. He never amputates a limb without using some anodyne to lessen the pain without injuring the health. He will never give us one thrill of anguish from which it would be possible to save us.

Do not be afraid of giving all up to the lovely will of Him who is love, and who will not break the bruised reed or quench the smoking flax. If your child were to say, "I am going to give my life over to your ordering; do all you will," would you begin to make him miserable? Would you not rejoice in the opportunity of arresting him in courses which were harming him? Would you not gladly embrace the opportunity of filling him with joys that he could never have realised for himself? And your heavenly Father will not do less for you; only trust Him with all.

And should there be things in your life which you find it hard to abandon—dear as right eye, or hand or foot; involving the happiness of others as well as your own—tell God that you give them over to Him, and that you are willing to have his will done, if only He will bring it to pass in his own good time and way. And if you cannot say as much as that, tell Him that you are willing to be made willing; hand over your will to Him though it seem to be as a piece of cold, hard iron, sure that He can soften and weld it into the pattern on which He has set his heart.

> Renew my will from day to day;
> Blend it with Thine, and take away
> All that now makes it hard to say,
> Thy will be done.

There is even a more excellent way than any, which is within the reach of the feeblest hand, and that is, to ask the Lord to come into your life to take that which you do not feel able to give. The only matter of which you need be careful, is your willingness that He should have all; if that is assured, the rest may be safely left to his gracious arrangement. Directly you are willing, the door is opened to Him, and He instantly takes full possession.

III. Be careful not to thwart God's workmanship.—Of course there is a sense in which we cannot resist or impede the execution of his sovereign will. "He doeth as He will amongst the armies of heaven and the inhabitants of earth." And yet, on the other hand, we may hinder and counterwork his loving purposes. "How often would I...but ye would not." Let us be on the guard against this disastrous resistance; and be ever on the alert to work out that which God is working in us, "both to will and to do."

Once, the prophet Jeremiah (Jer. xviii.) was led to go down into the valley, where the potter was at work, moulding clay on a wheel. And as he stood by to watch the skilful manipulation of the clay, the prophet had, of course, no idea what pattern was in the designer's mind; though, probably, it was one of the noblest conception, and destined for some royal or special purpose. And so, beneath those rapid revolutions of the wheel, the ideal began to take shape. Then suddenly the clay was taken from the wheel with an exclamation of disappointment, and the design was foiled and spoilt. Why? Because the potter was wanting in skill? No, but because the clay refused to take on the shape which he had designed. His work was, therefore, marred on the wheels, and he was compelled to make of that clay some inferior vessel from that which he had intended. It might have served a noble purpose in the royal household, or even in the Temple service, but it was now fashioned into a coarser form, for some mean purpose in a peasant's home. The lesson was meant for Israel, but it will serve for us.

Speaking after the manner of men, may we not say, that when God created us anew in Christ Jesus He conceived a noble ideal, after the pattern of which we might have been conformed? And if we had only yielded to Him more completely, that ideal would long ago have revealed always been plastic in his hands; we have not obeyed the promptings of his Spirit; we have quenched and grieved Him, and we are far different to-day from what we might have been, and from what God intended us to become. Shall we not confess this with tears and shame? Shall we not take unto us words and turn to Him, saying, "Now, O Lord, we are the clay, and Thou our potter; we are all the work of thy hands. Be not wroth very sore." And if a man purify himself from the sins which have hindered the Divine Workman, he shall yet become "a vessel unto honour, sanctified, and meet for the Master's use, and prepared unto every good work."

I do not deny that God will fulfil his purpose in us, even though we hinder Him, but it will be carried through, as it was in the case of Jacob, at a terrible expenditure of agony, and the shrivelling of the sinew of our strength. The yoke will have to be borne, and the long furrows cut, and if the unaccustomed heifer prove restive, its struggles will only chafe sores about its neck, but it will ultimately be broken in. On the whole, therefore, it is always better to take the yoke of Divine purpose, offered by our Lord as his: "Take my yoke." And remember, a yoke is for two. Our Lord yokes Himself at our side, and paces by us, step by step, doing for us what Simon the Cyrenian once did for Him, on the way to Golgotha.

IV. Seek the Fulness of the Spirit.—That Spirit dwelt in Israel, as the sun flushes the topmost summits of the Alps with a roseate glow, long before it bathes the valleys in its meridian light. But in this blessed dispensation, He is given, not to saints and prophets only, but to all, to sons and daughters, to old men and children, to servants and handmaidens. "The promise is to you and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call" (Acts ii. 39). And it is only as we receive this sacred gift, in all its fulness, that we can hope to attain to the royal standard of the Israel-life. That blessed Spirit is the Spirit of the Son, the Spirit of the one royal Man that ever walked the world; and if we would have his nature, we must have his Spirit, not in drops but in rivers, not as a zephyr breath, but as a rushing mighty wind.

This is the dying need of the Christian Church in this country. We have learning, rhetoric, fashion, wealth, splendid buildings and superb machinery, but we are powerless for lack of the power which can only be obtained through the fulness of the Spirit. Of what use is a train of sumptuous Pullman cars without an engine throbbing with the power of steam? We have too largely forgotten the exhortation: "Be filled with the Spirit." We have thought that the fulness of the Spirit was a speciality for the apostolic age, instead of being for all time. And thus the majority of Christians are living on the other side of Pentecost. We can never be what we might be until we have got back to apostolic theory and practice in respect to this all-essential matter. Oh, that God, in these last days, would raise up some fire-touched tongue to do for this neglected doctrine what Luther did for justification by faith!

In the meanwhile seek this blessed filling. It is only possible to emptied hearts, but just so soon as a vacuum has been created by the act of entire surrender, there will be an instantaneous filling by the Holy Ghost in answer to expectant desire and eager faith. For the Holy Ghost longs to enter the human heart, resembling in this the air, which is ever seeking to enter our homes by every keyhole, crack, and aperture. Do not wait to feel that you have Him. Be sure that you do possess his fulness, if only you have made room for Him, and go on acting in the strength of his mighty power. So shall you be an Israel, and have power with God and man.

These words, of course, apply only to those who by faith have become the justified children of God. If any who are not assured of this should have read thus far, let them now make a complete abandonment of themselves to the Son of God, to be saved by his death and life, just as He will. This is the first essential step towards royalty. To as many as receive children of God, even to as many as believe on his name.

Life is no child's play to those who enter into God's purposes, and in whom He is fulfilling his sublime ideals. But, with the dying Kingsley, we are sure that all is right and well since "all is under law." When the discipline is over we shall be more than satisfied with the result, and taking our stand amongst the princes of the the royal blood, we shall ascribe eternal glory to Him who loved us in spite of all, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and out of Jacobs made us Kings unto God.

For the Young.

GOUNDO, THE REDEEMED SLAVE.

Dear Boys and Girls,—If I do not write to you very often, I always read the letters which other friends write in The Christian; and when I read the interesting picture letter about the Congo, I thought I would tell you about a young African girl whom I have learned to know and love in France.

We have just come back from a visit to a girls' boarding-school at Annonay. I think some of you know the name, perhaps, but you do not know how often the name only has cheered us in our rather discouraging work among the mountains of Dauphiné. Sometimes we hear that there is a new teacher in such and such a village, and that she is from the Annonay School. Then we say always, "She will try and do something for the Lord;" and we are not often disappointed. A really active Christian school is a blessing in any country, and when we tell you that for many years this school has been doing a quiet, noble work in preparing young girls not only to be teachers, but Christian teachers, you will understand why it is so dear to us. It was a great pleasure to see so many bright, intelligent girls looking up at us, and a treat to hear them singing, many of them with all their hearts—

Racheté, racheté, par Ton sang sur la croix.
(Redeemed, redeemed, by Thy blood on the cross.)

But among them there is one who knows by experience what it is to be "rachetée" (redeemed), and this is the young girl of whom I am going to tell you. She was born somewhere in the centre of Africa; no one knows where, some think in the Soudan. African travellers who have seen her say she must be the daughter of some chief, for she has almost a queenly bearing, and her small hands and graceful head, they say, prove that she is of noble race. But no one knows.

One day the wife of a missionary, herself an old pupil of Annonay, noticed a poor wretched, neglected little slave girl, almost a baby. This was Goundo. She wrote about her to her old school-fellows, and they soon decided to raise the money to redeem the poor child. I cannot tell you how all was arranged, but the little orphan was bought and received into the missionary's family, comforted and cared for and taught. Then other kind friends proposed to pay for her voyage to France, and to place her in the school at Annonay. You may be sure there was great excitement in the school when their redeemed slave arrived. One of the scholars remembers how they all wanted to welcome her, but they were afraid to kiss her dark cheek; but they determined to do anything rather than hurt the poor child's feelings. This was years ago, and now no one thinks of the difference of colour; she studies, plays, sings just like anyone else.

She is not likely to read The Christian, as she has forgotten the little English she knew, so I think I may tell you how those who love her have been cheered during the past few months in seeing her give herself heart and soul to the Saviour who has done so great things for her. A stranger pastor came to speak to the girls. I was present to heal as he spoke that night. It was a solemn hour as one young heart after another was yielded to its Master, and among them was Goundo. It was a real transformation, they say, for her, and now no one can doubt to whom she belongs, as one sees the dark face fairly radiant with solemn joy as she sings—

Tu m'annonces la vie, Toi qui m'as rachetée;
Sous Ton joug je me plie, délivrée, délivrée!

(Thou proclaimest life to me, Thou who hast redeemed me,
To Thy yoke I yield, set free, set free.)

You will guess, I think, without my telling you, that Goundo is preparing to go back to the missionaries by whom she was rescued, to help in their work. A few more months among her dearly-loved friends and teachers here, and then she will be among African scenes, telling out the glad story of redemption to those who do not yet know it. She has another name, but I give you the name by which she is known at school, and which seems to suit so well with the dark, happy face, crowned with its crisp black hair. We are praying, and she is praying, that when she goes she may not go alone, but that the Lord will put it in the heart of some schoolfellow to go with her to win souls for the Master.

It does not seem so difficult a thing in England, but in France to leave one's native country and one's parents seems too much to ask of any French girl, or of her mother, even if she knows how much the Lord Jesus has done for her.—Yours very sincerely, S. R. Geldard.

THE FIRST TANGLE.

Once in an Eastern palace wide
A little child sat weaving;
So patiently her task she plied,
The men and women at her side
Flocking round her, almost grieving.

"How is it, little one," they said,
"You always work so cheerly?
You never seem to break your thread,
Or snarl or tangle it, instead
Of working smooth and clearly.

"Our weaving gets so worn and soiled,
Our silk so frayed and broken;
For all we've fretted, wept, and toiled,
We know the lovely pattern's spoiled
Before the king has spoken."

The little child looked in their eyes
So full of care and trouble;
And pity chased the sweet surprise
That filled her own, as sometimes flies
The rainbow in a bubble.

"I only go and tell the king,"
She said, abashed and meekly;
"You know he said in everything —"
"Why, so do we!" they cried, "we bring Him all our troubles weekly."

She turned her little head aside;
A moment let them wrangle;
"Ah, but," she softly then replied,
"I go and get the knot untied
At the first little tangle!"

O little children—weavers all!
Our broidery we spangle
With many a tear that would not fall,
If on our King we would but call
At the first little tangle.

SEAMEN IN JAPAN.—Referring to an account in our last issue, Mr. T. Austen (not Anstie, as spelt in our notice) writes:—You will be glad to learn that we have already received funds for ten beds in the Sailors' Home. We are leaving England to renew our labours at Yokohama, the first week in April. Till then we may be addressed at 19,

ROMANISM and PROPHECY.

LECTURES BY REV. H. GRATTAN GUINNESS.

I. DANIEL'S FOREVIEW.

If length of study and laboriousness of research are any qualifications for a teacher, we should think there are few living men so well able to instruct the public mind on historico-prophetical subjects as Mr. Grattan Guinness. The Exeter Hall Y.M.C.A., and the Protestant Educational Institute, must therefore be deemed fortunate in securing Mr. Guinness's services for a course of lectures on "Romanism and the Reformation, from the standpoint of Prophecy," the first of which was given on Wednesday evening, last week. There was a fairly good audience of both sexes, and the deepest attention was paid to the graphically told narrations of the lecturer. The fact that there is to be an examination at the close of the series, and prizes given for the best answers to questions, no doubt helped to increase the number of note-takers. These prizes are to be awarded in four divisions—to Readers of the Church of England Scripture Readers' Society, missionaries of the City Mission, members of the Civil Service Prayer Union, and to general students. The important topics set down for discussion are of themselves sufficient to attract thoughtful students of past and contemporary history, and we would advise young friends especially to attend as often as possible.

Having been introduced by Mr. George Williams, the lecturer said he would go at once to the core of the subject. He could give but a faint reflection of the impressions made on his own mind by the study of this question during the last thirty years. He could not take his hearers through the Continent and Ireland and there witness the effects of the Romish system; or through the many volumes of history and martyrology he had explored during those years. All he could do would be to give some of the results of this research.

Let us, first of all, define terms, he said. Romanism is apostate Latin Christianity, as contrasted with the Greek and other forms of Christianity. The Reformation was the return, three centuries ago, to primitive, or non-apostate, Christianity. Prophecy is the Divinely given mirror of the future.

Look then at the Romish system in its real character, as displayed by its own acknowledged standards. The Papacy is a monarchy claiming absolute supremacy over the whole human race. Though dispoiled of its temporal power it has abated none of its pretensions. The Papacy is the centre of the Romish system, and the centre of the Papacy is the principle that the Pope represents Christ, who is God; therefore, the Pope represents God on earth. That is the stupendous axis of the whole. In support of this, the most extraordinary and audacious claim ever made by anyone on the earth, the lecturer quoted liberally the sayings of various Popes from Boniface VIII., in the fourteenth century, down to those of the present century; as well as the dicta of other high Papal authorities. To every Pope on his coronation these words are addressed:—"Thou art the father of princes and kings, and the governor of the world." Quoting from the fortieth page of the "Catholic Directory" for this year, Mr. Guinness read a description of the Catholic Hierarchy, at the head of which is his Holiness the Pope, who is also described as Bishop of Rome, Vicar of Jesus Christ, successor of St. Peter, Prince of the Apostles, Supreme Pontiff of the Universal Church, Patriarch of the West, Primate of Italy, Archbishop of the Roman Province, Sovereign of the temporal dominions of the Holy Roman Church."

As to the features of the Papacy, consider a moment, its place, its time, and its character. On the first point two things may be noted. The Papacy is geographically Roman, and ecclesiastically it is Christian. Its rise was about the sixth century, and it reached its climax in the twelfth or thirteenth century. The central truth as to its character is this: that it is the vicariat; the Pope is described as Quasi Deus—as God on earth. He is blasphemously called "the Holy Father." He claims to be the only Head of the Church on earth—in the words of Cardinal Manning, "the last sole supreme judge on earth." He has arrogated the prophetical, the priestly, and the kingly offices of Christ. He adopts the titles of Christ and the functions of the Holy Ghost. He claims to be the infallible teacher of faith and morals. He has assumed the honours of Jesus Christ. Time did not permit of the lecturer going in detail into these astounding claims. He quoted from a book by Cardinal Manning as to the dogmatic teaching of the Pope, to the effect that when he speaks ex cathedra he is possessed of infallibility, and his declarations are "irreformable."

As to the use the Papacy has made of its power, Mr. Guinness said it is a dominating monarchy. It teaches another Gospel, which is yet not another Gospel. It strives to suppress the true Gospel and crush as far as possible the true Church. The "Canons and Decrees" of the Council of Trent of the sixteenth century contain the creed of Pius IV., which embodies the belief of the Church. Mr. Guinness read the twelve Articles of this Creed, which was added to the Nicene Creed. These articles lay it down as a dogma that the Church admits tradition; regards Scripture according to the sense and interpretation of the Fathers; receives the seven sacraments, all of which confer grace; admits the ceremonies of the Church; believes that the mass is a true and proper sacrifice; accepts transubstantiation, purgatory, the invocation of saints, and the veneration of relics; worships the images of saints; recognises the power of granting indulgences; swears true obedience to the Pope; and anathematises all heresies and heretics. This is declared to be "the true Catholic faith, out of which none can be saved." Shillingworth, in his "Religion of Protestants," truly says, he that would usurp lordship and tyranny over any people needs no new revelation; he has only to claim to interpret Scripture as he pleases and add to it as he pleases. That is what Rome has done.

Mr. Guinness had necessarily to omit much that he could well have said as to the use the Papacy has made of its power, to suppress the Gospel and the true Church; and the cruel relentless wars that Rome has waged to this end. On the table were piles of volumes relating to these historic events; e.g., the history of the Waldenses, Southwell's, Clarke's, and Foxe's Martyrs, histories of the Inquisition in America, Spain, and elsewhere, &c. Passing on to the main topic announced for the evening, he gave a brief account of "Daniel's Foreview." If prophecy is a mirror of the future, it must of necessity refer to the Romish system, which has borne so large a share in the course of events during the Christian dispensation. Prophecy, indisputably, does so. Reviewing in outline the picture of the four great Gentile Empires, as set out in Daniel's recorded visions, Mr. Guinness dwelt more particularly on the fourth, or Roman. No interpreter or historian of any authority questions the applicability of the fourth wild beast of the vision to the Roman Empire. The second of the visions presents a more vivid view of the character of this fourth kingdom, and refers also to the rise of the persecuting little horn.

The special features of the fourth Empire, according to both visions, are strength and ferocity, its division into ten kingdoms, and its destruction at the advent of the Ancient of Days. The very name, "Rome," means might or force, and this was truly verified in its history. Rome's conquests extended over nine centuries, and it crushed kingdoms alike civilised and savage. The ten horns of the fourth beast may well be deemed to represent, not individuals, but separate kingdoms, as was the case with the two horns of the second, and the four of the third beast. Rome was originally one, and undivided; in the fifth century it was broken up into fragments by the invasions of the Goths and Vandals. Ten Gothic kingdoms arose in Southern Europe the average number has been ten, and there are still ten to-day. Their last condition was to be iron and clay, well representing the combination of democracy and imperial rule in Europe. This fourth kingdom, in its divided state, is the last of the world powers; after that there comes in the everlasting kingdom of God.

Finally, Mr. Guinness gave a rapid outline sketch of the course of the persecuting "little horn" that was predicted "to wear out the saints of the Most High." Most interpreters, Papal as well as Protestant, have recognised in this persecuting power the predicted "Antichrist." Jerome in the fourth century plainly described it as one who essayed to be Quasi Deus. By Rome's own admission in the Douay Bible the little horn of Daniel is Antichrist. History has shown it too clearly to be the Roman Antichrist, but this the Romish Church ignores, or vainly strives to disprove. In all its features the little horn answers to the Papal power. Volumes have been written to show this marvellous correspondence, and who can doubt that Rome is the Antichrist, so clearly and wonderfully foretold?

The subject of lecture yesterday (February 16) was a comparison of the prophecies in Daniel, referring to the persecuting Papal power, with those in the Apocalypse.

AN EVENING with SANDWICH MEN.

In the western portion of the Metropolis, living in the lodging houses and the poorer tenements of the Seven Dials and Soho districts, there reside a large number of the poorer class of unskilled labourers called "Sandwich Men." These, perhaps about 2000 in number, morning by morning, proceed to the various advertising agents, to the theatres, and other resorts of engagement; where they let themselves out for the day, on payment of 1s. 2d. when their tale of work is done.

Many of these men have seen better days, and have passed through complex and varied vicissitudes; and with their blighted, unfortunate, or godless lives, they find themselves alone and friendless in this great city, in the midst of its sins and sorrows. Impressed by their appearance, some eleven years ago, Mr. William Harrison arranged for a series of winter meetings, where they could be invited to spend a pleasant evening surrounded by godly and happy influences. These gatherings have been continued year by year. Monday fortnight was quite a gala day for these men; through the kindness of the Hon. Thos. Holt, more than 300 were treated to a good dinner of roast beef, plum pudding, baked potatoes, coffee, &c. The dinner was given in Bloomsbury Hall. While the merry clatter of plates, knives and forks, and friendly chat went on within, nearly 200 hungry men who had heard the news of the feast had assembled without, in the vain hope of passing the hospitable mission gate.

The moments which followed the ample feast were very gracious, and full of blessing. After prayer by Mr. Harrison, Rev. Thomas Wardell gave an earnest and bright address, exactly suited to the occasion. Mr. James Welsh, the police-court missionary, told some of the experiences of his own life, and thrilling incidents of his daily observation. At the close Mr. Harrison made an earnest appeal to them to give up their doings and thoughts of evil; and as one result, forty of them signed the gospel temperance pledge. A very grateful vote of thanks was given to Mr. Holt and his kind daughters, and on leaving every man was presented with a New Testament.

Some twenty or more meetings are held every week at this mission station. Not the least interesting amongst them is the Thursday children's dinner, when nearly four hundred of the poorest children of the districts of Seven Dials

THE LATE ROBERT CRAIG.

ONE of the most acceptable working-men preachers of this generation was Robert Craig, who died on December 21, 1886, aged sixty-four. Long before his conversion, and during his "aimless wanderings" as he calls them, in a record written in his later days, the piety and kindness of some ladies in the Isle of Skye first touched his heart. Later, these impressions were deepened by the wife of a retired captain at South Shields. But it was in a lodging-house in Sheffield, in 1849, that "the grace of God which bringeth salvation" reached him. He was then twenty-six years of age.

He had been resident for some time in London, where he married. Then he went to Birmingham, where he commenced his career as a street conjurer. By this time theatres and other places of amusement were passionately frequented, and the common lodging-house was his usual home. It was in one of these lodging-houses, in Sheffield, that he was sitting one Sunday morning with thieves, vagabonds, and impostors, without a thought of better things, when an incident occurred which changed the current of his life. While a quack doctor was turning over the things in his box, something glittered among the rubbish, which excited Robert's curiosity. It turned out to be a fourpenny Testament, which the quack doctor had purchased in Nottingham. Strange feelings came over the conjurer at the sight of this precious treasure. Those who were accustomed to hear him speak in after days will easily recall the tone in which he said, "Fourteen long years had rolled away since I had a Testament in my hand." Anxious to read the book that his father loved, he purchased it, and sought the highest room in the house, where he could be alone; here, while reading 1 Cor. vi. 9—11, "Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God?" &c., the Spirit wrought such conviction of sin that he could neither sleep nor pray. Next morning he parted with all his conjuring books, and, removing to Manchester soon after, he entered into joyous peace under the teaching of Mr. Stratford, a city missionary, now deceased.

His new-found joy made a street-preacher of him, and for thirty-six years he ceased not to testify "the Gospel of the grace of God." In his unconverted days he had learned brace-making, and chiefly maintained himself thereby for the rest of his life. He had many offers of engagements as an evangelist, but, being of an independent nature, he preferred to labour with his hands, that he might not be chargeable to any. Yet he went on many preaching tours, and sometimes acted as a colporteur. During the Lancashire Cotton Famine he spent some time in the distressed districts, his sympathetic nature rendering his ministry peculiarly acceptable. In 1868 he went with me to Holland, where we spent five weeks, preaching by interpretation.

His last preaching effort was at Epsom summer races, in 1885. For some time his mental powers had been failing; but on this occasion he delivered himself with clearness and vigour. but he gradually became more absent-minded, and passed away on the shortest day of last year to a land where there are neither clouds nor shadows, to receive the "Well done" from the Master he loved so well, and to meet many who, by his instrumentality, were brought "from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God."

G. KIRKHAM.

RUGBY.—On Sunday week about seventy young "brothers" and "sisters" of the George Smith of Coalville Band of Love, and a number of juvenile villagers, assembled at "The Cabin" Meeting-house, Crick, Rugby (the residence of Mr. Smith) to enjoy their usual interesting services. On Monday night the regular monthly crowded meeting of brothers and sisters, parents and friends, The proceedings passed off well, and

BOARD-SCHOOL CHILDREN.

THE organisation which four years ago commenced to give free meals to children attending school has issued its report. All over the Metropolis, gathered together in the Board schools, are children of whom the inspectors state, that "one-third come breakfastless to school, while one in four often gets no mid-day meal at all." Many teachers express the conviction that in their schools there are from one to two hundred children in a state of semi-starvation. And these, in many cases, are the children of parents who would work if they could get it to do. "The tales of want are piteous," says one teacher; "the number of fathers out of work is positively startling." Certainly the heart must be hard if not touched by some of the stories here given.

The dinners are strictly confined to children of widows with small earnings, of fathers out of work, and of parents who are ill, and these are in all cases well known to the teachers. Last year over 70,000 such dinners were given. There are now twenty-one schools where children thus sit down to a warm and comfortable dinner, to which, otherwise, they would be utter strangers. Mrs. Pennington, 5, Alexandra-road, South Hampstead, N.W., is the secretary of the fund.

Evangelisation Work in Sheffield.

A MISSION work was commenced last year in the Music Hall, Surrey-street, Sheffield, by Mr. Wm. Corbridge. The report issued in December at the close of the first seven months' work, states that on an average ten open-air services are held every week, at which the "old, old story" is told from full hearts, and men and women are convinced of sin. In the same time "over four hundred souls have been to the penitent form seeking Christ Jesus, and as many more have signed the temperance pledge. Drunkards have become sober, thieves have been made honest, restitution has been made, women have been rescued from a life of sin."

A Sunday-school is held, in which are now gathered about two hundred scholars, very few of whom were previously attending any school. Many of these scholars are very ragged, without hats and with bare feet. Attached to this is an adult class, amongst the members of which a nice work is going on. The Sunday congregations include all classes of persons, and in the evenings number a thousand and upwards.

In visiting, some distressing scenes are met with, of one of which the following picture is given. One room, one wall of it so damp that the wet runs down. In this live and sleep a mother, a son about eighteen years of age, and another about ten. In one corner stands the bed; in the corner at the foot of it is the corpse of another grown-up son who had been at the school, and who had been visited, had found the Saviour, and died happy. In another corner was the food. A round table, two old chairs, a bucket, a few pots, &c., comprised the furniture. Workers, as well as books and other help, are much needed. Mr. Corbridge's address is 55, Lancing-road, Charlotte-road, Sheffield.

"ALL ABOUT EARLSWOOD."—A well-known pen has supplied us with the historical sketch of the Asylum for Idiots, at Earlswood, Surrey. This mansion-like home is seated in a wide expanse of grounds, which are laid out with great taste, and in the interior all is done that skill and thought can devise for the comfort and well-being of the inmates. Here is manifest "Christian willinghood in one of its noblest forms," and the results have been most satisfactory. "Though recovery is very rarely to be looked for, the development of latent mental powers is aimed at and achieved." Not a few have become proficient in various trades, and have been enabled to return to society, and there to hold their own. The narrative is one which will excite widespread interest in this noble institution, and may be had at the office, 36, King

MR. J. M. SCROGGIE IN IRVINE.

THIS evangelist conducted a week's mission in Irvine last September. So successful was his work there, that a desire was expressed that he should visit the town again. He has been here for three weeks, and has conducted a most successful series of evangelistic meetings. The ministers of the town brought their influence to bear in favour of the work, and did all in their power to further it. The closing meeting in the Established church was a great success; over sixteen hundred persons were present. Mr. Scroggie delivered a powerful address.

At the meetings from seventy to a hundred persons professed conversion, while large numbers of God's people received blessing. Altogether we have very great reason to bless God for his goodness to us.

CENTRAL TURKEY COLLEGE.

IN this College, established at Aintab in 1876, 125 students were received during last year, of whom sixteen entered in the medical department In the ten years, six classes have passed through a regular course of training in the institution, and, including those who have passed in medicine, sixty-three have graduated. One of these has been ordained as pastor of the Evangelical Church in Killis, and twenty-three have become teachers at various places in Asia, while others have gone to Paris and America for the further study of medicine and theology.

Prayer meetings held on Thursdays and Sundays are attended by some fifty or sixty persons. Christian work has been done at the hospital, where Gostan Moomjian has steadily worked amongst the patients of all kinds. The President says the students have made good progress, not only in study, but in what Dr. Arnold, of Rugby, so happily termed moral thoughtfulness. "The great majority of those under our care have grown steadily in manliness and in devotion to study." Help is especially needed in the medical department. Further information may be obtained of Rev. T. C. Trowbridge, LL.D., President of the College, 95, Onslow-square, S.W.

HURRICANE IN MARIN, SPAIN.

MR. S. SOUTHALL, 27, Crown-street, Leeds, writes to us as follows:—

"Having some knowledge of the different centres of Christian work in Spain, I have visited none more encouraging than that at Marin, in the North-west. There is a congregation of perhaps 130 or 140 members, with offshoots at various villages in different parts of the province, in which, the readiness to receive the Gospel message is very striking. The little flock at Marin live in the midst of persecution, and I could fill pages with the history of what they have suffered, and are suffering, for Christ.

"One great desire of their hearts has been the establishment of a simple meeting-room at San Tomé, a village about three miles distant from Marin. Day after day both pastor and congregation toiled on, even women yoking themselves, in place of oxen, into the carts which conveyed the great stones from the mountain side. At last the building was finished, and opened with abounding rejoicing about June last year."

Mr. Southall describes, from letters received, how, in a great storm on the evening of December 15, the room was partially destroyed. A prayer-meeting was being held at the time, and the fall of the structure caused the death of three of the company. A large gathering attended the funeral, when a good open-air service was held. The cost of rebuilding the meeting-room will be about £150, and it is so much injured, that most,

The C.M.S. Missionary Meetings.

Last year the February Simultaneous Meetings throughout the country exceeded all expectations in the interest they excited. This year the February Simultaneous Meetings in London have still more exceeded expectation. About one thousand meetings and services were held between February 6 and 13, within the metropolitan district, including the Sunday services at which missionary sermons were preached. Nearly one million of the F.S.M. tracts and papers were actually applied for, and supplied to the various districts for distribution. The energy and organising power thrown into the movement by many of the clergy and laity and ladies in different parts astonished all. Some parishes were canvassed as for a parochial mission, and envelopes with selected papers in them left at every house. Above all, there was united, continual, and fervent prayer. The result was that thousands were led to look forward to the week with faith and expectation; and He who said, "According to your faith be it unto you," never disappoints a spirit like that.

At the Church Missionary House, Salisbury-square, daily meetings were held. On Monday, at 4 p.m., the Bishop of Rochester gave an impressive address to the assembled preachers, speakers, and local organisers who crowded the large committee-room. On the next four days there was a prayer-meeting at noon. These were intended for special intercessions on behalf of the meetings of the day. But even the one on Tuesday became rather a thanksgiving meeting, for reports were already coming in, from all parts, of crowded and solemn gatherings; and so it was more and more as the week went on. On Saturday there was a special thanksgiving meeting at noon. Numerous prayer-meetings and late evening gatherings were held at the different centres of the Young Men's Christian Association, and also at the Church of England Young Men's Society, and picked men were told off to address these very important meetings.

Owing to the large number of the meetings simultaneously held, it is impossible for us to give any complete account. In addition to our own reports, we extract some passages from the report in last Friday's Record. In an editorial note that paper says:—"A unique interest attaches to the remarkable meeting held in Westminster Town Hall, but from north, south, and east, as well as from the west, come reports of crowded gatherings, of enthusiastic hearers, and, best of all, of spirits deeply moved to consider the personal responsibility pressed upon them. There should be much thanksgiving for the happiness of this week, much prayer that men may everywhere be guided aright in considering their methods of future usefulness, and much watchfulness that the enthusiasm kindled in the midst of this movement is not allowed to pass away without being turned into solid resolves."

TOWN HALL, WESTMINSTER.

The meeting in Westminster on Tuesday evening was a magnificent one. When all had been done by the economising of space to make more room, it was seen that it would be quite impossible to cram any more into either area or gallery, and so an overflow meeting was arranged. The Dean of Westminster presided. Mr. Eugene Stock having given some words of explanation in reference to the meetings being held, the President said it would be a very evil thing if their city churches were to cease to be centres of missionary zeal and effort. When they looked back they clearly saw that it was in cities the first triumphs of the Christian faith were won. It was in Jerusalem that the fishermen of Galilee laid the foundation of the Church of Christ; it was in Antioch, a great heathen capital, from which Paul and Barnabas were sent forth on their missionary enterprise, and it was in Corinth that the Apostles first measured themselves against the philosophy of the day. It was matter for rejoicing that England was giving her best, but it should be always borne in mind that the missionaries in the field are looking to us for all that will strengthen their arms and brighten their path.

The Bishop of Salisbury said they had cause for humiliation, when they thought of the evil they had done by the opium traffic. He himself felt sometimes as if he could never hold up his head for very shame when in the company of other races, when he thought of the terrible curse which they had introduced among them. It behoved them to think very seriously of that; and even if they made a great sacrifice, a sum of twenty millions perhaps, it would be money well spent. It was not too much to hope that this Jubilee year may see the beginning of an attempt to free the nation from that great curse. The Earl of Northbrook, whose topic was "India," said he had seen many missionaries and many missionary stations of various bodies, and he had on all occasions seen that these men were doing a great work, and in every way were gaining the affections of the people.

Canon Westcott, whose topic was "the Assyrian Mission," said, Mohammedanism is the one religion which in many provinces and kingdoms has overcome Christianity, the one religion which, appealing to a Divine command, shares with Christianity the universal spiritual sovereignty over man. Bishop Steer once said that a Mohammedan looks upon a Mohammedan who becomes a Christian as we should look upon a Christian who becomes a Jew. If we realise these facts, we feel how difficult is the problem we have to face in India; but the necessity of facing it is none the less paramount. Our Queen to-day has more Mohammedan subjects than the Sultan, and these are maintaining their great traditions. The question is, how we shall influence them? We must be prepared to say that Christianity shows that no education is true education which is not religious, and we must show the Mohammedan that there are thoughts committed to us for the whole world. If the work is hard, it is not without hope to brighten it, for already in India we see signs of hope. It is our work, but in a far truer sense it is God's work, and a work which He has done. I can never without thankfulness meditate on the words with which our Lord closed his own missionary work on earth. He said, "I have conquered;" not "I will conquer," but "I have conquered the world." Therefore, when the light of the resurrection had illumined the darkness of the grave, He could say to his poor, weak, wondering disciples, "Go and proclaim the glad tiding of my victory to the whole creation."

Canon Elwyn next delivered an address upon the subject of "The Coptic Churches," and was followed by Rev. J. E. Phillips, on missionary work in China and Japan. Mr. Eugene Stock spoke for about a quarter of an hour on the Uganda Mission, exhibiting Bishop Hannington's diary amidst the profound silence and attention of the meeting. Archdeacon Farrar, in a short earnest speech, expressed a hope that a new era in missionary interest in Westminster had been commenced that night. The overflow meeting was presided over successively by Archdeacon Farrar and Mr. G. A. Spottiswoode, and all the speakers in the large hall spoke again at the overflow.

MILDMAY CONFERENCE HALL.

The meeting in the Conference Hall on Tuesday was attended by about 1200 persons, and was presided over by the Bishop of London. When we read the history of the Church, said his Lordship, and the spread of the Gospel over the world, it is a marvel sometimes to see how Christian men were blind, century after century, to the great duty of communicating to others that which they had received themselves. We are called by the very nature of the work to be done. Every new acquisition of knowledge we have of the vast extent of the world still unenlightened by the Gospel; every time we hear of heathens bowing down to wood and stone, and Mohammedans half enlightened with a dim knowledge sometimes almost worse than no knowledge at all; every time we think of the chosen people, there is a call to work. We are called to it by the progress the work is making, and the visible blessing God has bestowed upon it.

Mr. Sydney Gedge, M.P., said Mohammedanism could not exist without slavery in some form or another. There were 1000 millions of heathens and Mohammedans in the world, out of which number Christianity, including Roman Catholicism, had gathered to some knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ three millions. There died every three weeks more heathens and Mohammedans than had as yet been gathered out to Christianity. The speaker was at pains to show the utter disproportion of the gifts of Church people as compared with their ability to give.

Rev. Gordon Calthrop said those were the strongest friends of Christian missions who would do most to raise the tone, deepen the life, and quicken the spirituality of the Church at home. This he could not help describing as a remarkable movement, and it was made at an opportune time, when missions to a large extent were coming to the front. It should be remembered that we need men as well as money, and he trusted the outcome of this gathering would be that many young men would give themselves to the foreign field. Rev. D. Marshall Lang impressed upon his hearers the sense of their individual responsibility. If we were fired with the enthusiasm of the old Crusaders there would be no lamentation in regard to failing subscriptions, but we should give ourselves and our money too.

MYDDLETON HALL, ISLINGTON.

The Bishop of Cork presided over a great public meeting at the Myddelton Hall, Islington, on Tuesday evening. His Lordship said it was possible there were some among them who, in consequence of the doubt and scepticism prevailing around them, and on account of the spirit of worldliness which was creeping into the Church on all sides, and on account of the divisions which existed among Christians and divided Christian men from one another—there might be some who, when they saw these things, were tempted to doubt the power of the Gospel at the present day, and to think that the world had advanced considerably, and that what was a power in the world in the olden time was a power no longer. Let such an one study the details of what God was doing throughout the world, and if the matter were dealt with fairly and honestly they would have abundant evidence to satisfy any candid mind that the power of the Gospel of Christ and the power of the Spirit of God was in the world now what it was in the world long ago. And as they studied the matter and interested themselves in the great question of missions, there would be this added blessing—their faith would become stronger and deeper, because the promise of the Lord was given, "He that will do his will shall know of the doctrine whether it be of God." And the will of Christ was that his Gospel should be preached to every creature in the world.

Rev. E. A. Stuart said that different schemes were in the air for the purpose of showing the gratitude of the country to God for fifty years of blessing under the reign of Her Majesty, but he put it to them whether it would not be well for them, as Christian men and women, to keep their Jubilee somewhat after the fashion of Israel of old, when they caused the trumpet to sound throughout the whole land to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the loosening of the prison bars to those who were bound. When it was considered what vast masses of the human race were bound with the chains of sin and slavery, surely the time had come for the trumpet of jubilee to ring forth from us here in England with a joyful, thankful peal for all the Gospel privileges we have so long enjoyed. Sir Albert Rollit, M.P., said, we were bound to do missionary work because missionary work had done much for us. What was England, civilised and Christianised, but the work of missionaries who came to relieve her from the deep barbarism in which she existed, and which at the present time marked so many of the countries of the world. If we were a rich country, we were only a rich country with greater and richer duties to perform, and the obligation which we had was one which we must ventured to say, in the decay of our country. Rev. W. H. Barlow, vicar of Islington, also addressed the meeting.

BLACKHEATH.

On Wednesday evening an aggregate meeting was held at the Rink, Blackheath, the Bishop of Rochester presiding. He did not say that all heathen were asking for the Gospel; but from many parts they heard the Macedonian cry, "Come over and help us." Some people argued that we, with our vices and our drink and our implements of murder, had better leave the heathen in their innocence of such things; others said they were too bad, that nothing could be done for them, and that even a knowledge of Christ would not comfort them; and others, still more ingenious, said, "Don't you think you had better do your own work at home?" This last suggestion was as base as it was silly. Why were the people heathens? Because they had been neglected. They need not have been heathens if men had done in the past only a tithe of what they were doing now. But some people seemed to think that neglect of past duty justified neglect of present duty. He ventured to say that for every missionary sent to the heathen we got two at home. God had rewarded zeal for the heathen by stirring up a spirit of enthusiasm and sacrifice for our own people. He saw great encouragement in respect of mission work at the present time, because there was such a thing as opportunity in the Providence of God. The present was a very opportune time for mission work. It had established itself in public opinion, having passed through the stages of contempt, of bitter opposition, and of quiescence. God had at this moment put into the hearts of many men to go into missionary work; and in his opinion it was better to have more men than more money. God grant that the Christian mission zeal might that hour begin to burn with more intensity—that they would rise to their feet to propagate their blessed faith, not by sword and gun and drink, but by preaching in the name of the living God the unsearchable riches of Christ. He concluded with an earnest appeal to his hearers to interrogate themselves as to what more they could do for Christ and the spread of his kingdom.

Mr. Chancellor Dibdin said the most powerful of all the missionary appeals he had ever seen was contained in one little half-sheet of paper. It was a mere statement to the eye of the numbers who profess the different religions of the world, distinguishing the Heathen, Mohammedans, Protestants, Roman Catholics, Greek Church, and Jews by different shades. Each million people is represented by a little square patch. What is the result? The chart is covered for more than two-thirds of its surface by the black shadow of heathenism and Mohammedanism. Of the 1,400,000,000 inhabitants of the world, more than 1,000,000,000 are Pagans or Moslems. Try and conceive what that means. Imagine yourself an inhabitant of some other world looking at the earth as we look at the moon, and suppose you were told that 2000 years ago the Great God of the Universe, the Creator and Governor of all things, sent his only Son down to that planet for the express purpose of rescuing its inhabitants from the awful doom of God's wrath. He lived and died to save the race, there in that corner of the earth, and He left it as his last charge to those who loved Him to spread the news of his salvation all over the world; and yet, although this happened 2000 years ago, and although the loss to those who do not learn the good news is unutterable, the fact that the Son of God thus came and died is still utterly unknown by more than two-thirds of the race; the greater part of the little disc you see shining in the heavens is as ignorant of the tremendous transaction done on its surface, as if Mount Calvary had been situate on the remotest star of the Milky Way. Surely, you would say, there must be some mistake; those who followed the Deliverer when He was on earth must have died out, and their successors must have forgotten his commands, and the memory of his life and death must have faded entirely away. No, you would be told, on the there has been a large though fluctuating body of people who treasured up the knowledge of the Son of God, who loved Him, who lived and died for Him, and, what is more, they were never more eager for his service, and more anxious to make the good tidings known far and wide than they are to-day; and they make efforts now and again to let the two thirds who are in the dark know what has been done for them, and that He is in truth their Deliverer. But these efforts are so partial, so inadequate, and so feeble, that the total subscriptions for this purpose of the greatest of all the cities in the world is just 1¼d. a head a year—rather less. You would say, here is an anomaly past belief; it is incredible. It is an anomaly; it is difficult to believe, but, nevertheless, is it not the truth? .... There is something profoundly pathetic in the appeal of the heathen world, whether it be only the mute appeal of the dire need and wretchedness, or whether it be the actual articulate appeal which, thank God, reaches us now from so many quarters. I hope I shall not be accused of being a pessimist when I say that it always makes me uncomfortable to hear a missionary speak full of congratulation and jubilation. We have much to be thankful for. The wonder is, not that the results are so small, but that our efforts having been so small the results are so tremendous. We have reached a time of crisis in missions—a very remarkable time. The old faiths are fading away. Heathenism is breaking up. The open doors all over the world, the urgent appeals for more men and women, and the eager desire for teaching, are signs given to us by God to show us that He owns and approves our work, and to encourage us to go forward. Look at all the missionary statistics in the world, and then turn to that awful chart; consider that the sum total of missionary achievement hitherto means no more than a pin-prick here and a pin-prick there, and surely there is little room for congratulation. Therefore let us be thankful, let us be hopeful, but let us be profoundly dissatisfied. We have to put this duty to the heathen amongst the leading duties of life—duty to parents, to children, country, the poor. If we do this honestly and remember it daily we shall find the way; and whatever that way is, we must make up our minds to take trouble about it.

Addresses were also delivered by Rev. H. Favell, and Mr. Blakeney, R.N.

HAMPSTEAD.

On Thursday evening a deeply impressive and well-attended meeting was held in the Vestry Hall. Mr. Robert Woodd presided. The Bishop of Exeter said it was the joy of joys to find himself in Hampstead at a Church Missionary Society meeting. He had always said that he believed if he died the letters C.M.S. would be found engraven on his heart; he was sure that every year of his life saw the words yet more deeply engraven. It ought to be so when they considered what God is doing by this great Society, and by other kindred societies for whose work they devoutly thanked God. He felt that they were bound by yet stronger claims to pray, to work for, and to think for this blessed Society, which is ever spreading the Gospel throughout the world. Referring to the late Chinese proclamation, he said it was very cheering for them to remember that when they thought of going to China they were to be accepted as guests, and not to be regarded as strangers. He confessed that when he read this news in The Times his very heart thrilled.

General Hatt Noble, Dublin, and Rev. J. Potter, Londonderry, also gave addresses.

Aggregate meetings of deep interest were also held at Crouch End, Kensington, Kilburn, and Marylebone.

THE CITY.

In the City special interest attached to the daily service at St. Peter's, Cornhill, where Rev. R. P. Ashe gave addresses on missionary work in Uganda.

Speaking on Friday of Mr. Stanley's expedition for the relief of Emin Pasha, Mr. Ashe said he thought it would have a decided effect for great benefit to the Mission in the opening up of the country to the missionaries. The king and the people of Uganda have great respect for Mr. Stanley, whose name is almost a household word in the country. Meanwhile the Society, with anxiety, are awaiting news of the expedition, on which the future of the Mission largely depends. The only thing which would have any permanent effect on the state of the country was the Gospel. It is already in a state of semi-civilisation, but civilisation without the Gospel will be of no avail.

On Sunday week a special children's missionary service was held at St. Mary Aldermary, when the church was crowded in every part by an attentive congregation of children, brought together from four or five City Sunday-schools. On Monday the claims of the heathen and Mohammedan world were brought before business men at the usual lecture. At Holy Trinity, Gough-square, E.C., on Sunday afternoon, 200 children assembled to hear an address on missions in India, illustrated with large diagrams, which created much interest.

At Aldersgate noon prayer-meeting on Tuesday last week, Mr. Myers, speaking of fourteen years' work in Spain, said there had been great trials, but the blessings had been greater. They had been taken prisoners and threatened with fourteen years' incarceration; they had been so followed by the priests that it might have been thought their lives were not worth twopence; again and again he had been unable to sleep by thinking of what might happen in the morning; but the blessings had been far greater than all these. It has been a grand thing to have opportunities of preaching in the North-west of Spain to thousands of people who for the first time heard the Word; it has been touching to see many, as the joyful news of salvation that they had never before known of, came home to their hearts, weeping for thankfulness. It was a grand thing to see such willingness to suffer on the part of these converts, some of whom had even been put in prison, while others had been persecuted in various ways, keeping faithful, nevertheless, to the Master. He concluded with some earnest words to Englishmen to pray and strive against the encroachments of Rome in this country.

A special meeting was held in the Y.M.C.A. lecture hall, New Metal Exchange, Whittington-avenue, E.C., on Wednesday evening. Mr. Joseph Herbert Tritton presided, and the audience consisted chiefly of members of the Y.M.C.A., and the London Banks' Prayer Union. Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe directed attention to the solemn fact that in the heathen and Mohammedan world souls are passing away at the rate of one every second without any knowledge of Jesus Christ. And yet how sad it is to think that the Church Missionary Society or any other society should have to appear before the public in the latter end of the nineteenth century to plead with Christian men and women to help in this work. It was the duty of every Christian, not in a cold and indifferent manner, but with heart and soul to do all he could in extending the kingdom of God. If year by year a few of the many millions which constitute the annual savings of England were added to God's treasury the evangelisation of the world would be effected at no distant period. But money is not the only essential. We want men to go forth to the distant lands as the standard bearers of the Gospel, men who have the dogged determination of an Englishman, consecrated by the power of the Holy Ghost. Surely there was money enough in the Metal Exchange to send out into the mission-field one man as the deputy of the London Banks' Prayer Union and the Y.M.C.A.

Rev. W. E. Burroughs suggested systematic prayer as one means of helping the work, and appealed also for money support. This great emporium of wealth, he said, provides only £60,000 a year for mission work in all its branches, while the takings of the London theatres are more than £1,000,000 a year, and the drawings of the public-houses are more than one million every month. Mr. Eugene

At Sion College, on Friday afternoon, Sir John Kennaway M.P. presided over a very small gathering of City men. He expressed a deep feeling of thankfulness that the week's meetings had shown the existence of a widespread and quickened interest in missionary work. Archdeacon Bardsley, of Liverpool, cited the case of an African congregation, as showing the gratitude often felt by the heathen for sending them the Gospel. An iron church was erected, for which they paid £1000, and they also forwarded the first collection, amounting to £30, to Salisbury-square as a thank-offering. The heathen have a strong claim upon us because of the evil wrought amongst them by many of our countrymen.

Mr. S. A. Blackwood pointed to Roman Catholic Europe, as showing how God is opening doors. See how God's word is making way in Paris, and even at Rome, where now there is a Christian mission under the very walls of the Vatican. In North Africa and in India, barriers that have hindered the entrance of the Gospel are being rapidly removed. In Russia, in Sweden, in China, God has wonderfully honoured such men as Lord Radstock, Mr. Radcliffe, and Mr. Hudson Taylor. Let us exercise spiritual discernment, that we may know what we ought to do. One thing is certain: we ought not to sit still. Our prayers need to be revolutionised. In that prayer which the Lord gave us, He put "Thy kingdom come" before "Give us this day our daily bread." But in our prayers the claims of the heathen world, the coming of Christ's kingdom there, just have an incidental mention at the end, and not always that. Our methods need also to be revolutionised. In the primitive Church not the apostles only, but the people went everywhere preaching the Gospel. Above all, we need, as pointed out in Dr. Pierson's book "The Crisis of Missions," the living link between the individual church at home and the heathen abroad. What an increase of sympathy there would be if each church had its own missionary, and heard directly from him. Our ideas of the nature of the Christian life need to be revolutionised. The first and grand desire of the believer should be to live and to preach Christ. Those are utterly wrong who settle down to the enjoyment of their privileges, seeking only their own comfort and happiness in the good things of this life.

EXETER HALL

There was a crowded meeting, mostly of young men, on Friday evening, to welcome Rev. R. P. Ashe, and to hear from him the story of what missionaries and converts have lately gone through at Uganda. Mr. George Williams presided, and expressed the hope that they might get a fresh inspiration for the great cause of missions from that meeting.

Rev. J. Johnston, a native African clergyman, awakened much sympathy by singing, so clearly as to put to shame many an English singer, "Ethiopia shall lift up her head, for the Lord hath said it," and an African hymn with this touching chorus,

> Tell the love of Jesus by her hills and waters,
> God bless Africa, and her sons and daughters.

Mr. Ashe said he was a great believer in the African people. He had lived with them under every condition—had sympathised with them, and their tears had flowed with his, in times of deepest sorrow. He had met with the greatest kindness and consideration, even from Africans who were not Christians. The narrative he then gave of his experiences at Uganda was deeply interesting. Especially gratifying was it to hear that, through the genius of that brave man, who now is holding the fort alone in Uganda (Mr. Mackay), a printing press was set up by which alphabets, spelling sheets, texts, &c., had been printed. Before Mr. Ashe left Uganda the first thirteen chapters of Matthew's Gospel had been printed in the language of the people.

Much of Mr. Ashe's recital is already known to our readers. All went well with the Mission until Mwanga came to the throne, and he was at first favourably inclined towards the mis-he would have nothing to do with the horrible sacrifices that had been customary on the death of a king; he even begged them to write for more missionaries to come out. So they wrote home to that effect, and then it was that Bishop Hannington returned to Africa, stimulated by this invitation. But meanwhile the King's temper had changed. The time had come when he must decide whether he would take the white man's religion or not. Alas! he made a fatal choice, and then showed himself in his true colours. Though previously friendly to those who loved the Christian religion, because he would not give himself wholly to that which in his heart he knew to be true, he became one of the vilest of men, and was guilty of the most atrocious murders.

The change in the position of affairs came upon the missionaries as a great surprise. Having been absent from the station, on their return they were insulted by the King's soldiers in every possible way. Seeing a little boy belonging to their school tied up to a stake, Mr. Ashe went up to release him, but one of the soldiers at once threatened to kill him. Never doubting but the King would set this right, they then asked him, "Why are we treated thus?" His reply showed how changed was his attitude towards the Christians. Mr. Ashe and Mr. Mackay, driven back to their home, followed by an angry mob, then sent a present of cloth to the King, begging that their scholar's life might be spared, but when the day after they heard that he, with two other innocent people, had been put to death, the danger to which all were exposed was fully apparent. Letters were sent to the mission station at Mombasa, advising that no other missionaries should be sent; but through some delay these did not reach until Bishop Hannington and his party had left. On the morning of October 25, 1885, Mr. Ashe was told by one of the converts that two white men were three days' journey distant, and then that orders had been given to kill them. He and Mr. Mackay went to the King at once, and explained that Mr. Hannington was a teacher like themselves; but when they said they had heard the white men were to be put to death, he said, "That is not so," and bade them go to the chief judge. This, however, they would not do, for he was their great enemy. Soon after they knew that the Bishop and his party had been cruelly and treacherously murdered.

Of the horrors and butcheries which followed all have heard, and a thrill passed through the meeting as they were again recounted, this time by one who had witnessed them. He said he could never forget the feelings with which on that memorable Easter Sunday the missionaries and some of the converts partook together of the Holy Communion, not knowing but that they might be called into their Saviour's presence immediately. Mr. Ashe told how one chief dared to tell the King it was not wise to kill the white men, and how he was at once put to death; how the King in his anger broke a spear upon the head of a youth who confessed that he could read. On one occasion when Mr. Mackay and he went to the King to protest against what was going on, believing that they would be put to death, they said, "Our judgment is in the hand of God. You are a great king, but we leave our judgment with Him." Mr. Ashe's closing words were in explanation of his return. At first it was intended that Mr. Mackay should return, but this the King would not allow, though giving permission for one to do so. In answer to a question some had addressed to him, and which had given him much pain, as to whether he would go back again, he said he would not have turned his back on the country he loved so well, unless it had been his intention to go back again as soon as God opened the way for him to do so.

An earnest address was given by Rev. J. A. Faithful, of Scarborough, urging upon all the duty of supporting those who were in the front ranks of this fight, by stepping into their places if necessary. Then Mr. Absalom, a member of the Exeter Hall branch of the Y.M.C.A., who is shortly going out as a missionary, bade an affecting farewell to those whom he then saw, perhaps, for the last time, urging all to a full con-

Commenting on the efforts of the past week, The Rock says:—

Looking through the list of meetings issued by the C.M.S., one of the first things to strike the eye is their great variety. Drawing-room meetings, mothers' meetings, temperance meetings, juvenile meetings, prayer-meetings, consecration meetings, praise meetings, such are a few of the different kinds of missionary gatherings which our various churches contribute. By a happy coincidence, one of the earliest to be held was a most successful one in the drawing-room of Mr. George Williams, of the Y.M.C.A., and himself in all essentials still a young man, although his hair is deeply tinged with grey. We call this a happy coincidence, for if there is any one class to whom these meetings especially appeal, it is to the Christian young men of England. The first and greatest result we want them to produce is a great cloud of witnesses for Christ, ready to go out to the thirsty heathen lands. There have been grand droppings in times past, but only droppings after all; for that a few hundred men should have gone forth as missionaries from the great Church of England—grand men though they have been—is no proper measure of its duty or its power. Thousands are needed, and thousands shall surely by God's hand be raised up and go. Nor are young men only wanted! One of the most striking phases of modern missions is the way in which lady workers are coming to the front. There is nothing rare nowadays in finding that a Christian household has sent out its daughter, delicately nurtured and tenderly beloved, to bear forward the Lord's banner amid the hardships and dangers of some non-Christian land. But bravely as Christian English girls have already pressed to the front, we shall be greatly surprised if the F.S.M. do not give them a fresh impetus.

A Mission Hymn of Thanksgiving.

BY REV. J. P. HOBSON.

We thank Thee that the gracious sound
Of mercy full and free,
Is hindered by no narrow bound
Of race, or land, or sea.
So hasten, Lord, the glorious time
When Satan's reign shall cease;
And soon, in every land and clime,
The heathen bless with peace.

We thank Thee, Lord, that some are found
Amid the heathen night
To let faith's lantern shine around,
With clear and steady light.
We thank Thee that the dying hour
Of many a timid saint,
Has witnessed to Thy promised power
To help and cheer the faint.

We thank Thee that Thy boundless grace,
Descending from above,
Encircles every tribe and race
Within its wondrous love.
So hasten, Lord, the glorious time
When Satan's reign shall cease;
And soon, in every land and clime,
The heathen bless with peace.

CURRAGH SOLDIERS' HOME.—A soldier writing from Egypt, says:—"We often wish for a Home like that we had on the Curragh Camp." The Home has been not only the place of salvation, but of comfort and strength, of real growth in the Christian life, to many a soldier, so that by the grace bestowed upon them by the Lord Jesus, they have been enabled to witness a bold confession amongst their comrades. Several instances are given in the report before us, of the way in which God has met with one and another at this Home, so that, as related of a drummer of the Highland regiment, instead of being broken-hearted, they are filled with happiness. Writing from Bengal, another soldier mentions that there is much sickness, but adds, "It is all right to those who have Jesus for their friend in health or sickness;" and another, "I have a work to do now, and something to live for." The attendance had been larger than in previous years, and all will rejoice in the TALBOT TABERNACLE NEW BUILDING.

LETTER FROM THE PASTOR.

TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN."

DEAR FRIENDS,—

The Old Iron Church in which I am at present preaching, erected in 1868, is now scarcely tenantable. Only those who have been able to brave attendance at the services of late can know how imperative our need is, that before another winter we should have a building in which, at least, we may be protected from wind and water. After much prayer, and being fully persuaded in so doing we are in the will of God, we have decided to proceed at once to the erection of the walls, roofing, flooring, &c., of a new place of worship. The contract to do this will not exceed £3,000, towards which sum we have already in cash and promises nearly £2,500. To complete the whole, we shall need quite £2,000 more. Meanwhile, if those readers of "THE CHRISTIAN" who sympathise with our word and work would each send me A POSTAL ORDER FOR AT LEAST ONE SHILLING, they would be rendering very substantial help.

I know many of the Lord's Stewards say, "We never give to bricks and mortar," but how is the varied and multiplied work for Christ that we are seeking to do to be carried on without protection from the perils of a climate like ours?

Eighteen hundred and eighty-seven will doubtless prove a most memorable year. To open this new house for the preaching of Christ, and the building together of a living Missionary Church, would not be an unworthy memorial of the Queen's Jubilee, as well as that of my own, and more than twenty-five years' ministry in the Gospel.

Yours very sincerely,

Frank H White

SOLDIERS' HOME AND INSTITUTE,
PHŒNIX PARK GATE, DUBLIN, February 1, 1887.

IT is with sincere thankfulness that the Committee of the DUBLIN SOLDIERS' HOME and INSTITUTE are enabled to inform the many friends and supporters of the undertaking that the "NEW WING," so long contemplated, is now completed, and has already been in full working order for some time, and during this winter's "Furlough Season" been found an immense benefit to the soldiers and their families who have sought the shelter of the "Home;" and although it has only been open about two months, it has, on many occasions, been found not large enough for the demand, notwithstanding that as many as 70 or 80 beds can be supplied per night, and, on an emergency, even more than that number. It is a matter of sincere congratulation that the work has been so expeditiously finished, and that another "Furlough" season has not to pass without this long felt need of our soldiers being supplied. The Committee cannot but acknowledge the result as a distinct answer to prayer, and a proof that our "God is a Prayer-hearing and Prayer-answering God," inasmuch as in the commencement of last year the funds at the disposal of the Committee for this object were wholly insufficient to justify the completion of the work. A few, however, of those specially interested in it met together with the members of the Committee, to ask God's will upon the subject, and whether it should be pressed on; and if so, that He would send in the needed funds to carry it out. Since that date—notwithstanding the depression of the times—we have received a very large sum of money, and within the last fifteen months no less a sum than £1500, and up to within about one month of the completion of the works, we were enabled to meet every claim upon us as it came in.

This we feel to be no small cause of thankfulness to our God. It is, however, our desire also to thank those who have by their liberal contributions been the means in His hands of accomplishing this object. And it is without any doubt as to result, we once more, AND FOR THE LAST TIME (as our Institute is now finally completed), make our wants known, as we feel sure that the small amount still required to meet the final claims of the Contractor, not yet settled, and to pay for the furnishing of our "New Wing," will not long remain a debt upon the shoulders of those who have undertaken the management of this work. A sum of £700 is still required to meet the above liabilities. When this sum is received the entire Building will be free from debt. The "New Wing," now completed, has already begun to increase the income of the "Home," and repay some of the recent outlay, as well as provide a shelter for many a soldier with his wife and child, who could not otherwise obtain it possibly at all, and certainly not at a reasonable price, and respectable. The Committee have now stated the case, and leave it to those who have at heart the welfare of our soldiers—both spiritual and temporal—to come to our aid in this matter.

The Times says—

"These volumes possess a special value, and they furnish a complete picture of their subject in his political, social, domestic, philanthropic, and religious relations. . . . It is impossible to rise from a study of the Earl's life and character without a feeling of pride that his efforts and affections were all enlisted on the side and in the service of the people; and it is equally impossible to believe in the decadence of England so long as she continues to produce men of this noble and unselfish type."

The Rock says—

"Christian men will rise from the perusal of his volumes with a deeper reverence for the memory of the great dead—great in every way, great in prayer great in courage, great in purpose, great in compassion, and great in achievement."

The Nonconformist says—

"A fascinating and complete work, masterly in general treatment, and full, but not tedious in details—unquestionably the standard life of one of the great men of our era."

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE of CONFIRMED ASTHMA—Mr. ALEX. SIMPSON, of PERTH, N.B.

This patient, residing at 28, Shield's Place, Dunkeld Road, Perth, being a constant reader of The Christian News, was encouraged to apply to me about August 20 last.

Two years before this, getting over-heated in his trade as a dyer, and then being exposed to cold, a cough came on, which continued to the time he wrote. With the cough there was disordered stomach, difficult expectoration, and oppression of breathing, great weight at the chest, loss of flesh, and much fatigue on exertion. Three different doctors had attended him, treating him for chronic bronchitis, and then for asthma. Still no better, but worse. It was evident (he says) that without improvement very soon he would have been utterly unfit for work.

In a very short time (just one month): "I am glad to say I am stronger and better in every way. I can breathe much more freely."

Each letter reported more improvement. Some circumstances preventing him for a time continuing the medicine regularly as he should have done, and getting again overheated and chilled, the old symptoms began to show themselves. He then wrote at once to me, and commenced regularly, according to my instructions. This time he says, "With quicker effect than before." Writing me Jan. 14 of this year, he says, "I am glad, very glad, to tell you I feel quite renovated now. I daily thank God there are such means for the cure of others beside me."

"If you see fit to use my case for the benefit of other sufferers, you have full liberty so to do."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

LADS IN RATCLIFF HIGHWAY.

The latest, and certainly not the least interesting, offshoot of the work at the well-known Strangers' Rest in Ratcliff-highway is an effort to reach the lads. On Monday week, a few of the workers met to dedicate to God's service 186, Ratcliff-highway, as a Lads' Institute, intended for youths from twelve to eighteen years of age—to provide recreation and class-rooms for their use when their day's work is over. Judging from the appearance of the lads present on Monday, they are of the lowest order in society, such as one sees on Sunday afternoons lounging at every street corner, caring for nothing and nobody; about forty were present, and were delighted with everything provided for them.

The few workers who have commenced this difficult, but important and much-needed work, plead for more helpers. At present the Institute can only be opened four nights a week, from seven to nine o'clock, for lack of more teachers. It is proposed to have classes in writing, reading, arithmetic, and drawing, allowing certain times each evening for games, &c. The rooms are needing more brightness in the way of texts, models, pictures, and reading literature suitable for youths.

Farther details will be gladly supplied by Mr. J. T. Isaac, hon. sec., 163, Ratcliff-highway, E.

DR. ZIEMANN IN GERMANY.

Pastor Zänker, Chairman of the Evangelistic Committee which invited Dr. Ziemann to Barmen, writes in the Westdeutsche Zeitung of February 1:—

Dr. Ziemann has delivered a series of addresses at Barmen, and the following week at Elberfeld. At Elberfeld on two evenings he spoke especially on "The Fight against Immorality." His audiences were large from the first —at Barmen more than 2000 every night, and at Elberfeld more than 3000. Many professed Christians here have been aroused, and a number of "non churchgoers" have heard the Gospel message. His testimony will certainly be blessed.

From Elberfeld Dr. Ziemann came to Crefeld. The friends who invited him were to some extent in fear as to the results, as previous attempts of this kind had proved a failure. All were joyfully surprised when they saw the reception Dr. Ziemann had here. The meetings were crowded every night by men of all classes and denominations; many Roman Catholics were seen. The audiences followed the speaker with deep interest. Even the Liberal Press wrote very favourably of the work, and commended the effort to reach the masses. The first evening, only for men, was attended by over 3000.

The brethren here are arousing themselves to a united effort not to let this movement die away. One outcome is a weekly united prayer-meeting, and personal missionary work.

Hengstenberg, Pastor.

Crefeld, Germany.

LAMBETH RAGGED SCHOOLS.—There is an aggregate attendance of 1025 children at these schools every Sunday, nearly seven hundred coming in the evening. Of many it might be almost said they are babies yet, and the histories of some of these young children would touch the hardest hearts. When it is stated that, besides the Beaufoy Club and Institute for boys, amongst whom it is doing a good work, there are mothers' meetings, sewing classes, Temperance society, and Band of Hope, with attendance at each averaging between forty-five and one hundred, no wonder will be felt that there should be an appeal for additions to the eighty or ninety friends who now take part in the work. Halfpenny dinners have been given to 4897 children during the year. The City Mission Gospel services are well attended, and it is a good sign that the same is said of the Saturday evening prayer-meeting. Penny Bank, and Saturday evening entertainments, and evangelistic song services for the people are also carried on in connection with this most interesting work.

DUBLIN SOLDIERS' INSTITUTE.

The objects with which this Institution was founded and is conducted are shown to be appreciated and attained by the daily attendance at the Institute (amounting last year to a total of 36,437), by the number of soldiers, their wives, and children who make use of the sleeping accommodation, and by the blessing which has attended the spiritual work. The foremost desire is that all who come to the Home may hear the Word of Life, and be led to the Lord Jesus as their Saviour. In the last report we read that many who have attended the different Gospel meetings have professed to receive the new life and to rejoice in Christ as their Saviour. Every evening in the week but one a Bible-class and Gospel service is held, as well as two services on Sunday. The Temperance Society, conducted by non-commissioned officers and men of the garrison, has secured an accession of ninety-nine to the ranks of total abstainers, the number on the roll of this Institute being now 1037. Letters from soldiers in different parts of the world are frequently received, testifying to the blessings received in and their affection for the old Home in Conyngham-road, opposite Phœnix Park gate.

The opening of a new wing has given additional facilities for the extension of the work. Captain R. Wade Thompson, Clonskeagh Castle, co. Dublin, is the hon. secretary.

Working Girls' Home, Drury Lane.

On Tuesday, February 1, the annual meeting of friends and workers connected with the Home took place at 73, Drury-lane, when the report was read by the chairman, Mr. Fletcher. The accounts were most encouraging as to the progress made in all the various branches of work during the past year. Very many friendless girls were received into the Home, and after a short time passed on either to domestic service, or into training homes. These girls come with funds exhausted, clothes often in pledge, friendless in London. Help comes just in time to save them from the sad fate into which they must inevitably have drifted.

Temperance effort makes good progress; a number of girls gather in on special occasions, with one hundred and twelve names on the books. Cooking, working, and other classes are also carried on in the Home, and well attended. The report says forty-three girls, principally from the adjacent courts and streets, have been placed in service through the agency of the Metropolitan Association for Befriending Young Servants, which holds its office in the Home. It also stated that on Sunday afternoons girls placed out at visiting distances are gathered to a tea, to which some of the girls living near are also invited by the lady in charge, Miss King. They read the good old Book, and ask and answer questions. After half an hour spent in singing the Songs and Solos that somehow these girls all know and love, the party adjourn to evening service at one of the places of worship near.

The Home is in Drury-lane, with all its evil surroundings. One must feel thankful to know that even these are gathered in from the cruel streets, carefully and kindly watched over, and help given in its best form, that is, teaching them to help themselves.

BELFAST HOSPITAL FOR SICK CHILDREN.—The career of this institution, as shown by the report recently submitted at its fourteenth annual meeting, has been one of steady progress during the past year. The number of children admitted was 329, and an important feature in connection with their treatment is that, after their discharge, they are for some time carefully watched; advice is given to parents which has proved helpful in restoring the children to strength. The convalescent fund has also been of great benefit in sending children into the country. The total number of out-patients has been very large, amounting to 8964.

ENCOURAGEMENT.

Two years ago, a devoted ragged-school teacher, on leaving London, had to give up her class of boys. She had laboured with and for them earnestly and faithfully, but could see no fruit for her efforts. Her faith and patience were often tested severely by the ingratitude, rudeness, and indifference of the lads who seemed so unimpressionable. It seemed that her teaching and her prayers would be lost, as she was going to leave them. But a covenant-keeping God ruled it otherwise, for the event had the effect of furthering the object this teacher had so much at heart.

Coming to town for a visit, a month afterwards, she had the joy of leading two of the boys to the Saviour; and the work of grace, once begun, went on, as first one and then another yielded to the influences of the Spirit. The other day the teacher was once again in the midst of her loved boys, at a festive gathering, specially convened to give her some tangible expression of gratitude. There were twenty-three lads present, and the teacher had the joy of hearing nine of them give simple testimony to their having found the Saviour, and of knowing that several more are Christians, and leading consistent lives.

MR. HUDSON TAYLOR and CHINA.

We have already given to our readers several recent letters by this good brother, but the following, written on the homeward voyage, will be welcomed. It shows the intense yearning desire of Mr. Taylor's heart towards China—a desire we hope that will be reciprocated by all the friends of Missions:—

My Dear Friend,—Before leaving China I wrote to The Christian and to some other papers to tell of our need of large and immediate reinforcements, and that many of us were banded together in daily prayer for a hundred new missionaries this year. We have no doubt that this prayer is of God, and that it will not only be answered fully, but that He will give "exceeding abundantly" above all we ask or think. This "exceeding abundantly" may come in the form of many more than a hundred missionaries —as when we asked for seventy, and got more than a hundred—or in the form of a deepened missionary spirit in the churches; or, as I hope, in both ways.

I want to ask your help in stirring up Christians to prayer in public and private, in keeping the need and the openings before the Lord's people through The Christian, and in any other ways you can suggest. I shall (d.v.) spend a few days in France, and then proceed to England to do all I can to forward this matter. I know I shall have your deepest sympathy in it. It is such a joy to me to leave two of my dear children at work for the Master in China. The younger, my daughter, will be twenty in a few weeks. She had two souls, I believe, given her last autumn. Good hire, was it not?—Yours affectionately in Christ, J. Hudson Taylor.

THE SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.—Rev. Dr. Wright, in preaching on behalf of this society in Bethesda Church, Granby-road, Dublin, spoke of the Readers sent out by it as valuable links between the clergyman and the body of parishioners, often so large that it is impossible for him properly to visit them. The work the Scripture Readers' Society is performing has been the means of many being brought from the darkness of the Roman Catholic religion into the pure and bright light of the true faith. Most excellent work has been done by the Society in the sixty-six years of its existence; its agents have gone in and out amongst the people as the pastor could not do, and have done much to imbue their churches with the missionary spirit. The address of the Society is 27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin, and Capt. Kearney White is the secretary.

"THE FIELD IS THE WORLD."

CHRISTIANITY IN CHINA.

Under this head a correspondent of The Christian World states, as a set-off to the favourable position in which Christians are placed by the recent proclamation, that it is one of the aims of the present Viceroy to put Christianity under vexatious and trying disabilities, and this is done, without using the weapon of persecution, by placing converts in proclamations amongst the degraded classes, by issuing orders to prevent the employment of Christians on public works, and in other ways.

THE UGANDA MASSACRES.

Mr. Ashe's accounts, says The Church Missionary Intelligencer, show that we had underestimated the number of Christians in Uganda, and the number massacred. More than two hundred have been baptized by the C.M.S. missionaries, and probably a like number by the Roman Catholic priests; but many hundreds besides have learned to read, and the Romanist converts read the papers issued by the C.M.S. Mission. Of the lads burnt to death at the capital, the majority were Romanists. Mr. Ashe thinks that some two hundred persons, who were more or less adherents of one or other of the Missions, were put to death altogether, and a large number of these were attached to the C.M.S. Mission; but of the baptized Christians of the C.M.S., only twelve are certainly known to be dead.

THE SOUDAN.

General Haig reports that Suakim is a most unpromising place for a mission station, the climate being very unhealthy, and the people particularly fanatical. From Suakim he went to Massowah, the port of Abyssinia, and visited the Swedish missionaries there, whose work is much helped by the Italian occupation of that port. Abyssinia is fast closed against the Gospel at present. Then he crossed again to Hodeidah, on the Arabian coast; thence he went to Aden; thence across again to the ports of Zeila and Berbera on the Somali coast, East Africa. On December 21 he went again to Hodeidah, accompanied by Dr. Harpur; and as there seemed inviting openings at that place, especially among the lower population, it was arranged that Dr. and Mrs. Harpur should move thither from Adén for two or three months. Meanwhile, on December 29, General Haig started for Senaa, in the interior of Arabia.—Church Missionary Intelligencer.

AN INDIAN MARRIAGE.

I teach, writes Miss McIntosh, in twenty-three zenanas with fifty-one pupils. After vacation I was disappointed and sorry to find that one of my interesting girls had married suddenly in the holidays. Her father told her early one morning to get up and prepare for the marriage, as the bridegroom was to arrive by the evening train. Her oldest sister said that as soon as her father left the room the girl began to cry, saying she did not wish to be married, and that as soon as she went to her husband's house she would refuse to work and eat. In the evening the bridegroom arrived. The women expected to see a youth of sixteen, but instead came a man of forty-five, without education, and who does not bear a good character. There are only two women in the house beside the children, an elder sister and an old aunt. These poor women could not say anything against the marriage, so the girl, who is only eleven years old, was married to this man, and the following day went with him to Calcutta. She has always been a gentle, timid child, afraid to give offence and anxious to please. Her husband has written to say that he is not pleased with her, so I suppose the poor child has refused to work and to eat, thinking it the best way to be sent back to her own people. Although her father is not a kind man, she is happy with her sisters, who are extremely good and pleasant, and always willing to help one another.—Missionary Link.

AMERICAN MISSIONS IN TURKEY.

In a recent address at Brockton, Mass., Gen. Lew Wallace said a word out of his observation as United States Minister to Turkey, about the American Missionaries in that Empire:—

"I have often been asked: What of the missionaries of the East; are they true, and do they serve their Master? And I have always been a swift witness to say—and I say it now, solemnly and emphatically—that if anywhere on the face of this earth there exists a band of devout Christian men and women, it is these. Their work is of that kind which will in the future be productive of the greatest good. They live and die in the work. One I know has been in the work fifty years. They are God's people, and they should be remembered and sustained by us."

REINFORCEMENTS FOR BLANTYRE.

Rev. A. Hetherwick writes to the Convenor of the Church of Scotland Mission:—"Blantyre Mission.—We have urgent need for reinforcements here. You have no idea how huge a place Blantyre is, and how much it takes to keep the place and work going, not to speak of making fresh attacks or opening new ground. There is room for advance, and there is the force of natives here, now capable, I believe, of making our advance. The need is the means of supervision. Our teachers here give excellent promise. I have hope for brighter and happier days for our East African Mission, when the Church realises that missions are its work, and not a mere by-work. When will that day come? Not until ministers and members realise that missions are more than collections, and mission organisation more than the gathering in of money."

MEDICAL MISSION WORK IN HAN-CHUNG.

In this month's China's Millions there is a very interesting letter from Dr. Wilson, enclosing a portion of his diary, commenced on May 24 last, on suggestion of Mr. Stevenson, whose visit and account of the growth of missionary spirit in this country had done much to stimulate the faith of the brethren in China. The diary covers a period of nearly two months and gives particulars of many cases successfully treated. Some of these were difficult surgical cases, in regard to which the treatment of native doctors had been most prejudicial. Three or four were the result of taking opium, which is done on the least provocation, that the spirit of the departed may vex the offender. And in two of these presents were subsequently made for the services rendered. Notwithstanding the superstition and idolatry which abound, it is plain also that Western ideas are making progress, and that Christianity is finding attentive listeners and adherents amongst the Chinese. Dr. Wilson speaks of good times in telling the out-patients, some from ten, twenty, and thirty miles distant, of God and his Christ, and adds, "they are generally ready enough to acquiesce in anything we say as to the futility of idolatry, and yet nevertheless they persist in it. What one longs to bring home with the Spirit's power is the positive side of truth about the eternal, living, loving God in heaven, and his power, goodness, and mercy in making a way through Christ for pardon and peace now, and eternal happiness hereafter."

An unfailing method of gaining attention is to exhibit a map of the world showing the distance between the two countries, and then it is explained that the reason why the missionaries have come to China is to show the difference between worshipping idols and worshipping the true God. "Hundreds have come from long distances and have returned with tracts, or portions of Scripture to their homes." "One of the most encouraging features of the church at Shih-pah-li-pu is that not one of them is in any way receiving money from foreigners. They are mostly small farmers. When I go down to the country meeting, it seems just like going to a country meeting at home, but for having to speak in Chinese. They do listen so well, and not a few do a little in taking notes—at least noting down the references, so as to be able to look up the subject afterwards."

STRIKING UTTERANCES.

The time is short. With the heathen population of the world increasing by 20,000,000, while the whole Christian church wins but 3,000,000 to the faith of the Gospel, what possible hope remains of this world's evangelisation unless we pray more fervently, give more largely, go in greater numbers, and adopt plans and measures vastly more effective in bringing God's saving truth to the hearts and consciences of earth's perishing millions?—Missionary Review.

In comparison with what might easily be done, the Church is only playing at missions! It ought to set out with a vigorous purpose to obey to the full the risen Saviour's last command, and at once preach the Gospel to every creature. Mrs. Murray Mitchell says that this could be done in India within a generation. Missionaries in Japan think that that country can be brought to accept Christianity within a score of years. Great changes are taking place in China, which has so long resisted change. Everywhere the fields are ripe to the harvest. It is an aggressive church that is needed; it is an aggressive church that God will bless.—Illustrated Christian Weekly.

CHINA AND JAPAN.

We hear from Mr. James, in the depths of Central China:—"Many of the provinces have workers in them, who were known to me at the East London Institute. Yun-nan, with brothers Smith and Foucar; Sichuan, having brother Phelps; An-hway, brother Kay; Kan-suh, brothers Burnett and Hutton; Kiang-su, brother D. Murray (Bible Society); Shansi, brothers Terry, Baynon, and Adamson; Shang-tung, Harmon and Brown; Chil-li, Robert Brown. Our brother McCloy (British and Foreign) is studying for Kusangsi. Outside China proper, is our brother F. A. Steven, at Bhamo. Reckoning myself as belonging to Hunan, ten provinces are represented by the Harley House men. I mention this that you may be refreshed in memory, and made to rejoice in the Lord for all that He hath done by you. I have recent news from nearly all these, and, thanks be to God, all are well.

"I am more than ever satisfied with the ordering of my way, and am assured it has been of the Lord. In July, I went, accompanied by a native brother, for a month's journey into Hunan, where as yet we have no place for settlement. By the Lord's favour we journeyed in peace, and distributed a good number of Scriptures and book tracts. May I ask special prayer for this province, that soon a wide entrance for permanent settlement may be granted. Every time the hall for preaching is opened, many gather to hear the word. Numbers of men and women are interested, and some question deeply concerning the things that pertain unto Christ's kingdom. I trust soon to be able to tell you that this toiling and sowing has resulted in a glorious harvest of precious grain garnered for the Lord. The Lord has given us three whom we esteem as brothers in Christ, and these we take as droppings of a shower soon to come!"

Mr. R. A. Thompson writes from Yokohama:—"It is eighteen months since I left Harley House, and I suppose all whom I knew there are now scattered over the Master's vineyard gathering in the sheaves for his kingdom, only to meet again around his throne in heaven. I feel so glad that I have been called to mission work, never more so than now, for I have just returned from a month's tour in the country, and the scenes which I have witnessed have stirred my heart. Oh how much there is yet to be done, ere all the sheaves are gathered in!

"Friends at home can have little idea how sad a sight it is to see creatures of God's handiwork bowing down to idols of wood and stone, and worshipping them with all the earnestness of their hearts! At one temple I visited, there was an idol supposed to have the power of curing diseases. The people came to it in scores to obtain relief, which they believe can be secured by rubbing their hands on the part of the idol corresponding to the part of their body which is afflicted, and then rubbing themselves! By this process, going on for years, the whole of the idol has been worn quite smooth, till it is now shapeless block of wood.

"I might tell you of many other sights just sad, but the first thought that comes to mind is, how and when shall these people be turned from their idols to serve the true God? Much faith has to be exercised, and much prayer made, that the Spirit of the living God may work amongst them and bring them to the light of the Gospel! Happily, work in Japan is not so dark as it used to be, though there is yet much to be done. Little churches are springing up all over the land, sometimes only composed of half-a-dozen members, yet the Lord is with them. In one village I passed through, the little band of Christians used to worship in the loft of a silk store, now they have a neat little chapel.

"At another large village, where there are about fifty believers and a nice place of worship, the Christians had got word that I was coming, and had given out that I would preach. My knowledge of the language is limited, yet I could not disappoint them, and so preached my first sermon in Japanese! It was indeed a difficult task, but I was rewarded by the pleasure the people expressed, and by the hope that the word spoken in great weakness might be blessed to them. I was the only foreigner, I suppose, within hundreds of miles, and consequently the subject of much curiosity!

"Sometimes the beginning of Christian work in many of these villages has been through the effort of our colporteurs. I have only to mention one case to show you the spirit which animates some of these men, who have themselves been brought to the light of the Gospel, and are trying to lead others to the Saviour. Some time ago a man in the employment of our society, returned from a trip in the country bringing with him the names of fifteen persons in one village who desired admission to the Christian Church. The Word of God is indeed proving a mighty factor in the evangelisation of Japan."

HOW THE BLESSING BEGAN AT BANZA MANTEKA.

Mr. H. Richards lately wrote from the Congo:—"I am full of joy, and cannot help blessing and praising our heavenly Father for all his goodness and love. The long-looked and prayed-for revival has begun! It commenced at the station, and is spreading in the towns. Three fine young fellows came out boldly for the Lord last week, and bore splendid testimony in the towns yesterday. The people are bringing their idols, and there is quite a stir and searching of hearts, and the devil is raising opposition; but God will even make his opposition turn to his glory. Luteti is overjoyed, and there is only one thing, he said, he wished from God, and that was some one to help me. He says I cannot do all that is to be done now by myself, and fears a breakdown.

"What a day yesterday! Praise God! Since writing the above I have conducted the morning service, and the people nearly crowded the house, not to pray for rain, but seeking a blessing. The school has increased, but I intend shutting school and house, and beginning special evangelising work every day. There are seventeen candidates for baptism, who I believe are real Christians, and others have applied, but I have advised them to wait for awhile.

"P.S.—Crowded in this morning. More have given their hearts to Jesus."

In sending the foregoing Congo letter Miss Guinness writes:—"Though the glad tidings it contains are now known far and wide, many will be interested in the little missive. Written, as it was, to a brother missionary (Mr. Harvey) from the very front of the fight, where the resistance was strongest, it bears the impress of the battle upon it. Since it was written the blessing has widely increased; not tens, but hundreds, have 'given their hearts to Jesus.' Pray with us that it may soon extend right over Africa!

"Peep of Day has been translated into the Congo language by Mr. James Eddie, and also a Kizanzi and a Kiteke vocabulary."

Miss Guinness also states that news of the outgoing Congo party had come from Lisbon.

"DE PROFUNDIS."

DR. BARNARDO'S DINNER TO VAGABONDS.

THERE was a significant note attached to Dr. Barnardo's press circular announcing last Thursday's dinner at the Edinburgh Castle:—"We are afraid to invite more at one time than 600 or 700." When the hour came, however, at least 700 guests sat down to their hot dinner of roast beef, potatoes, and plum pudding. Who were they? The card to be presented at the door only said "Admit one"; but the more candid circular uncompromisingly announced: "Ragamuffins, vagabonds, thieves, and tramps from the streets and the lodging-houses, and under twenty-one years of age."

Great care had been taken to place the tickets in proper hands, and to judge by appearances the guests, both as to age and habits of life, came strictly under the description quoted. Young though they all were, however, most of the faces were careworn and sinworn, as if they had been for years paying tithes of all they possessed to the devil—as if, like Miss Hopkins' hero, they "had been knocked about the world and grow'd up in publics." There was little of the discipline of an ordered life in their scramble for seats, or in their tendency to take advantage of every opportunity that offered for a bout of noisy cheering, or an impish lark with their companions. Their faces were none of the cleanest; their hair was of the shaggiest; and their clothes of the raggedest. Truly Satan to many of them had been a hard taskmaster; and it did not need a second glance to prove that vice does not pay. Dirty, ragged, hungry, with nothing of purpose in their lives worth living for, the guests were a striking object-lesson on the supremacy of the moral law, and the penalties of its infringement.

Dinner was despatched in a trice, and the waiter lads from the Labour House were hard put to it to supply the constant demands for renewed platefuls. Even when the tea was handed round, the edge of appetite among some hardly appeared to have been taken off; it was whispered that one young fellow near where the writer sat had had six cups, and that his record was closely approached by not a few of his companions. If ever guests, however, enjoyed a meal, these members of "the great unwashed" did so; and when the relics of the feast were carried off, and opportunity offered for a little talk, cheering could hardly have been heartier or more vociferous than that which greeted Dr. Barnardo's proposal to send a message of thanks and sympathy to their absent host, the Hon. Thomas Holt. But the expressed sense of favours received was swallowed up in that of expectancy, when it was announced, amidst a whirlwind of applause that showed how much the favour meant, that a new sixpence, to pay for that night's lodging and next day's breakfast, would be presented to each guest as he left the Hall.

"Now, how many lads here are living in lodging-houses?" asked the Doctor, abruptly. A majority of hands went promptly up, and the speaker at once glided into an unconventional talk, whereof the burden was that he held a key of promise for every lad who was tired of a hard and aimless existence, and who was able and willing to do the world's work. There was neither class denunciation, nor vague plans of social amelioration, but a downright appeal to each lad, which could not be passed on to his neighbour, and which was calculated to stir up his hope and self-respect to a sense of better things. As usual, he told a life-story, with a moral and a parable in every line of it—of how a protégé of his, who had once promised well, got mixed up with a lot of bad company down in Brick-lane; how he took to thieving; how he had two or three short sentences; and how finally he "got rather a long time of it." "He's in there now," he concluded. "If there is any honest lad here who, although he may have done many things wrong, has not yet actually begun to steal, and has been honest so far, but who is in danger from bad company, I will be glad to give him help if he cares to have it. I will give him a chance this very night of leaving the streets and the life of the lodging-houses, and of getting right into one of our great Institutions for necessary training, where he will have to work hard of course, but where he will have a home and a future." Here the spruce-looking youths of the Labour House, some of them only rescued a month or so ago, were called upon to stand up and made to show their smiling faces, stout frames, and jolly presence, to the audience as an example and an inducement—an argumentum ad hominem which had a very striking effect on the "tag, rag, and bobtail" who looked on admiringly.

Well, but what of the future? Dr. Barnardo had a secret in store. "A lot of my lads will go to Canada shortly; that is, if they are good enough, for I won't send any but the best of those in the Home. If there are lads who prove after admission to be lazy, idle, skulking fellows, without truth, honesty, or character, such lads have not the smallest chance of getting to Canada. Only the best go. Well, I have a big farm out there, seven miles square, and even if I hadn't any land every lad would be snapped up by the farmers the moment I got my party to Toronto, at wages of from sixty to one hundred and fifty dollars a year, with everything found. But I'll tell you something more. We are going to take a thousand acres of our big farm and cut it up into little farms of from twenty to thirty acres each, and I am going to settle down on these farms a number of my best lads who have lived and worked a certain time in Canada, and proved themselves worthy of special notice. The Dominion Government, if this plan is a success, will be ready to follow my example, and grant five farms for every one of mine. That is, there is a probability of hundreds of such farms being absolutely given to honest and industrious lads, most of whom have been taken from the streets and lodging-houses of London, who are eighteen years of age, and whose character and life are thoroughly good. Now that's the sort of future that lies before, not one or two, but hundreds of my fellows. I don't want to persuade any one of you to leave the streets against your will. If you like them, stay in them! If 'Flowery Dean-street' and St. George's-in-the-East are in your minds the nearest route to an earthly paradise, by all means stay there and starve; but if some of you here have grit enough and sense enough to choose something better; if you have resolved to do your best to lead a better life; if you have as yet kept honest, and, although poor, are only unfortunate, not criminal, then you may apply to me presently, and I will find a sure means of helping you to help yourself."

The address was well received, and one could see that there were "great resolves of heart" among not a few. The little hand-bell ringers played on their bells; other speakers followed with earnest, manly words of Gospel truth, illustrated by telling anecdotes from life; and finally, as they passed through the door, each received a copy of the New Testament penny edition, and a new sixpence from Miss Holt's hands. Seventy miserable ragged fellows lingered behind to apply for admission, and we hear that Dr. Barnardo received about sixty-five at once into training at the Labour House for Destitute Youths. In these cases the "De Profundis" may surely give place to the "Te Deum Laudamus."

A DISCLAIMER.—We are requested to state that the Mr. Pigott referred to by Rev D. B. Hankin in our last is not the gentleman of that name who is known in connection with the China Inland Mission.

WORTH MISSION HALL, THREE BRIDGES.—The motto chosen by the friends engaged in this work as, surveying the "hill of difficulty" already past, they look forward to the future, is "I will trust, and not be afraid." The eleventh report states that the Sunday services are well attended; the Sunday-school continues to flourish. Letters from old scholars often cheer the hearts of those who are sowing the seed, and the monthly special service for children is a source of good. The week-night services, prayer-meetings, &c., are evidently appreciated by the people for whom they are intended. Acknowledgments are expressed to the Evangelisation Society for the earnest preachers sent Sunday after Sunday.

☞ To prevent delay in the execution of orders, it is specially requested by the Publishers that all business letters may be directed to the firm (Morgan & Scott). Also that personal letters for either partner may be so marked.

If the paper is not kept for reference, readers are requested to give it away, or send it to any minister, Sunday-school teacher, or other Christian, or to a workhouse, hospital, infirmary, or ship. Do not let it be made waste paper.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give a portrait and sketch of the late Dr. W. Lindsay Alexander, of Edinburgh.

When so many delusions are abroad, arising largely from the want of sound doctrine from many pulpits, we trust the endeavour of our dear friend and brother, Pastor Frank H. White, to build his Tabernacle, will meet with well-deserved support. We can say with confidence that the trumpet there will give no uncertain sound.

That practical form of Christianity which was personified by the late Earl Shaftesbury, has a field for work in the East-end of London, which still seems to have no limits to its extent. We were glad to see that Lord Brabazon gathered so many influential friends together last week to a conference at the Westminster Palace Hotel, with a view to promote colonisation. There is an abundance of room for village settlements in Canada, for we are told that the extension of the railway system has opened up a territory where forty millions may find a home.

While Lord Brabazon and his friends are at work upon a plan whereby 10,000 families may be comfortably settled upon Canadian soil, the Mansion House Council upon the Dwellings of the Poor are endeavouring, through local committees, to improve the present environment of the congested population of the East-end. Inspectors who devote the whole of their time to the work were engaged upon several thousand cases last year, and their efforts had a most beneficial effect upon the diminution of infectious disease.

We sincerely hope that some details will be furnished which may serve to lighten up the dark picture of a Greenwich "Young Men's Friendly Society" which appears in The Christian Leader of last week. This society has a clergyman for president, and four clergymen as vice-presidents; yet it is said there is not one feature of its work to identify it with the religion of Christ any more than with Confucius. Nor are there any educational classes of any sort.

"A nigger troupe" is described as the backbone of the society's work, and the songs and antics which constitute the performance are a libel upon the coloured race. A member of another Church, whose son had been induced to join the troupe, remonstrated with the clerical secretary last autumn against its continuance during the present winter. The letter received no acknowledgment, and the troupe goes on its way. This seems to us quite as remarkable a combination of the Church and the world as the "Church and Stage Guild."

Many friends have expressed their hearty appreciation of the papers by Rev. F. B. Meyer, of Leicester, on the Life of Jacob, the concluding portion of which appears in our present issue. Our readers may be glad to know that we hope soon to commence a similar series of articles, from Mr. Meyer's pen, on the Life of Elijah.

A word spoken in due season, how good is it! A hard-working London pastor was asking one Sunday for a liberal collection in order to support a nurse and Bible-woman, whose work had proved a great blessing to the dwellers in a poor district. At the close of the service a gentleman came to the vestry and said :—

> I am a stranger to you, and I came here to-day, one might say, by chance. But I am so pleased with what you said about the usefulness of the nurse and Bible-woman, that if you will allow me, I will be pleased to give £50 for three years to support another in your district.

The second payment has lately been made.

"A Grieved Missionary" writes to us from Nagasaki, Japan, describing the funeral rites, at a Buddhist temple, of the wife of the governor of the city :—

> There lies the coffin, around it nearly all the foreign residents of Nagasaki, including two missionaries, the Japanese officials, the priests of Buddha, the relatives of the deceased, and thousands of heathen spectators. A Christian missionary rises and gives an eloquent oration in English; then the priests of Buddha pray and chant, and then the English and American Consuls lead their countrymen, including English and foreign ladies—Protestants, Anglicans, Lutherans, and Romanists — each joins in the idolatrous worship of the spirits, the Kami, the false gods of Shintoism and Buddhism. Each takes a pinch of incense, and reverently sprinkling it on the burning censer on the altar, before the coffin makes the same obeisance, and to all intents and purposes offers the same worship as the poor heathen priests and others around them. The only exceptions are the two missionaries, and one or two influenced by their endeavours.

Our correspondent severely comments on "the utter degradation of spirit which could permit Christian ladies and gentlemen to indulge a sentimental sympathy at the expense of denying their Redeemer," and proceeds to make this further charge against the resident representatives of the Western world :—

> For years past immorality, deep, dark, degrading in these lands, has been practised by Europeans, and connived at and condoned by those whose duty it was, as leaders of society, to discountenance and expose it. The natural results show themselves in an utterly unreal, hollow, and conventional Christianity, which is ready to sacrifice faith and conscience on the shrine of worldly policy, social courtesy, or mere self-interest. The very heathen are scandalised, the native Christians amazed, and every faithful believer grieved and indignant. Prayer is, indeed, needed that this public sin be repented of and pardoned; for great occasion has been given to the enemies of the Lord to blaspheme.

Mr. Sankey is still busy in New York. The papers received last week record his presence at the Cooper Union Hall, the Central Presbyterian Church, and the McAuley Cremorne Mission. Later on he proceeds to Chicago to join Mr. Moody in the work there.

The fifty-fourth chapter of Isaiah is full of sweet promises to the believer. The "heritage of the servants of the Lord" is clearly defined, and the comforting assurance given that no weapon that is formed against them shall prosper. The tenth verse is a mine of the Divine love; we would commend those who are anxious with regard to their future to accept it in child-like faith, and to rejoice over the precious words as being those of Him to whom even the dim and distant future is clear and present: "For the mountains shall depart, and the hills be removed; but my kindness shall not depart from thee, neither shall the covenant of my peace be removed, saith the Lord that hath mercy on thee."

Dr. Parker, in his recent address to students in Edinburgh, quoted Luther to the effect that though there should be forty doctors in a church, a preacher should preach so as to be understood by the less learned. The recently published Life of the poet Longfellow (Kegan Paul & Co.) goes to show that it is men of high culture who protest the most against sermons that appeal chiefly to the reasoning faculties. Longfellow, in his journal, writes (vol. ii. p. 153): "Heard a logical discourse, dry and dreary to us who asked for the celestial manna." Again (p. 116): "A hair-splitting sermon: to me, a sermon is no sermon in which I cannot hear the heart beat."

Rev. Dr. Balgarnie, Presbyterian minister at Gravesend, has lately preached a sermon on what he calls "The most interesting stone in the world." He says the engineers of the Palestine Exploration party having sunk a shaft 79 feet in the Temple wall, and illuminated the masonry by magnesium light, discovered the corner-stone, which was 14 feet in length and 3 in height. This stone at first, because of its unmanageable angularity and hardness, was "rejected by the builders," but was adopted for its place, and shaped, by the order of King Solomon. If this as a typical fact is true, some verification of it should be given by Dr. Balgarnie, who has been a long time occupied upon Old Testament antiquities.

A correspondent writes :—

> I have frequently sent parcels of tracts to "applicants," and then several weeks after I have often received very pleasant letters in reply; and in some instances I have kept up correspondence with the individuals, to help them in their work. But in THE CHRISTIAN of October, there was an application from —— ——, and I sent a large parcel of tracts free to him on December 30, with a letter, stating my reason for so doing, in reply to his application; not having received an answer, I should like to know whether the tracts reached him. I always like to send parcels to those who are really workers for the Lord, and therefore I generally enclose a stamped envelope for their reply.

We suppress the name mentioned by our friend, but as she evidently spares no pains to be of service in this particular branch of usefulness, it would be only courteous if recipients of tracts should acknowledge all parcels not sent anonymously. Perhaps other readers may also be led to encourage tract distributors by an occasional letter of cheer.

Death-bed charity has often been sneered at as representing the gift of that which could no longer be retained; but some statistics of recently-proved wills would show that there are many people who do not find a place for charity even when some liberality would not be by any means surprising. By eight wills of quite recent date sums ranging from £647,000 personalty to £24,000 were left, amounting in all to nearly £1,400,000, and out of this huge wealth only the miserable trifle of £6,700 was bequeathed to charities. Strange to say, the smaller the sum left the greater was the proportion allocated to charity.

In these days, when some would not only perpetuate but strengthen the party walls between the churches, we welcome these words from a sermon by Canon Cheyne, D.D., Oxford Oriel Professor of the Interpretation of Holy Scripture, preached at an ordination held by the Bishop of Rochester :—

> I ask you to welcome every opportunity of brotherly meeting, theological conference, and practical co-operation with worthy representatives of the great Nonconformist bodies. The day will come, and you will live to see it, when the various sections of the greater English churches may, by conferences and readings, learn each one from the other, minimise their differences both in doctrine and worship, and associate themselves for a combined attack on the forms of sin and ignorance.

In the midst of Socialist processions to parish churches, and other strange developments of the spirit of unrest, it is refreshing to find Rev. Chas. Wm. Stubbs, vicar of Granborough, whose mastery of questions affecting labour and the working classes is so well known, giving utterance to this confirmed opinion :—

> As English Christians we may, I think, rightly be thankful for the truth that no great social movement among the labour classes in England would have the slightest possibility of success, which was antagonistic to Christianity, or relied on atheistic elements for its propaganda.

Mr. Stubbs asserts that although in the Labourers' Union movement scant courtesy may have sometimes been paid to the "village parson," it never was shown knowingly to the cause of Christianity and true religion; and he adds, "the power of the Bible, as a moral and social force over the mass of our fellow-countrymen, is still a reality." We are satisfied of the truth of these opinions, based as they are upon very close and accurate knowledge of the people; and although there are disturbing elements at work in the midst of the labouring classes, we do not see any reason to doubt that the forces which in the same centres are working for good will ultimately overcome and overpower them.

Since the time when Dickens drew attention to the fact that some of our City churches are by no means overcrowded on the Lord's-day, many endeavours have been made, with varying success, to attract people within the sacred walls of churches in localities where the residents are but few, the ebb of trade leaving the districts almost entirely deserted on the Sabbath. It is no pleasure to criticise any attempt to draw people to the house of God, but surely little can be said for such labour upon the lines declared in the following notice, which we take from the current number of a periodical devoted, so the reverend Editor asserts, to the reformation of the Church :—

> There will be a Guild Service at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, Queen Victoria-street, E.C., on Sunday, ——, at 3.45, at which Rev. H. C. Shuttleworth will lecture on "The English Stage as it was and as it is."

If Rev. Stewart D. Headlam, who signs this notice, has nothing better to offer in his task of getting rid, "by every possible means, of the existing prejudices, on the part of 'secularists' against the Church, her sacraments and doctrines," we fear his endeavour "to justify God to the people" is a long way from its accomplishment.

Surely the General Omnibus Company of London cannot rest quietly under the grave impeachment of their methods by Rev. Freeman Wills, in this month's Eastward Ho! He asserts in so many words that an omnibus conductor in the Company's service cannot hold his situation without dishonesty. He is at the mercy of his fellow employés :—

> The conductor's wages are 4s. a day……The driver's daily wages are 6s.; but he adds to them by compelling the conductor to give him, in money or kind (dinner and drinks), from three to four shillings a day. The penalty of refusing him "the usual" would be quick dismissal, and dismissal as a rogue, without a character. There is a grim rule in the General Omnibus Company never to give characters……But the sacrifice of all his wages is not enough. He must "tip" the timekeeper, and the stablemen must have their small gratuities…… To keep the place of a conductor the only way is to rob the Company; and this he may do to any amount, consistent with paying in a fair daily average.

Mr. Wills flatly asserts that the governing officials of the Company know the state of the case well enough, and wink at it, because, notwithstanding all, they can declare a dividend of twelve and a half per cent. But what do the shareholders have to say to this, we wonder? And what about a system that makes the conductor's badge "a badge of disgrace;" so that if he has to leave the service, as constantly happens, no other employers, who know whence he has come, will engage him? If the General Omnibus Company do not prosecute Mr. Wills for libel, they will lie under the serious imputation of systematically conniving at fraud.

In The Nonconformist and Independent a "Young Deacon" has started a correspondence on Commercial Morality. His premises are, that most business is so given up to the devil of greed and over-reaching that it is all but impossible for Christian traders to preserve a high tone of spiritual life. A commercial traveller from Reigate totally denies this; affirms, after intimate knowledge, that a large body of tradesmen in country towns do maintain Christian integrity, and that this is the main element of their success. "An Older Deacon" follows with a testimony that the inconsistency of Christian traders is the fruit of unchristian homes, where not principle, but expediency, is inculcated as the rule of life.

Judging from statements in last Saturday's Pall Mall Gazette, these omnibus thefts and commercial immoralities are only indices of the general rottenness of society. Mrs. Weldon makes this extraordinary statement :—

> My experience tells me that the Royal Courts of Justice are built up on perjury, supported by perjury, and that the judges wink at, countenance, and encourage perjury wholesale. No magistrate would grant a summons for perjury against a person in good position.

A leading article in the same paper is more sweeping still in its charges of corruption, which are aimed alike at prominent politicians, local administrators, and private individuals: "At every turn we meet men who tell stories of bribery and say you only need to probe deep enough to find dishonesty everywhere." And yet we plume ourselves on being a "Christian" nation. One most serious aspect of the case is that our Christian pulpit teachers seem either to be in blissful ignorance of all that is going on, or else, knowing the facts, are afraid to characterise and denounce them as they deserve.

To all who mourn over the evils that abound in this great city, and sigh for a reign of righteousness and comfort and contentment in our colossal community, we commend the perusal of a remarkable pamphlet, "London: a Warning Voice," by H. Hargreaves (Elliot Stock, 9d.)

If our readers want to know of an illustration of real practical Christianity, let them not fail to peruse the account given on another page of Dr. Barnardo's plans as to his great Canadian farms in the North-West. Everyone will wish and pray that the project may be crowned with complete success.

The French correspondent of Evangelical Christendom thus writes in the current number :—

> "To work, gentlemen, and to the front!" cried the octogenarian President for the day, Pierre Blanc, to the Chamber of Deputies, on its opening meeting this year. And he wisely and strongly advised them to take up first those reforms, pre-eminently beneficial and urgent, concerning the suffering classes…on which there is no difference of opinion, and to defer to a later date discussions of subjects…likely to stir up passion and to bring forth irremediable disunion. No words could more suitably express what is needed among Christians just now.

None indeed! Let the people be rooted and grounded in the faith; let the foundations be well and deeply laid; then Christians will not be blown about by every wind of doctrine, as otherwise they surely will be.

A young servant told us the other day that the Professor used to talk to them a great deal about Hades. It is too often the case that the intermediate state, or other difficult subjects on which scarcely two mature Christians go far together, is pressed upon young or inexperienced believers, who need rather to be taught in the simplicity of Christ, "who of God is made unto us wisdom—both righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption."

The less definite Scripture there is for any doctrine, the more its advocates are thrown upon their own judgment and opinion; and the more vehemently will they contend for it. It is of the utmost importance that we feed the babes in Christ with the sincere milk of the Word, that they may grow thereby.

MISSION WORK IN NORTH BOW.—During last year, Rev. J. F. Porter, of the mission at Smeed-road, Bow, spent ninety-three days in the personal investigation of domestic cases brought before him, and applications for relief are constantly being received. Free breakfasts, varied by an occasional dinner, are given three days in each week, and on Thursday last, a children's dinner and entertainment were given at Driffield-road.

MRS. REANEY AT STOCKTON.—This lady paid a visit to Stockton on Friday last, when a goodly number of friends assembled in the afternoon, in the Friends' Meeting House, to hear an address from her on "Christian Work." For an hour and a half she held the audience, as she told the story of Rescue work in the East of London, and urged home upon all their individual responsibility. In the evening Mrs. Reaney delivered a most earnest address on "Temperance," in the Temperance Hall.

A UNITED PRAYER-MEETING has for four years been held daily at 87, Leadenhall-street adjoining St. Katherine Cree Church, between one and three o'clock. These gathering (continued from the City of London College) have been greatly blessed. Many souls have been saved, God's children built up, and there have been wonderful answers to prayer on behalf of unconverted relations and sick ones. A strong feeling of brotherly love also exists between the members. Rev. Dr. Whittemore, the rector, who is sometimes present, has now built a hall at the back of the present meeting-place, which, it is hoped, will be opened the first week in March when a tea will be given to the workmen engaged in its erection. Mr. Wilmshurst is the leader of the meeting, and may be addressed as above.

REV. SAM JONES IN BOSTON, U.S.

A long account of Mr. Jones's meetings by a special correspondent, dated January 23, appears in the New York Independent. He says:—

"Let us hope that the next great revival which sweeps over our country may be a revival of righteousness." I quote from memory the above words, uttered by President Fairchild, of Oberlin College, on a great occasion several years ago. The work which Rev. Samuel P. Jones, of Georgia, is now endeavouring to do in Boston, is in realisation of that hope.

Mr. Jones not only believes that he is called and qualified to preach this one phase of truth only, but that the emphasis needs to be laid on that, because hitherto the practical doctrines have been slighted while disproportionate stress has been put on belief and emotion. Last Thursday night the evangelist preached on repentance, from 1 John i. 9: "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." The sermon was the culmination of all that had gone before. In this sermon he stated, explained, and defended his theological position, so far as his preaching was concerned. "John," he said, "put the whole Gospel in less than three lines. This is the whole of the Gospel on the human side of the Gospel; and really, brother, that is the only side you and I have to do with." Then he went on to urge and illustrate his one idea, which is the purpose and purport of all his preaching, that repentance is first and repentance is fundamental in religion; and repentance is just ceasing from sin. "If repentance doesn't mean quitting your meanness, it doesn't mean anything." "Sam" Jones is, I verily believe, in complete touch with the great body of devout and divinely wise religious teachers of our time. He is mightily toiling to help on the sort of revival for which President Fairchild taught us to hope; and he is sending the shafts of his sanctified sarcasm at that body of death, characterless piety, which crime and corruption in high places and low places teach us most to fear in modern society.

The appearance and manner of Mr. Jones have often been described, but much that is most significant has been overlooked. I have had opportunities for the close and repeated study of this remarkable man. I have gazed up into his face while he preached, and stood by his side while he took the hands of inquirers in the after-meeting. The closer I get to him the better I like him. He looks like a pure, laborious, thoughtful, self-forgetful, self-denying man, chastened by such experiences as few of us know, sobered and saddened by the memory of the life he once led, intent on nothing but getting other folks to find the great deliverance which he has found, and doing what he does because that is the only way by which he can accomplish his purpose.

Meetings have been held each evening, and nearly every afternoon. Since Sunday all the services have centred at the People's Church, on Columbus Avenue. That famous and enormous structure has been filled and crowded every night. Always more people have come than could find seats, often more than could cross the threshold. The work is to go on another week, and probably longer.

BEN JONSON MISSION.—This Mission, under the active superintendence of Mr. James Taylor (28, Cressy-place, Stepney-green) has now made a fresh start, the old premises having been remodelled and enlarged into a new hall, cheery and comfortable, though not of large dimensions. It is situated near the spot where the hall used by Messrs. Moody and Sankey was planted, and when that mission closed, with characteristic brusqueness Mr. Moody bade the workers "Go ahead!" The new hall was opened by a public meeting last week, at which Mr. J. Kellaway and Mr. G. Morgan were among the speakers. Thirty pounds are needed to clear off outstanding liabilities, and when this is accomplished Mr. Taylor will commence a series of free meals to the needy poor of the neighbourhood

SCRIPTURE READERS AT TEA.

As happy a social gathering, says The Rock, as ever took place, perhaps, under the roof of King's College, London, was seen in its capacious dining hall on Friday week, when a large party of the Readers of the Church of England Scripture Readers' Association, many of them accompanied by their wives, were most hospitably entertained. A number of friends thoroughly interested in their work had come to spend the evening with them, and to wish them God-speed in commencing another year's labour, and these were received with a cordiality which showed how highly they were esteemed by the guests.

Among the speakers was Rev. Marcus Rainsford, the clerical secretary, who said:—"I am sure we are all thankful for the occasions on which we are permitted to meet together to go down into the precious truths of the Word of God, and you will join with me in praying that not one of these occasions from month to month shall ever prove unprofitable. It is strongly on my mind that we should from to-night make a new start for the Master. We live in dark and dangerous times, when, though there is a form of godliness there is an absence of its power. There is a great work to be done in London, and you, with others, must do it. Let me urge you, therefore, to have great ideas of the grandeur of the work in which you are engaged. It is one in which, I believe, the angels of God would be glad to be employed. But God does not send his angels, but poor sinners like ourselves, taught by his Word, to go from house to house to tell of his salvation. I thank God that I do not know one of our Scripture-readers of whom I cannot say he is a man of God."

In proceeding, the speaker urged upon them also to have great thoughts of the weapon which God had put into their hands, for there is no sword like the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God. He reminded them that they did not go forth in their own strength, but as men of God in the power of the Holy Ghost. We want, he said, to realise the value of the precious souls to whom we give the message, for you have a work to do which archbishops, bishops, rectors, and curates cannot do. There was a very good illustration of this in a place where I once lived. There was a man near me who was the plague of the country round; a drunkard, a blasphemer, who never went into a place of worship. If the Archbishop of Canterbury had been announced to preach, that man would not have gone to hear him; but when walking one day past a hall where the rag-tag and bob-tail of the population had been got in to hear the Gospel, his attention was arrested by a placard on the door, announcing that Tom Jones, the costermonger, was going to preach. "Here's a go!" he cried, and then he added, "If Tom has turned parson, I'll go and hear him." He went, and God sent his truth home to that man's heart, and now he is a bright and shining light in that neighbourhood.

HOWARD-STREET MISSION.—A free breakfast is given to a number of the poor, unemployed men and women from the lodging-houses in the neighbourhood at this hall every Sunday morning. More than one hundred were thus cheered and comforted on a recent Sunday morning, and their gratitude was great. After breakfast there is a Gospel service, the power of which has been manifest in bringing home conviction of sin to many. Mr. John Soames, 7, Bromfield-road, Clapham, is the superintendent.

HYDE PARK HALL MISSION.—The work of preaching the Gospel in Hyde-park, commenced sixteen years ago by Mr. Chas. Cook, and more lately embodied in the Mission established close by at the above-named hall, has been energetically and successfully continued during the past year. Meetings are held regularly in Hyde-park during the summer, as also in the Mission hall and large music hall near by. As a result of these labours, some are now preaching the Gospel which once they ignored or contradicted, while many have been brought to the Saviour.

GUIDANCE.

"For thy name's sake, lead me, and guide me."
Psalm xxxi. 3.

When the sunshine on my way
Gladdens all the live-long day;
Lest there be a subtle snare
In the brightness anywhere,
Saviour, lead and guide!

When the work I undertake
Seems as nought for love's dear sake,
And with light and wingèd feet
I the crowd of duties meet,
Saviour, lead and guide!

When the sunshine fades away,
And life's brightness will not stay,
Then, amid the soul's deep chill,
Whisper comfort, keep me still,
Saviour, lead and guide!

If with aching heart and limb,
In the darkness—ne'er so dim—
I thy given task pursue,
Grant me courage, keep me true,
Saviour, lead and guide!

For thy name's sake—for THY sake,
Aid me in the way I take;
And, earth's joy and grief all o'er,
To the calm and heavenly shore,
Saviour, lead and guide!

Mr. Spurgeon and Young Preachers.

On Tuesday evening, last week, the annual tea and public meeting in connection with the Metropolitan Tabernacle Country Mission and Evangelists' Training Class was held. Mr. Spurgeon was very warmly welcomed, and proceeded to offer a few remarks. In the course of these he said:—"Sermons should be savoury. There is a way of holding out the truth so as people may dislike it. The spirit in which we preach and teach is exceedingly important. You cannot be loving in manner unless you are loving in spirtt. You cannot even be forcible in manner unless you have force in your own spirit. I trust that every one of you will try and make all he can of himself, and will not think much of himself. The ruin of a man is the notion that there is anything in him. There are brethren who need being taken down; but when they are down they frequently rise very quickly up again. I do not think there is anything so wise as for a man to have a wife better educated than himself, so that when he makes a mistake she may say, 'My dear, I noticed that you said so-and-so. It ought to have been so-and-so.' He doesn't like it even from her, but it goes and comes very nicely from her, especially before she is his wife. Very softly and very sweetly she can suggest to him little amendments and little improvements, and he is likely to get better.

"If ever you do tell one another of your faults, you will do it, I am sure, with great kindness, but you must not hesitate to do it. Nobody is more your enemy than one who flatters you. I wish, my young brethren who are going forth to preach, that God may make something of you in the days to come. There is room in the world for a great many more useful preachers. You know in all trades and professions that there is a great crowd at the bottom of the ladder, but there is always lots of room at the top. The reason why so many persons are poor is because they do not understand their own trade. Go in, then, young fellows, to do everything first-rate! You have a first-rate Master, whom you serve, and you have a first-rate Gospel to preach, and a first-rate work before you in saving souls. Try to do your very best, and if you do your very best, then, however poor you may be in natural power, you need not be ashamed. It may be if you attain to nothing but the common rank, if you do the work for the Master faithfully He will accept it."—Baptist.

RAMSGATE SANDS.

For nineteen years evangelistic services have been conducted on Ramsgate Sands by Mr. W. Nott during the summer season. Friends who were present at the Exeter Hall gathering on Tuesday, last week, as they listened to the singing of familiar choruses, may well have been reminded of pleasant hours when the music of these words came home to their hearts in the quiet of an evening at the seaside.

Mr. Nott was as radiant and earnest, and to the point, in the few remarks he made, as when speaking under summer skies. The little report issued shows that last year over two hundred services were held, and one of the speakers said the audience sometimes numbered as many as five thousand persons. Not only were these times of real enjoyment, but many letters have been received by Mr. Nott, telling how the word of truth preached or sung had been made fruitful in the hearts and lives of those who heard.

Rev. Z. B. Woffendale, in a warm and practical address, said that these services were extremely helpful to Christians, whose love to Christ is warmed and kept up at a time when they much needed such stimulus. He had been happy to assist in the meetings, the great delight of which was that there Christians of all denominations met on common ground. Mr. Garstein, Mr. Hill, and Mrs. Bunning also gave earnest addresses.

MISS BOOTH'S WEDDING.

The marriage of the eldest daughter of General Booth with Colonel Clibborn, on Tuesday last week, naturally excited great interest. Her ardent devotion to the work of winning souls, and to the Salvation Army methods; her fervent labours, both in England and on the Continent; her imprisonment in Switzerland; the dangers she has braved in the slums of Paris, that the very lowest might hear the Gospel message, combine to give her a claim to public admiration greater than many a popular hero or heroine. Colonel Clibborn, too, has been a prominent figure in the Army's work on the Continent, and is regarded with much esteem.

Under the happiest auspices; with the earnest good wishes of more than the five thousand who, with loud "God bless you's!" and many "Hallelujahs!" greeted them; with the blessing of the General and Mrs. Booth, and according to the Salvation Army forms, this couple were last week united at the Congress Hall, Clapton. The legal ceremony had, of course, been gone through before. The scene was imposing. At the conclusion of the formal proceedings the bride sang with much sweetness and effect, "All that I have I am bringing to Thee."

The bridegroom, who has assumed the name of Booth-Clibborn, said he was happy, and added that he had learnt for years past, not only to love, but to honour and revere Miss Booth for her work's sake; and he believed the hand of God was in their union. He asked for the prayers of all present for the greater dedication of his wife and himself in the cause to which they had given themselves. The bride also delivered a long and earnest address.

After the breakfast Mrs. Booth-Clibborn gave some account of the progress the Army is making in France. A most encouraging address was also given by M. Parent, of Nîmes, who said that Southern France had been greatly moved by the influence of the Salvation Army. A considerable sum was contributed by the guests towards the extension of the work.

STRANGERS' REST, CARDIFF.—Miss Weston visited this Home last week, and gave an interesting sketch of her work. Miss Tilly, in a brief account of the work at Cardiff, said that over thirty-two thousand men had attended the English meetings, and nearly seven hundred pledges had been taken. Five hundred bags of books were given to sea-going ships, and about a thousand letters were written by the workers to men at foreign ports.

Railway Men in Derby.

In connection with the Railway Mission a mass meeting of over 2000 people was held in the Drill Hall on February 10. Mr. Miles MacInnes, M.P., presided, and spoke well on the high aims of the Mission, urging all present to take an interest in its operations. Mr. D. Spencer, secretary, gave a descriptive account of the work done, both by the officials, the servants, and ladies. This description was confirmed by no less than six testimonies of men from Leicester, Birmingham, Nottingham, and Derby, all of which had the usual Exeter Hall ring about them, and were greatly appreciated.

Various addresses were then given by Mrs. Gates (Brighton), Rev. S. Owen, Messrs. R. Radcliffe, A. J. Grinley, R. Johnson, and others, all of whom urged the claims, and spoke highly of the work carried on among railway-men in the United Kingdom and abroad. The office of the Mission is at 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

Blackdown Hills Mission.

Dear Sir,—Many of the people in this poor agricultural district are in great need from want of employment. The winter has been, and still is, very severe, and many families are at their wits' end to provide for their children. We do what we can to provide bread for the most destitute.

Many are constantly drifting to the large centres, only to add to the overcrowded state of such districts, and to add to the element of lawlessness. The agricultural interest is certainly in a very bad condition. Scarcely any farmer will employ labour, because the rents are high, and the returns are low. Hundreds bear up as well as they can, and suffer rather than complain, so that the poor who have no helper go to the wall. We have given bread and coals to some of the most needy families, and clothing as far as we can.

The spiritual work prospers, and souls are saved continually. Geo. Brealey.

Clayhidon, Wellington, Somerset.

GLASGOW SEAMEN'S FRIEND SOCIETY.—As shown in the report of the sixty-fourth year's work of this Society presented at the annual meeting, the year 1886 has been an eventful one in its history, having witnessed the opening of the new Institute at 200, Broomielaw. This, with the Seamen's Bethel opened three years ago on the south side of the river, affords excellent accommodation to seamen for spending their spare time pleasantly and profitably. Some account of the work of the association was given in a recent number, but it may be added here, as a matter for deep thankfulness, that no less than 733 persons have, in connection with the meetings, professed to yield themselves to the Saviour, and that God's Spirit has been manifestly working amongst the men of the sea. The number of visits paid by seamen to the Institution on both sides of the river is over 180,000, and more than 1,000 have signed the temperance pledge. Mr. R. H. Hunter, 27, Jamaica-street, Glasgow, is the treasurer and secretary.

SAILORS' HOMES OF REST.—In an account of her work recently given at a meeting convened by Miss Dudin Brown in Queen's Gate-terrace, Miss Weston stated that over one thousand men and boys signed the pledge at the Homes last year. Since these were first opened four public-houses on the opposite side of the road have been obliged to close, and of three others which stood between the Homes and the dockyard gates, and were the cause of terrible evil, Miss Weston has been able to secure the leases of two, and hopes that almost immediately the last and worst, a large corner house, will be transferred to her. These encouraging results have been accomplished through the generosity of many friends, and the loyal help of the bluejackets themselves. Miss Weston will, as soon as possible, commence building operations with the view of adding these three houses to the present premises, which are greatly overcrowded, hoping that as the accommodation increases more men will be brought under the Christian influence of the Homes. Canon Fleming, who presided, in speaking with admiration of Miss Weston's work, said he had himself seen 1000 sailors gathered at the Home one Saturday evening last autumn.

Letters to the Editor.

"LEAVENED BREAD."

Sir,—In reply to a letter which appeared under the title of "Leavened Bread" in your issue of last week, I beg to say that the views of the Sunday-school Union "Lesson Notes" with regard to "evolution" have not been quite fairly stated. Your correspondent "P." quotes only part of a passage from the "Notes," leaving out the explanatory sentences. The entire passage is as follows:—

"Nor is the theory of evolution (except in its extreme form) opposed to that of creation. The extreme form of the evolution theory is, however, only the creature of an hypothesis which is directly contrary to scientific experiment. No experiment has ever yet shown us (1) Life evolved from no life; (2) mind evolved from no mind; (3) moral nature evolved from non-moral nature. Evolution, in a modified form, may be readily accepted as one of the laws or methods by which the great Creator works. So far as evolution is true and provable, there is no more in it than has for ages been implied in the word 'event,' from evenio=I come out of, i.e., everything is connected with something that preceded. Nothing stands alone. But He who thus connects all things together, and who sees the end from the beginning, is God (Heb. iii. 4)."

It will easily be seen that this differs very considerably from "P.'s" partial quotation. I am, however, very far from approving of the "Lesson Notes," and can heartily agree with your correspondent as to the dangerous character of the lesson on Gen. iii., in which the Scriptural account of the fall of man is treated as a symbolical narrative rather than as actual history.—Yours truly, A Sunday-school Teacher.

VIVISECTION.

Dear Sir,—Allow me to call attention to the steady and rapid onward march of vivisection in this country. Strenuous efforts are at the present time being make to apply the studentship left by the late Mr. J. Lucas Walker to vivisectional purposes at Cambridge, and unless there be a determined opposition these efforts are likely to be successful.

It is now boldly proposed by the scientists to render illustrious the year of the Queen's jubilee by devoting a large sum of money left by the late Sir Erasmus Wilson to the foundation of a great Physiological Institute in London, which would vie with those of Berlin, Paris, and Leipsic; "A foundation," says The Spectator, "which will in its effects much more than neutralise the Vivisection Act of 1876, since it will reconcile students from all parts of Her Majesty's dominions to horrors such as those which have hitherto been confined to Continental capitals."

It rests with the country to say whether it will or will not continue to tolerate the legislation of vivisection. It is owing to the indifference and supineness of the nation that vivisection has advanced thus far. It will always continue to advance until it is abolished by law.

Let us all feel our individual responsibility in this matter, and not merely hope that others will do so. We all have some influence.

Any who are desirous of knowing how they may help at this grave crisis, or who wish to have papers to circulate, are invited to apply to the Secretary of the Bristol and Clifton Anti-Vivisection Society, 15, Royal Promenade, Clifton.—Yours truly, Ellen Marriott.

Woodburn House, Cotham-park, Bristol.

SOLDIERS' INSTITUTE, SANDGATE.—We are requested to remove the prevalent impression that this excellent institution received an endowment through the death of Miss Papillon. The small sum left by her for its objects only met outstanding claims, and it is quite dependent on the help of friends for the maintenance of its good Christian work among the soldiers at Shorncliffe Camp.

It seems but the other day since Mr. William Noble was at Exeter Hall receiving the good-byes and good wishes of his numerous friends, before departing for America. Eighteen months, however, have passed, and during that time our friend has held aloft the Gospel Temperance banner through a great part of the United States, and in the leading cities of New Zealand and Australia. It must have been a gratification to the large company assembled in Exeter Hall last week, at the ninth birthday of the Blue Ribbon movement, to see that Mr. Noble had so well stood the strain of travel and of work. In his address he said he had come back to resume temperance work in this country, more than ever convinced that his mission was to wage the fight from the standpoint of moral suasion. He paid a very warm tribute to the earnest and self-denying efforts of temperance reformers in America, especially in connection with the Women's Temperance Union, though he hinted at the fact that the political element is, in his opinion, somewhat too prominent. Some touching reference was made to the closing scenes in Mr. J. B. Gough's life; and the dying message of the great orator, "Young men, keep your record clean," was pressed home.

Mr. W. Palmer, of Reading, who has been the mainstay of the Hoxton Hall work, presided, and spoke earnestly about the need for more sustained enthusiasm in temperance effort. Mr. Caine, M.P., effectively dilated on the enormities of British rule in imposing the deadly liquor traffic on the native populations in Egypt, India, and Africa. The most telling speech of the evening was that of Rev. Thomas Evans, of Victoria-park, who vindicated his Welsh nationality, in rousing the feeling of the meeting to a high pitch by eloquent and impassioned appeals.

OBITUARY.

MR. WM. JOHNSON.

THIS earnest temperance advocate, who died last week, had for thirty-five years fulfilled the duties of missionary to the Darlington Ladies' Temperance Society. His earliest experiences in the district were gained amongst the navvies engaged in the formation of the railway, and he was always amongst the foremost in all kinds of philanthropic work, for many years making it his continual endeavour to remonstrate with and counsel those who, through drink, got into the hands of the police. The deceased was a member of the Society of Friends.

TWO CONGO MISSIONARIES.

I am very sorry to have to report the death, at this station, of Rev. S. J. White. He joined the Livingstone Inland Mission in 1881, and returned only about seven months ago, with Mrs. White, from furlough in England. He is the first of our band to be called away since our dear Brother Craven died in October, 1884. Mr. Probert, also of this Mission, has been compelled to return at present to England, owing to serious and continued sickness.

I hear also of the death of Mr. Grant Cameron, one of Bishop Taylor's Mission, at Kimpoko, about a month ago. Work goes on very cheeringly. A revival has begun at San Salvador, a station of the Baptist Missionary Society; there are 120 converts. Pray for us.—Yours, &c.,

Palabala Station, Jos. Clarke.
L. I. Mission, Congo Free State, Jan. 13.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER AND PRAISE.—Prayer for blessing on the following missions:—Dr. H. G. Guinness, at Devizes, March 6 to 14; Special Missions to Young Men, at Y.M.C.A., Hammersmith, Feb. 20 to 26, and at 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., to Feb. 19; for a blessing on the labours of the Irish Church Missions to Roman Catholics.——For blessing on a Young Men's Meeting on Lord's Day evenings, in Dublin.——For blessing on services at Weston, near Bath, by Mr. Opie Rodway, Feb. 17 to 20.

Praise for much blessing at Seaton and Beer, Devon, at Mr. Opie Rodway's services during the last ten days.

POOR CHILDREN'S AID SOCIETY.

A working Committee was formed at a meeting recently held at Exeter Hall for the purpose of carrying on the work of this new Society until such time as it may be possible to hold a public meeting to establish the Society on a permanent basis. The work undertaken will comprise the feeding of little ones who are found to be in a state of semi-starvation, the clothing of those frequenting schools, or otherwise, in a ragged and exposed state, and the establishing of crèches in various parts of London where the need is most pressing for the tending of infants during the absence of their parents and elder sisters. The committee will proceed to deal with such funds as may be intrusted to them at once in the alleviating of misery, such as described in the recent articles in The Globe.

Care will be taken that only needy and deserving cases are assisted, and the "pauperisation" of parents avoided by the making of careful inquiries, and no money will, in any case, be paid to parents for the relief of their children. The hon. treasurer is Sir Walter Farquhar, 18, St. James's-street, S.W. All communications respecting the Society should be addressed to the hon. secretary (pro tem.), Mr. A. S. Krausse, 367, Strand, W.C.

THE EVANGELISTIC MISSION.

God has abundantly blessed the efforts of the Evangelistic Mission in the Hammersmith district. The work was commenced in a small room at 130, King-street, but last summer it assumed such dimensions that larger premises became necessary. Accordingly, Mr. C. Russell Hurditch secured one of the lower rooms of the West Kensington Hall, capable of seating over three hundred. The services are well attended by the middle-class population, who are attracted by the plain, simple, and clear manner in which the Gospel of Christ is presented. The Sunday afternoon and evening services have lately drawn so many that Mr. Hurditch has been obliged to engage the upper concert room of the building. Dr. Popham (a retired physician of Nottingham), a genial, happy old man, who must be on the borders of threescore years, acts as honorary superintendent, and consecrates his whole energies to the work.

On the evening of Thursday last a social meeting was held, which was attended by between four and five hundred people. After a social tea, Mr. Hurditch, who presided, acknowledged the great goodness of God in having blessed in such a large degree the work of the Mission in that locality. Dr. Popham, in making a statement as to the services, remarked that he had great faith in the ladies as labourers in Christ's vineyard. He found them most warm supporters of the work, and hoped many more would come forward and give their help.

Mr. Robert Paton laid great stress on the necessity and importance of presenting a clear Gospel. A few stimulating words were subsequently spoken by Mr. J. L. Stanley, general secretary of the Evangelistic Mission, and Mr. Samuel Angel.

DUBLIN PROTESTANT DEAF AND DUMB ASSOCIATION.—About fifty deaf mutes were present at a soirée recently given by this Association in the hall of the Metropolitan Buildings, Lower Abbey-street. After tea, grace having been said in the finger and sign language, a presentation was made to Mr. Maurice F. G. Hewson, missionary of the deaf-mute congregation, on behalf of those to whom he has ministered for twenty years. The address was read in the finger and sign language, and interpreted to the hearing audience. Mr. Hewson, in reply, expressed his gratitude, and the thankfulness he felt in having been enabled to join them in Divine worship on Sundays, "using the only language we understand in common to convey our prayers to the throne of grace, and reading together in silent language the blessed message of salvation, which God has been pleased to clearly convey to us by his blessed Word." The evening's entertainment, which was closed with an exhibition of dissolving views, was greatly enjoyed.

REVIVAL AT RAMSGATE.

A very gracious work has been in progress a Ramsgate during the mission conducted by Mr Spencer Walton in connection with the Y.M.C.A and Y.W.C.A. Few of us in this pleasant seasid town can remember so great an awakening, both o the Lord's people and also of the careless, since, perhaps, the revival in our town extending over several months in 1859.

From the first the afternoon Bible-readings were largely attended, and on the last day the numbers were so large as to overflow the Christ Church Parish Hall, in which the afternoon gathering was held.

The attendances at the evening meetings held in St. George's Hall from the first were good, but increased till every available space in the hall was packed, and large numbers of earnest Christians retired to the Y.M.C.A. room or the Congregational school-room to pray, their places being instantly taken by those who were waiting outside the building. Much blessing attended the after-meetings, which were conducted free from all excitement. One or two instances of blessing received are worthy of remark, one man having walked nine miles to attend the meeting, and another, a waiter in an hotel, during the three or four hours he was off duty, walked a distance of eight miles.

On the afternoon of each Sunday meetings were held for men only. The hall was filled, and the results were most encouraging, Mr. Spencer Walton's manly and thrilling appeals making a great impression on all present. The praise-meeting, which was held in the Wesleyan Chapel, was filled in every part, and the scene was remarkably impressive, when first those who had professed to have found peace stood up, including persons well known in the town, of all classes, of both sexes, followed by a large number who desired to testify to the benefit derived from the Bible-readings.

Already thirty-five new members have joined the Y.M.C.A. here. One feature which has characterised this mission is the prayerfulness and unanimity and perfect harmony of earnest Christians of all denominations. It has also proved the reality of the results of a smaller mission held by the Y.M.C.A. in November, 1885.—Yours faithfully, Jenkin C. Haynes, Hon. Sec.

Y.M.C.A., Ramsgate.

BIBLE AND FRUIT MISSION, NEW YORK.—This charity has for ten years been sending its missionaries to the bedsides of the sick and dying, giving personal sympathy and effort, distributing papers, books, fruits, and delicacies. Prisons and hospitals are also visited, and adjoining a coffee-house which for five years has been a power for good, is a lodging-house, with accommodation for 160 persons, where numbers have found a refuge from temptation and an opportunity for reform. In addition there is a broom factory, where twenty men are engaged in an honourable life; and other interesting and important fields of work are occupied by this singularly beneficent society, so wise and wide in its field of operations.

DEACON ABRAHAM.—Sir,—We shall be glad to hear from all those who, feeling an interest in the work carried on in Ooroomiah by our friend Deacon Abraham, would like to join a committee in order to render him help in supporting his orphanages and mission work. The paragraph in yours of January 27 shows how deep are his needs. Last year we were able to send him over one hundred pounds as the result of our sale of work, and we are hoping to hold another sale next August. It was our privilege to receive Deacon Abraham as our guest for about a month, when he was last in England, and we shall be pleased to give information about him and his work.

Yours faithfully, Henry Tasker.

ALBERT YOUTHS' CHRISTIAN INSTITUTE.—This Institute for working lads was commenced last year by a few Christian men who seek to lead its members to a saving knowledge of the Lord Jesus. It is open every evening, and at the close a prayer-meeting is held. There are Bible-class and Gospel service on the Lord's-day, and for active workers a Tract Band has been formed. Several of the lads are now bright, useful disciples in the Lord's service. Educational classes are held during the winter, and various athletic amusements are also provided. The increase of members has necessitated an enlargement of premises. The Institute is in Jenkins'-yard, Eagle-street, Holborn: and communications should be addressed, Mr. Robert Cadogan, 66, High Holborn.

A CHOICE GIFT-BOOK FOR A YOUNG LADY.

In Cloth Extra, price 2s. 6d. (or with Gilt Edges, 3s.).

Nineteen Beautiful Years.

RECORDS OF THE LIFE OF A BELOVED SISTER.

By Frances E. Willard.

President of the "Women's National Christian Temperance Union of America."

With Introduction by BISHOP FOSTER; and Prefatory Note by the Poet, J. G. WHITTIER.

SOME EXTRACTS FROM THE MANY APPRECIATIVE REVIEWS.

"We cordially endorse the opinion expressed by the poet Whittier, who says, 'It is a charming piece of biography.' We have no doubt it will find many sympathetic readers."—Temperance Record, Dec. 9.

"For elder girls Nineteen Beautiful Years, by Frances E. Willard, should be very helpful and stimulating. It is an affectionate record of the singularly beautiful life of the authoress's sister, Miss Mary Willard."—Christian World, Dec. 16.

"Mary Willard, the subject of this biography, was as gifted as she was good. The delineation of her character and the portrayal of her life teach a beautiful lesson, and so invest with world-wide interest a book which, at first sight, might seem interesting alone to the friends of the heroine. A capital gift-book for a young lady."

The Bookseller, Dec. 16.

"It is less a record of action than of the yearning after a higher life, and striving to its attainment. The beauty of the life is written in the face of a portrait which accompanies the memoir."—Church of England Sunday-school Magazine, Jan., 1887.

"A book which is introduced by a commendatory note from the pen of the venerable Whittier is sure to make for itself many friends; and its merits are such that it amply deserves them."

Baptist Magazine, Jan. 1887.

"A most interesting biography and memoir of a girl's life. Its details are charmingly written by her sister, Frances E. Willard. The exquisite portrait, and the details of the pure life of a girl who lived but nineteen years, make us hope that the book will find its way into numberless households. It cannot fail to inspire girls and women with a desire to follow in the steps of such a character. It is not a dull, goody-book of preachments; but teems with close observations and lively perceptions of the false, the true, and the noble in life. A better, purer, present to girls and young women cannot be found."

Ladies' Treasury, Jan. 1887.

"In this memorial volume, Miss Willard tells the story of her sister's life—a life that deeply touched and moulded hers; and to which the world owes much more than at first sight might appear. The name of Frances E. Willard is well known to the world in connection with the Temperance movement; and it is quite evident that the elder sister owes much to the influence of the younger one, whose brief but beautiful life is here recorded. The poet Whittier writes a prefatory note; and Bishop Foster writes an introduction. Neither of these are needed to make those who read the story itself feel thankful to Miss Willard for this volume. . . . We very heartily commend it to all who wish to lead noble lives. If nobility is simple goodness, then a truly noble life is here presented to the world."—Irish Congregational Magazine, Jan. 1887.

"A pathetic sketch of a young American girl's life."—The Graphic, Dec. 25.

"'Nineteen Beautiful Years' is most touching and interesting; so thoroughly natural and unconventional was her life and the expression of her thoughts. It is good to see how, through all the different modes of thought and teaching, and many mistakes perhaps all round, God draws hearts to rest in Him, and trains characters to serve Him."

Home Friend, Jan. 1887.

"The title of the book seems aptly chosen, it being a record of the life of a young lady possessing rare natural talents; and distinguished by the spirit of piety. It is largely composed of extracts from her own diary, which show better than any observer can do the workings of the inner life of the soul. The beauty of holiness is seen throughout."

Footsteps of Truth, Jan. 1887.

"The young girl whose short life is here portrayed by a sisterly hand was a charming character, and exemplified the graces of a Christian experience. The pages of her diary are a revelation of the writer's bright heart and keen observation of her surroundings; and the portrait and pictures are capital. A delightful biography."

The Christian Commonwealth, Dec. 30, 1886.

"A book that may be safely put into a young lady's hands, with the assured confidence that it will serve to strengthen and deepen all influences for good."—The Christian, Dec. 16.

"Miss Willard here traces, with a hand as skilful as the heart that guides it is loving, the life of her beloved sister Mary. It is an American biography, but will be read here with as much avidity, and will excite as intense admiration as if it were English. . . . Worthy of being selected as a choice gift-book to young ladies."

Methodist New Connexion Magazine, Jan. 1887.

"Embalms the memory of a young American lady, who passed from this life after a brief term of less than twenty years. Such a biography might appear unlikely to contain many points of interest; but Miss Willard's tender spirituelle narrative is the history of a soul rarely beautiful, unselfish, and sincere. The passages quoted from Mary E. Willard's school-girl journal are almost unique in their unaffected yet often high-reaching thought. Bishop Foster, in his introduction to this book, writes of it as the most entrancing of all stories—the story of the genesis and growth of a redeemed soul. We should like to place this book in the hands of all the girls we know."

Literary World, Dec. 31.

"A choice gift for a young lady."

Word and Work, Dec. 16.

"This is a charming volume by Frances E. Willard, who is so widely known and honoured for her work of Christian philanthropy. The book is the tender and loving record of the author's sister, Mary E. Willard, whose existence was sanctified by fervent religion, and graced by true womanly dignity. Every page contains sweet thoughts culled from this young girl's diary; with reference to which Miss Willard expresses the hope that 'many a bright-eyed youth and maiden may rise from its perusal with braver hearts to do that which is right; with firmer faith in the unseen powers that work for those who seek the truth; and with a confirmed resolve to be more gentle and helpful, more diligent to win from life its truest joys.'"

CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY.

RESCUE ALL-NIGHT WORK.

This is the third year that we have opened for a Night Shelter our Mission Hall, Thrawl-street, Spitalfields, for destitute and homeless men; with an average picked up from the streets of from 100 to 150 each night, when open. The men were given a good breakfast, and a religious service held in the morning, when they have been faithfully dealt with. Work has been secured for some, and a great deal of other help given in deserving cases.

Besides this, lodgings for destitute women and children. Bread and tea tickets are given to several every week, to meet the terrible distress of this severe season.

To sustain this heavy work, besides the general expenses, help is urgently needed, and asked for. Donations in money or articles suitable for relief, will be gratefully received by the Secretary, as under. The Editor of THE CHRISTIAN will also receive donations.

MEDICAL PRAYER UNION.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY BRANCH.

ON Sunday afternoon, January 30, the inaugural meeting of the Cambridge University branch of the Medical Prayer Union was held in the Alexandra Hall, Cambridge. Professor A. Macalister took the chair, and, after prayer and a brief address, introduced Dr. Thorne Thorne, who spoke on "The power of Christ, necessary for true success in medical practice." It was urged by the speaker that real success could only be attained by being true followers of Christ, and by imitating the example of the Great Physician, who ever made the healing of the body subservient to the salvation of the soul. Without Christ, a physician must necessarily fail to attain true success; for his inability to point men to Christ, and this, at times when no other earthly guide might be available, would be to fall short of the highest mission delegated to man. These principles were enforced by practical examples in the experience of men of note.

In addition to the Professors who gave their support to the object of the meeting, about a hundred medical undergraduates were present.

Y.W.C.A., KENSAL TOWN.—This Institute at 65, Kensal-road, North Kensington, close to the Westbourne Park Station of the G.W. Railway, is especially useful for young women coming from the country, and as a home for servants out of place. Reading and class-rooms are open every evening, and many meetings are held for the benefit of the members. The matron is always willing to welcome strangers at the station if notice of their arrival be sent in time. The co-operation of ladies is invited in bringing the institute to the notice of girls in whom they are interested.

THEATRICAL EMPLOYEES.—Last week Mr. Wm. Forbes, of 71, Windsor-road, Holloway, entertained about one hundred of "the ladies of the ballet, chorus ladies and dressers" at tea in Waterloo-road Chapel schoolroom. Mr. H. M. Bompas, Q.C., said that as his hearers were especially connected with what was unreal and "make-believe," it was the more essential for them to make a certainty of the realities of eternity. Mrs. Maynard, of Wimbledon, followed with an impressive address, which moved many to tears. As each guest left she received a nosegay with a text attached, the gifts of the Bible Flower Mission. Mr. Forbes' work amongst theatrical employées, though informal in character, has been blessed to many.

RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.—A meeting on behalf of this useful Society was held last week at the schoolroom, High-street, Marylebone, under the presidency of Sir John Kennaway, M.P., who stated that the principles of the movement were those contained in the opening hymn, "Rescue the perishing." Ragged schools have done a great deal in the past, and they are doing a great deal now, which neither the State nor the School Board can accomplish, in humanising, civilising, feeding, and clothing thousands of poor children in our midst. He wished the Society every blessing and continued success in the shape of additional support and personal help. Mr. John Kirk and others urged the claims of the Union, whose offices are at Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

TEMPERANCE IN BELFAST.—The Association formed thirteen years ago by the women of Belfast has done noble temperance work, and at a public meeting held recently again took up a bold stand. "Through such influences as were now being brought to bear it was hoped that by and by every Christian household would also be a total abstinence household," said one of the ladies. And it is worth mentioning that all the members agree that intoxicating drinks shall be altogether banished from their homes. If they dealt with the drink curse as the Israelites did with the national sin of idolatry, it would soon disappear from the land. The society originated in the combination of women who felt the weight of this curse, and who said, "Let us strengthen one another's faith by praying together; let us consult together as to what it is best to do." But little did those first members dream how much of active service lay before them. The various speakers referred with thankfulness to the fact that their own Mayor, as well as many others, in their public capacity had not been ashamed to avow their

Y.M.C.A. DOINGS.

Dublin.—Soup and bread have been given to upwards of six hundred men, women, and children at the Christian Union-buildings, Dublin.

Brooklyn.—The report presented at the thirty-third anniversary of this Association showed that the work is in a most cheering condition, having received a marked impetus in all departments since the occupation of the new building. Rev. Dr. John Hall, of New York, in an address on "Moral Risks and Insurance against them," found a fitting theme for such an audience.

Inverness, N.B.—The very flourishing condition of this Association was the subject of congratulation at the twenty-eighth annual meeting recently held. There are now 120 members, and both fellowship meeting and Bible-class secure good attendances. A tract known as the "Monthly Visitor" is published, and this has a large circulation, the staff of distributors numbering 38. The Shore-street Mission, conducted in connection with the Association, is doing good work; the meetings on Sundays and week-days are well attended, and the Band of Hope has a membership of one hundred.

New York.—At the thirty-fourth annual meeting of this Association it was stated that the work is carried on from nine points in the city, that the membership last year was 7728, and the total attendance in the different rooms and meetings reached 762,200. The occasion was marked by the reading of a letter from Dr. Howard Crosby, one of the founders of the Association in 1852, who said he had always felt greatly indebted to it for the experience and happiness derived from working with and for it. The true idea of the work and results of the Association in leading young men into paths of usefulness and Christian activity was well expressed in other communications to the Secretary. Dr. A. E. Kittridge, in his address, said the Association was happy in having gained the goodwill of the churches, describing it also as "one of the strongest arms, and most productive branches, of God's Israel."

CONTEMPORARY OPINION.

IF a poor rough assaults a woman who is not his wife, in order to rob her of half-a-crown, he is liable to five years' penal servitude and a flogging with the cat-o'-nine-tails. But when Mr. Albert Dixon Hewitson, stockbroker, was convicted at Macclesfield of having violently flogged his wife in order to compel her to give up to him £2000 left her by her father under the Married Women's Property Act, he was only sent to gaol for two months. So there is one law for the rich and another for the poor, and one law for the wife and another for the woman who is assaulted by a man unattached.—Pall Mall Gazette.

A recent incidental statement made by an authority whose opportunity of observation leaves no doubt as to its truthfulness, discloses the fact that the practice of smoking among American ladies is becoming more and more general. The observer, who is a lady of the highest standing in New York, says:—"More American women smoke cigarettes, and often cigars, than the world wots of. Only a few mornings ago I sat in the boudoir of one of the best-known women in New York society, a lady whose name is a synonym for everything that is womanly and refined to the outside world, while she smoked cigarette after cigarette with the utmost placidity. During the morning three other ladies dropped in, and two of them also produced dainty cigarette-cases, and smoked with entire composure, ejecting the curls of smoke into rings above their heads as gracefully and perfectly as the most expert smoker among men could do. I know myself of scores of our best New York, Boston, and Philadelphia ladies, all my personal friends, who indulge in smoking, and whose names, if given to the public, would cause astonishment." If the custom of smoking among American ladies is becoming prevalent, it is one that cannot be otherwise than deeply deplored.—Brooklyn Magazine.

The Pall Mall Gazette has frequently undertaken to lecture other newspapers on their faults and failings. One of its favourite doctrines is that the Press has a great and noble mission, and that any journal which fails to realise this, and consequently misuses its power for ignoble ends, is unworthy of its high calling. All of which is sound doctrine. But even The Pall Mall Gazette seems to find it easier to preach than to practise; anyhow, it often falls below the ideal which it holds before the eyes of others. On Friday week it published an article on Allsopp's brewery, which, if it had any purpose at all, was intended to throw a glamour over the beer trade, and thus make it more popular than it is. We fail to see anything worthy or noble in such an object as that. The next day, our contemporary had an article on the Alhambra, which is a huge drinking establishment as well as a music hall, and we have no doubt that the effect of this article was to send to the Alhambra many people who would not otherwise have gone there. No doubt The Pall Mall Gazette will say that these subjects were at the time attracting much public attention, and that its readers were interested in what was said about them. But then the very same plea might be urged by other journals when they publish matter which exposes them to the fury of the oracle of

The Birmingham Coffee-house Company has just declared a dividend of 10 per cent.

Lady Hope is suffering from over work, and has had to cancel most of her engagements.

During the past year over 181,000 visits have been paid by sailors to the rooms of the Glasgow Seamen's Friends' Society.

The Times of Morocco, in a recent article, commented strongly on the evils which follow "the white man's foot and bottle."

Henceforth employés on the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad (U.S.) must not use intoxicants of any kind while on duty.

There has been a very cheering increase of late in the number of abstinence pledges in connection with temperance work at Devonport.

A temperance fête, in connection with the Manchester Jubilee Exhibition, is to be held in July. On the day fixed no intoxicants will be sold on the premises.

Dundee Good Templars have memorialised Government for an inquiry into the local licensing system, and the canvassing of magistrates for votes for licences.

Professor Price, the American coloured orator, has had a great reception in New York, where he has been advocating temperance work amongst the free blacks.

The Voice fears that unless the utmost vigilance be used, the trial of the murderers of Haddock, "the temperance martyr," may not be in the interests of justice.

The postal authorities do not allow anyone who lives in a public-house or beer-house to be a letter-carrier. We wish they were as strict in divorcing sub-post-offices from drink-shops.

The Liverpool Ladies Temperance Association is doing a great work. During the year 4611 visits were paid, a large number of meetings held, and many inebriates claimed.

Lady Verney, in a recent article on "Rural Life in Russia," says the only interest the Russian peasant has is "to squeeze just enough out of his plot of ground to live upon, and to get drunk."

The second reading of the Sunday Closing Bill (England), introduced by Mr. Stevenson, is fixed for February 23. All in its favour should at once write to their members, pressing its support.

A saloon-keeper in Philadelphia, who had been in the business twenty-four years, recently stated that during that time he had not been to church once. Saloon-keeping and religion, he said, were incompatible.

Dr. B. W. Richardson, at a meeting in St. Pancras, last week, expressed his regret that there appeared to be at present a sort of lull in temperance progress, and a truce between total abstainers and those who merely advocated moderation.

In a recent article in The Daily News, Mr. G. R. Sims points out how much preferable are Board and other school-rooms to public-houses for the holding of friendly society and club meetings, and insists upon the need of reform in regard to this matter.

Mrs. Eynon, travelling secretary of the British Women's Temperance Association, has been holding a series of meetings at Sutton-in-Ashfield, Mansfield, Pleasley, and Nottingham. Grantham will be visited this week. Mrs. Eynon's address is 16, Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, E.C.

The new Allsopp Company puts forward as an attraction to shareholders, seldom seen in the prospectuses of such concerns, this, amongst others, as one of its objects: "To subscribe to or otherwise aid benevolent, religious, scientific, educational, national, or other institutions." The capital required (£2,200,000) has, it is said, been subscribed about thirty times over.

DR. JOSEPH PARKER has been visiting Edinburgh, commencing his work at a meeting of the Students' Missionary Society connected with the Free Church College. He everywhere met with an enthusiastic reception.

EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.—The tenth annual report of the Irish branch shows steady progress during the past year. The secretary (Rev. David Mullan) and deputation had visited over fifty cities and towns in Ireland; and the meetings held were as a rule well attended.

SUNDAY AND THE COUNTRY POSTMEN.—Dr. Gavin B. Clark, M.P., has given notice of the following motion:—"That, in the opinion of this House, it is desirable that, on and after Sunday, June 26 next, the Sunday delivery of letters, &c., should cease through the United Kingdom, except in those districts where, after the date named, the receivers of two-thirds of the correspondence of the district petition the Postmaster-General for a Sunday delivery." Should this resolution be affirmed by the Commons, and put into effect by the Government, England will have secured one noble commemoration of our Queen's Jubilee. An army of 20,000 men will find needful Sunday repose; and a noble protest will be made for the observance of the Day of Rest. Dr. Gritton, of the Lord's Day Observance Society, requests our readers to use their influence with members of Parliament in its favour.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, FEB. 20.—PSALM XV.

"The preceding Psalm distinguished 'the generation of the righteous' from the mass of universal corruption, and closed with a longing for the salvation out of Zion. Psalm xv. answers the question, who belongs to this 'generation of the righteous,' and whom shall the future salvation avail?"—Delitzsch.

1.—Who shall abide in thy tabernacle?—"The Hebrew word for 'abide' never signifies to dwell in general, but always specially to dwell as a guest and sojourner. The expression is to be primarily explained from the image of a rich and powerful man who hospitably receives a poor stranger into his tent, an image which is more distinctly brought out in Psalm xxvii. 5. But the substance of the figure stands in this, that our dwelling with God is only after the manner of guests, that we are not born and rightful inmates of his house, but have become so merely through grace. The mention of the holy hill, by which nothing but Zion can be understood, shows that the tabernacle of God is not the old Mosaic tabernacle which was then standing without the ark of the covenant on Gibeon (1 Chron. xvi. 39; 2 Chron. i. 3—5), but the tent which David had prepared for the ark on Zion (2 Sam. vi. 17; 1 Chron. xv. 1, xvi. 1; 2 Chron. i. 4). Nowhere, indeed, have the Psalms anything to do with that old tabernacle at Gibeon, that shell without a kernel, but always where they speak of the sanctuary that upon Zion is referred to."—Hengstenberg.

2.—He that walketh uprightly, &c.—From this to the end of the Psalm follow eleven characteristics of those who dwell with the Lord, the twelfth assertion concerning them being "he that doeth these things shall never be moved." It may be that the twelve features so described point to the Israel of God, twelve being the number of the tribes. It is not so much their title to dwell with God (which is the subject of Psalm xxiv.), as their character when so dwelling, that is here described.

5.—He putteth not out his money to usury.—The Hebrew is: "He giveth not his money in usury." The usury which was forbidden to Israel was giving money to the poor, and then exacting interest from them for its use. "Such lending ought only to be a work of brotherly love. With the loans at interest of capitalists it has nothing to do."—Hengstenberg.

MONDAY, FEB. 21.—PSALM XVI.

Michtam of David.—Much diversity prevails as to the meaning of Michtam. The older Greek versions of Aquila and Symmachus, and the Chaldee, took it as a compound word, "humiliation of perfection," or "humiliation perfected," which suits admirably the subject of the Psalm, which is (Acts ii. 25) about Christ's death and resurrection. Others take it to mean "golden." Hengstenberg prefers "a secret," meaning a Psalm with a deep import.

2.—My goodness extendeth not to Thee.—The word for "goodness" means good in the sense of prosperity, happiness. R.V. therefore gives the sense more clearly, "I have no good beyond Thee." Or, "I have no good besides Thee."—Delitzsch.

3.—To the saints that are in the earth.—This is best taken as a continuation of the Psalmist's address, which in ver. 2 is directed to Jehovah, and in this verse to the saints on earth, to whom (or of whom) He says, "These are the excellent, in whom is all my delight."—Delitzsch and R.V.

4.—That hasten after another God.—R.V. is better, "that exchange (the Lord) for another (god)." Their drink offerings of blood will I not offer, nor take up their names into my lips.—Surely this is the language of the great High Priest, anticipating his service in the Upper Sanctuary.

5.—The Lord is the portion of mine inheritance.—"This refers us back to Num. xviii. 20, where Aaron (as the Levites generally) is declared to have no inheritance or portion in the land."—Kay. And of my cup.—Most significant is the reference this suggests to John xviii. 11: "The cup which my Father hath given Me, shall I not drink it?"

10.—Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell.—Kay's rendering is more accurate: "Thou wilt not abandon my soul to Hades." So R.V., but using the Hebrew "Sheol."

TUESDAY, FEB. 22.—PSALM XVII.

Another Messianic Psalm, like the last anticipating resurrection (see verse 15), which is the subject of the next. It may be considered as Messiah's plea for justice from the hands of the Judge, while submitting himself to the sword of justice as sin-bearer.

3.—Thou hast proved my heart…and shalt find nothing.—Compare John xiv. 30, "The prince of this world cometh, and hath nothing in Me."

4.—By the word of thy lips I have kept me from the paths of the destroyer.—See this illustrated in Matt. iv. 1—11.

7.—Show thy marvellous lovingkindness.—This verse is thus rendered in a recent translation: "Make passing great thy kindnesses, O Saviour of those that flee for refuge from them that assail, by thy right hand."—T. K. Cheyne.

13.—Deliver my soul from the wicked which is thy sword.—The word for wicked is singular (not plural), and if rendered "the wicked one," light is thrown upon "which is thy sword." It thus refers to "him that had the power of death, that is the devil" (Heb. ii. 14).

14.—From men which are thy hand, O Lord.—The wicked one having been spoken of as God's sword, the men by whom He works are called God's hand. A striking illustration of this occurs Acts iv. 27, "Herod, Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles, and the people of Israel, were gathered together, for to do whatsoever thy hand and thy counsel determined before to be done." They were thus God's hand in carrying out his counsel.

15.—I shall be satisfied, when I wake up, with thy likeness.—Thus the Spirit of Christ in David anticipates that resurrection from the dead, of which the next Psalm contains so striking a description.

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 23.—PSALM XVIII.

A magnificent description, in figurative language (which may possibly be based upon some event in David's life), of the working of God's "mighty power which He wrought in Christ when He raised Him from the dead." The enigmatical title of the Psalm favours this view, for we know of no one day when "the Lord delivered David from the hand of all his enemies, and from the hand of Saul." The deliverances from Saul were many, and at an early period of his life, whereas here it is the climax. But the Hebrew letters for the word Saul are the same as those for Sheol (the grave), which word occurs in ver. 5 in describing the deliverance from death (ver. 4, 5) which the Psalm celebrates.

1.—I will love Thee, O Lord, my strength.—The word "love" here means "to love from the inmost heart."—Hengstenberg. "To love with tender yearning and affection."—Kay.

2—The Lord is my rock, &c.—Seven titles, expressive of ground of confidence, are given to the Lord, the fourth or central one being expanded thus: "My God (is) my strength, in whom I will trust."

16.—He drew me out of many waters.—The Hebrew word for "drew out" is that from which the name "Moses" comes. Christ is the prophet "like unto" Moses.

20.—The Lord rewarded me according to my righteousness.—This, and the next four verses, can, strictly speaking, only apply to Christ.

27.—For Thou wilt save the afflicted people.—The connection between this and the next verse is very beautiful. The Saviour's glory is brought to light by the salvation of a poor and afflicted people. See Zeph. iii. 12.

44.—The strangers shall submit themselves.—Better as in margin: "Yield feigned obedience." So Delitzsch, Hengstenberg.

49.—This verse is quoted in Rom. xv. 9, as applying to Christ.

50.—His king…his anointed.—The two titles given to Christ in Ps. ii.

THURSDAY, FEB. 24.—PSALM XIX.

The last Psalm, descriptive of Christ's resurrection, is appropriately followed by one that foreshadows the going forth of God's revelation of Himself in his Word to the ends of the earth.

1.—The heavens declare the glory of God, &c.—The first six verses are occupied by a description of the glory of God, as revealed and continually set forth by the heavens, and especially by the sun going forth in his strength; but this is but the prelude to the next five verses—the centre of the Psalm—wherein is set forth God's more glorious manifestation of Himself in his Word (for "the law," as in Psalm i., evidently means the Book of the Law, or Holy Scripture). The influence of the sun in the natural world is thus a type of the influence of God's Word in the spiritual world, "converting," "making wise," "rejoicing the heart," "enlightening the eyes," "enduring for ever," "righteous altogether."

4.—Their line is gone out through all the earth.—The word for line is rendered by the old versions "sound," probably, as Kay suggests, from the word (like "chord") having a musical signification. St. Paul quotes this verse, Rom. x. 18, and applies it to the spread of the revelation of God in his Word (apparently through the Old Testament Scriptures) to the ends of the world.

5.—Which is as a bridegroom.—The sun and bridegroom are both figures used of Him who is the chief subject of God's revelation in his Word—Christ Jesus (Mal. iv, 2; John iii. 29).

12.—Who can understand his errors?—Inseparable from a knowledge of God as revealed in his Word, is a sense of our own sin and infirmity. But there is pardon for the guilt of sin (12), and "keeping back" from its power (13), in Him who is both "Strength and Redeemer."

FRIDAY, FEB. 25.—PSALM XX.

This and the next Psalm are closely connected. Under the figure of a king going forth to battle with the earnest prayers of his subjects for victory, is set forth Christ going to meet the great enemy. In the next, under the figure of a thanksgiving for the victory granted to the king, is set forth Christ triumphant, and the final extirpation of his enemies anticipated.

3.—Accept the burnt sacrifice.—The word for "accept" is literally "make fat," which Delitzsch explains thus: "May He find thy burnt-offering fat;" that is, may it be to Him for a sweet-smelling savour. See this prayer answered in Eph. v. 2: "Christ gave Himself for us an offering and a sacrifice to God for a sweet-smelling savour."

6.—Now know I that the Lord saveth his anointed.—The turning-point of the victory of Christ over his foes was his resurrection from the dead. To the Christian, this is the date from which he can say, "Now know I," &c.

9.—Save, Lord: let the king hear us," &c.—Delitzsch and others, following the LXX. and Vulgate render this: "O Lord, save the king, hear us when we call," as though part of the salvation granted to the king consisted in his people being heard and answered.

SATURDAY, FEB. 26.—PSALM XXI.

"The Targum and the Talmud understand this Psalm of the King Messiah. In this (as in the last) the people come before God with matters which concern the welfare of their king; in the former with their wishes and prayers, in the latter with their thanksgivings and hopes in the certainty of a victorious termination of the war."—Delitzsch.

4.—He asked life of thee, thou gavest it him.—"God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life" (1 John v. 11). Christ needed not life for Himself, for "in Him was life," but He asked it for his people, and He obtained it, "even length of days, for ever and ever."

5.—His glory is great in thy salvation.—How true are these words of Christ. See John xvii. 5.

6.—Thou hast made him most blessed.—The Hebrew is literally, "Thou hast set him for blessing." The word "blessing" is plural, and points to the richness of

Among the Churches.

* We shall be happy to receive from our readers brief items of news for this page, respecting Christian work carried on, or progress achieved, in connection with any evangelical church at home or abroad.*

CONGREGATIONAL.

The membership of Clifton Church, Peckham (Rev. H. J. Perkins, pastor), now numbers 402, and there are over 600 children in the Sunday-school.

The late Rev. E. P. Prust left £200 to the Northamptonshire Congregational County Mission. and £500 each to the Local Infirmary and Auxiliary Bible Society.

Rev. Joseph Davies, of Buckley, has been set apart for evangelistic work in connection with the English Union for North Wales, and held his first mission at Mostyn.

During the twelve years' ministry of Rev. J. K. Nuttall, at Grange Church, Sunderland, 565 members have been admitted; the church roll has increased from 231 to 470.

A few Sundays ago eight Chinamen were admitted to the membership of the Central Congregational Church, Brooklyn. The churches in Brooklyn have paid a good deal of attention to the Chinese.

Rev. W. J. Temple commenced his ministry at West Ferry-road, Millwall, in April, 1882, with very small congregations. Since then, over one hundred and ten have been received into communion, and the present congregations quite fill the building. A working men's sick benefit club is in active operation. Weekly free meals are being given to outcasts and unemployed.

The Women's Board of Missions (Congregational) in America supports 96 American missionaries, 115 native Bible-readers, 28 boarding-schools for girls, and, wholly or in part, 217 village schools. At the nineteenth annual meeting, details were given of the work in Mexico, China, Ceylon, Africa, Turkey, Spain, and elsewhere. The Society goes to work in a very practical manner, its missionaries educating girls, teaching simple household arts to women, training native nurses, preparing Bible-readers, and losing no opportunity of imparting Gospel instruction.

BAPTIST.

Special evangelistic services have been held at Church-road, Teddington.

The required amount, £5000, for a church to be erected in the city of Mexico, has been guaranteed by the Baptists of America.

The Baptist gave with an article on the Metropolitan Tabernacle in last week's issue, a portrait of Mr. Spurgeon, which can scarcely be called a success.

The Congo Mission has established a station on the Upper River at Lukolela. The chief Mangaba has shown himself very friendly. Messrs. Briggs and Richards have charge of the station.

Messrs. Fullerton and Smith have commenced a month's mission at Nottingham Tabernacle, which was filled at each of the three services on Sunday. Several anxious ones were found at these first day's services.

A week's mission has been conducted at Westbourne Baptist Chapel, Bournemouth, by Rev. Mathias Lansdown, a neighbouring Congregational minister. Some professed faith in the Saviour, and believers were stimulated and refreshed.

During the nine years' pastorate of Rev. W. Williams at Upton Chapel, Lambeth-road, 666 members have been added to the church, 83 of these during last year, making a total now of 586. Two mission halls have been opened during the year, and a large amount of church work is being carried on with much energy.

At the Metropolitan Tabernacle prayer-meeting on Monday, last week, a feature of interest was some remarks from missionaries who have been working in Spain. Mr. Spurgeon preached twice on Sunday week; a working man present at the morning service observed that "the sermon was worth all the money in the Bank of England."

PRESBYTERIAN.

The Broadway Tabernacle, New York, is a power for good in the city and throughout the whole region round about.

Rev. W. S. Swanson, Moderator-elect of the English Synod, is doing his best to quicken missionary zeal throughout the congregations.

There is now a Presbytery at Alaska. One member actually travelled nineteen days in a canoe to be present, while another had to be six weeks from home.

At Ealing a new church was opened on Wednesday last week, sermons morning and evening being preached by Revs. Dr. Donald Fraser and Dr. Thain Davidson.

The Belfast Presbytery invited forty ministers from other churches to help in the great evangelistic effort just made in that town. Services were held in all the churches of the town each evening.

The congregational committee of Grange Free Church, Edinburgh, have decided to recommend the appointment of Rev. J. M. Sloan, Anderston Free Church, Glasgow, as colleague and successor to Rev. Dr. H. Bonar.

A great missionary meeting was held on the 9th inst. in connection with the Free Presbytery of Glasgow with gratifying success. The hall in Wellington-street, which holds 2000, was filled with an enthusiastic and sympathetic audience.

Special evangelistic services have been conducted at Trinity Hall, Battersea, the mission district of Trinity (Clapham Church, where there is an immense population of the industrial wage-earning classes, presenting a

The church at Cardiff intend building a mission hall.

The Evangelistic Committee of the English Presbyterian Church report that mission work is being carried on by a large proportion of the congregations.

The Glasgow Free Church Presbytery have agreed to conduct special evangelistic services in the east end of the city, beginning east of Buchanan-street.

Dr. Marshall Lang, of the Barony, says there are churches in the west-end of Glasgow which are a sort of club, with the rich all huddled together in them.

METHODIST.

An eight days' mission has been just held in Patrick-street Church, Cork.

A twelve days' mission just held in the Centenary Chapel, York, has been very successful.

Evangelistic services have been held during the past three weeks in Mount Tabor Chapel, Long Eaton.

Special Gospel services are reported from Barnsley, Ilkley, Kington (Herefordshire), Raunds, and Stapleford.

Between two and three hundred youths and men attend a Bible-class conducted by Mr. Kay at Wesley Chapel, York.

Very successful revival services have been held at Sandgate Primitive Methodist Chapel, by Rev. H. Pratt, of South Shields.

A Christian Workers' Association has been formed at Bethel-street, Burslem, for those "who are desirous of working to extend the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ."

Miss Mabel Parry has been conducting very successful evangelistic services at Newfield, in the Bishop Auckland Circuit. Nearly 200 persons have professed conversion, and the Church has been wonderfully quickened.

Rev. John Innocent, Chinese missionary, appeals for two additional clerical missionaries and a medical missionary to be sent to China as soon as possible. A lady teacher is also required to superintend a girls' industrial school, to be established at Tientsin.

The committee of Dr. Stephenson's Homes have just received an offer from a gentleman, of a large institution at Farnborough, near Aldershot, built for a reformatory, and accommodating eighty children, in every way suitable for a branch children's home. Another gentleman, a well-known Methodist layman, offers two or three seaside houses as a sanitarium for invalid children. A third, a minister, presents £1000 for the erection of a new house at Edgeworth, Bolton; whilst a fourth gentleman makes a liberal proposal with reference to the work of the Gordon Hall, East London.

EPISCOPAL.

Canon Nisbet, the rector of St. Giles, has started a series of special afternoon services in his church for men only.

Mission services have been held in all the churches of Hawarden Parish. Mr. and Mrs. Gladstone were present at several.

A ten days' mission has been conducted at Stratford-on-Avon. Six services were held in the parish church on the Sundays.

Special sermons on "Religion in Daily Life" are being preached by Rev. F. Cornish, in the Town Hall, Romney, on Sunday evenings.

An evangelistic service is conducted in St. Mark's Schoolroom, Battersea-rise, on Sunday evenings, in which Nonconformist brethren co-operate.

Rev. Mr. O'Rorke, rector of Feltwell, Brandren, Norfolk, lately presided at a service of sacred song held in the parish school-room for the benefit of the Wesleyan Chapel.

The Bishop of Manchester intends to start a "Bishop's Fund" for the support of evangelists and lay helpers, and also for establishing mission-rooms in large country districts.

Rev. C. Lloyd Engström, secretary of the Christian Evidence Society, has been appointed to the office of Boyle Lecturer at the Chapel Royal, Whitehall, for the present year.

An indignation meeting of the parishioners of St. John the Baptist's Church, Toxteth Park, Liverpool, has been held to "protest against Romish innovations of the vicar, and to take steps to remove the same."

The Socialist movement is, it seems, likely to strengthen the Church amongst the London masses. "I had no idea church was so pleasant," said one of these men on Sunday; "when I was a boy, it was always thought to be dull."

Canon Fleming having promised to lecture to the Young Men's Guild on Sunday, the 10th inst., in St. George's Presbyterian Church, Edinburgh, was urged by Bishop Dowden, of that city, not to do so. Sectarian bigotry is hard to kill.

An extension of the Sunday evening services for the people carried on in South London, under the presidency of the Bishop of Rochester, was inaugurated on Sunday evening last week with a devotional gathering at Sanger's Amphitheatre, Westminster-bridge-road.

The new House of Laymen of the Convocation of Canterbury bids fair to do useful service. A resolution has been carried, by 34 to 16, to repeal enactments which prevent a deacon engaging in any secular occupation. The motion was supported by influential laymen, and would give congregations the benefit of scores of men ready for such service. In the Lower House an admirable and comprehensive petition on the use of lay [illegible] presented by Canon Howell

SALVATION ARMY.

From "The War Cry."

A real soul-saving work has been commenced at Tyldesly.

At Stalybridge thirty souls sought salvation in fourteen days.

All the World is to be enlarged in March to thirty-six pages; price 2d.

Last week's War Cry had portraits of Mr. and Mrs. Booth-Clibborn, with sketches of their life work.

The mid-day meetings at 101, Queen Victoria-street, E.C, are going up in interest, number, and blessing.

Some indescribable meetings have been held in the Bradford I. district, and thirteen souls professed salvation in one week.

Last week's report of "Cellar, Gutter, and Garret" work tells of souls saved, homes changed, theatres visited, lodging-houses transformed, &c.

During the seven months Captain Charteris has been in command of Regent Hall Corps, five hundred souls have professed salvation, and one hundred soldiers have been added to the roll.

Colonel Clibborn tells how in France a rich banker's son was turned out of home penniless because he joined the Army. His father even refused to permit him to go to some neighbouring town and earn his living, and for a whole week he lived upon wild herbs gathered in a field.

Drunkards, dog-racers, Sabbath-breakers, liars, and gamblers have been saved at Howdon-le-Wear, in the Tees Division, while at Ferryhill the consumption of beer has been lowered one-half, so that the publicans have lowered the price one penny a quart to get the people to drink.

At the re-opening of the Bideford Corps the following, amongst other points, were insisted on: "Before we can accept any individual as a Salvationist he must be in possession of salvation, and be quite sure of it." "No person can be enrolled as a Salvationist without engaging to accept from the Captain thirteen cartridges every quarter, and returning one of these with a contribution every week, and no exception can be made to this, unless it be an individual who is really too poor to subscribe."

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

A Gospel Temperance Mission held in Cardiff, and conducted by Thomas Horrocks, of Darwen, has been very successful.

A friendly arrangement has existed for fourteen years between the London Missionary Society and the Foreign Missionary Association regarding work in Madagascar.

Isaac Sharp, who travelled round the world visiting missionaries at isolated stations, has attended meetings in London, Leeds, Sunderland, and Brighton. Alderman White, of Birmingham, has also been to Brighton, for Gospel and adult school work.

APPLICANTS FOR TRACTS.—Miss Norris, 15, Ford-street, Roman-road, North Bow; Miss C. Staniforth, Fernbank, Meersbrook-bank, Sheffield; Miss F. Birre, 23, Grovedale-road, Upper Holloway, N.; Mr. Medlicott, 4, Albert-terrace, Harringay-road, Tottenham, N.; Mrs. Ham, Wadebridge, Camelford, Cornwall; G. E. Pearce, Camelford, Cornwall; Miss Catlin, Hilary House, Axminster; Miss A. Jones, 36, Whitfield-road, Flashet-road, Upton Park, Essex; B. Smith, Sea View, Burwash, Sussex; R. Banton, Barrow-on-Trent, Derbyshire (children's tracts); C. Riddiford, Ellenbank, Broxburn, Linlithgowshire, N.B.; E. Bray, 27, Wigmore-street, W.; J. W. Maskell, Brecon; G. Ayling, Wisboro' Green Mission, near Billinghurst.

[As it is found that infidels and others send tracts to the persons whose names are inserted here, it is most important that all books and papers received should be carefully read before being given away.]

PASTOR ELIE VERNIER has been evangelising in the Charentes and several other places in France. The meetings were excellent, showing some fruit, with promise of much more.

JERUSALEM now counts 35,000 inhabitants, of whom 20,000 are Jews, 5600 Mohammedans, and about 7500 Christians. Of the latter 4600 are Greek Catholics, 2100 Roman Catholics, 850 Protestants, English and German, and 450 Armenians, Copts, &c.

CENTRAL AFRICA.—The growing of coffee on the Shiré Hills, Lake Nyassa, Central Africa, has proved a great success. From one plant, set out eight years ago, there were produced last year seventy bags of the finest coffee. It is thought that the culture and trade which are likely to proceed from this beginning will prove a great foe to the slave traffic.

SPAIN.—In 1869, on Palm Sunday, the first Protestant chapel was opened in Madrid. Now there are about sixty Protestant communities in Spain, and hardly a large town without a regularly organised church. The number of openly professed Protestants is 14,000, though there are from 26,000 to 30,000 who are thought to be Protestant at heart.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Samthorpe, Doncaster.—The mission services being conducted by Mrs. Horton and Miss Parker, evangelists, are signalised by much of the Holy Spirit's power. Large congregations gather each evening, and men and women are choosing to serve Christ.

Working Men and the Gospel.—A week of special services recently conducted by Rev. C. J. Whitmore in the men's dining hall at the goods station of the Midland Railway at St. Pancras, affords gratifying proof of the readiness of working-men to listen to the Gospel. The attendance increased, until on the three last evenings the hall was crowded; and this is all the more noticeable because no special inducement was held out for attendance.

Oxford University Men.—Rev. W. Hay Aitken has accepted an invitation from the Oxford Intercollegiate Workers' Union to conduct a Mission to University men from Saturday, February 26, to Monday, March 7. The services will be chiefly conducted in Mr. Chavasse's Church, St. Peter-le-Bailey. There will be a course of afternoon conferences on the spiritual life, whilst the evening sermons will be of an evangelistic character. There will also be addresses to men only on the Sunday afternoons. Many of our readers will take interest in this special effort, and will doubtless remember it in their prayers.

Bucks Evangelistic Mission.—After a week of united prayer at the beginning of the year in Aylesbury, special services were conducted by Mr. J. C. Rainey, from Devonshire. Night after night the congregations increased in numbers and interest, and the presence of the Lord was manifest in a remarkable manner. Prayer-meetings were held every day, and, as illustrating the awakened interest of the people, the Saturday evening prayer-meeting had to be held in the large hall. The meetings were continued some time after the fifteen days first announced. Special meetings are also being held in some of the villages around with evident tokens of blessing.

Kingstown, Co. Dublin.—Mr. Leonard Weaver, having concluded a very happy and successful mission at Merrion Hall, Dublin, in conjunction with Mr. W. Grove, came here to spend a few days with us again. The hearts of all the workers have been much cheered by the results of his visit. The Northumberland Rooms have been crowded each night, and souls won for Christ at each service. Those who have been thus blessed (a considerable number) have been invited to a praise meeting on Monday night, and it is intended to follow up this good work by special visiting and evangelistic effort. Mr. Weaver is now at Blackrock, and purposes visiting Bray next week.

Glenville, Glenagarey. S. A. MARTIN.

A Pastor's Review of thirty-five years' ministry, and of the way by which the Lord has led him and his flock during all that time, cannot fail to be of deep interest. Such a review has been addressed to the members of the South Cliff Congregational Church, Scarborough, by their pastor, Rev. Robert Balgarnie. Having been largely blessed in several evangelistic missions conducted in different parts of the country, he desires now to give up the regular ministry, the field which for thirty-five years he has cultivated, in order to devote himself, whilst health and strength continue, to this "higher work," the importance and need of which have come to him as a personal revelation. The retrospect is indeed full of encouragement, and the prospective duty is one to which Mr. Balgarnie feels himself called, that he may "discharge a long-standing debt by thus working for Christ as a mission preacher wherever He may appoint."

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.—The following arrangements are made in addition to those already mentioned:—Mr. Josiah Spiers, at St. George-the-Martyr Schools, Southwark, Feb. 28 to March 4. Mr. G. Banaster, at Bristol, Feb. 20 to 27. Mr. Martin J. Hall, at Chelsea, Feb. 22; Y.M.C.A., Finsbury-park, Feb. 26, 3 p.m.; Harvey-street, Hoxton, Feb. 27 to March 8.

CHURCH PAROCHIAL MISSION SOCIETY.—The following missions in connection with the Society are going on:—At St. Thomas's, Hyde, Rev. W. Hay Aitken; St. Mark's, Bromley, Rev. W. St. Hill Bourne; Bickley, Rev. R. Catterall; Parish Church, Bromley, Rev. Jos. Cullin; Bovingdon, Hemel Hempstead, Rev. F. W. Dodd; St. Mary's Kilburn, Rev. H. Armstrong Hall; St. John's, Walton, Liverpool, Rev. J. Gossett Tanner.

A BIBLE-WOMAN FOR SOUTHEND.—Many of your readers know this seaside town. Will they help me to supply it with a visiting Bible-woman, who will go from door to door reading, and speaking, and praying with the sick, aged, and all to whom opportunity offers.—H. W. CHILDS, Pastor of the Baptist Tabernacle.

WESTWARD HO!

200 Trained Lads (First Party for this year) will (D.V.) leave "Dr. Barnardo's Homes" for Canada on March 17.

It is hoped that at least 600 carefully-trained youngsters may be placed out in the Dominion at an aggregate cost of £5,100 during the present year; 622 Boys and Girls having been emigrated during 1886.

£8 10s. will defray the entire cost of Emigrating one Boy.

£51 will do the same for Six Boys; £102 for Twelve Boys; or £170 for Twenty Boys.

Who, by promising one or other of these amounts, will help to give some of these young fellows a start in life?
